I am in favor of the motion but I am also in favor of a definition of functions which would lead somewhat in a different direction from that indicated by Mr. Embree. We have been talking about democracy. I think that one of the concerns of this or any other similar gathering must be that there should come to pass, as a part of the expression of education and democracy, the democratic management and control of Negro education by Negroes. I have nothing to say that is necessary in defense of the history of Negro education and its administration up to this time. But I think we should be entirely mistaken if we assumed that education or any of the other concerns of Negro life are to go on in the future under the same sort of management. It was perfectly all right and could not be avoided in the eras that have passed to have hand-picked, paternalistic administrators in the Negro schools. But the new generation, to which many of us here do not belong, will have a different idea. The Negro people will insist that they be placed in positions of responsibility. Those who are working in this area must get the idea that they are working with Negroes, not for Negroes, and on a basis that does not imply even a beneficent paternalism as far as the Negro is concerned.

My interest in this motion is this: I do not believe that any commission appointed by this meeting or the Federal Council of Churches or the Phelps-Stokes Fund or any other foundation is worth its salt to accomplish the things that need to be done unless it somehow represents the voice and best thinking of the Negro people themselves in policies and leadership. I therefore recommend that:

> If such a commission as that suggested here tonight is developed, it will concern itself primarily with the setting up of some body on which will be adequately represented the Negro people.

It would seem to me that instead of looking toward the formation of such a commission under the auspices of the A. M. A. or any foundation, the proper step would be to formulate some sort of procedure by which there could be set up a representative organization where the voice and opinion of the Negro people will be reflected. We are at the place where the old policy must give way. Trustee boards in Negro schools have somehow got to reconcile themselves to the larger representation on those boards of people who will not only be sympathetic with the aspirations of the Negro people, but will actually represent them.

Mr. Cole.

There is one group of leaders in this country that is not very well represented here today. I speak of the public school educators, and particularly those who are immediately responsible for teaching children. However much we may improve Negro education, we can never expect to solve this problem of race until we re-educate our white students. There has been a strong change in the temper of the nation with reference to teaching inter-race relations in the public schools. The National Education Association will present a year book on inter-cultural education in San Francisco and some of us will participate in that discussion. Dr. Ruth Benedict has recently prepared a manual for the teachers of social sciences in the United States. Our Bureau for Inter-cultural Education is furnishing such a manual. The Education Policies Commission of the National Education Association recently asked for a memorandum on this subject. The public school people are definitely interested in this whole problem.

R. B. Eleazer, Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Atlanta.

This is the field in which the Southern Commission on Interracial Cooperation first began its work. Since then we have attempted to add suggestions for specific courses; but these, after all, reach only a limited number of students. However, courses dealing with race relations have been introduced in departments of history, literature, civics, sociology and education in the South. 750 college professors in 400 colleges have from time to time put into their courses study units calculated to make the students more intelligent and familiar and appreciative of the place of the Negro race in American society.

Of late we have been concentrating on an approach to the teachers colleges, realizing that unless we can get at the teachers who deal directly with the students, we have an almost impossible job on our hands to reach the children. We have on our list of cooperating institutions every teachers college in the South with perhaps two or three exceptions. About thirty or forty are regularly attempting to do something constructive in relation to the problem. We have published a vast amount of literature intended to fit into these various integrated courses of study. These courses are used to undercut false notions about race. I examined a number of history books of the type commonly used in our southern schools and I found nothing in them to give the Negro child any pride of race or any feeling of belonging to this country. I found nothing recording the place of his race in American culture. The white child, too, sees nothing of this and I think it is safe to say that the average child coming through the average course in American history will come out with his prejudices confirmed. A more honest presentation of American history will do something to the attitudes of both colored and white children. Of some twenty civics books I went through, only one gave as much as a chapter to race problems. We have been attempting to condition the teachers to carry to the millions of white children some fundamental concepts of a very simple sort that will change their notions and attitudes. I do not know of any way you can hope for any permanent progress until you have done something to the minds of the great mass of people who determine our social and political policies. You say, "Give the Negro the ballot". Yes, but how? "By law". But it cannot be done that way. In North Carolina, a very liberal state, I talked with a very intelligent Negro, the owner of some trucks and land, and a highly respected person. I said, "Do you vote?" "No", he replied. "Do any Negroes here vote?" "No." "Why not?" I asked. "Nobody told you not to, did they?" "No, but we understand that we are not expected to vote." That is a very real device for disenfranchisment in the South—social pressure. You can never give the Negro suffrage by law or by any appeal to law.

Ruth Benedict, Columbia University.

I am an educator and of course I believe something can be done through education on racial problems. However, I am thinking of myself now as a church member. It seems to me that since we are gathered here at the call of a church group, there is something for us to discuss about what the churches can do. It seems to me that we are overlooking a great organization that could be put to work. Are we able to place the influence of our churches behind any local need so that Negroes could, for example, get proper housing?

The churches have a great membership. The church is a great and going concern. How much they could throw behind a movement that would attempt to solve the race problem! As I understand this meeting, we are here to consider the ways and means in which the churches can be put to work to implement programs for better inter-racial cooperation.

Mr. Brownlee.

The problem is even larger than that. We of the churches need to be concerned with education, legislation, and all the other factors in our culture that can be utilized to the end that inter-racial brotherhood be brought about and a truer form of democracy established.

Miss Kenyon.

We have been told about the Negro defense housing project in Detroit which was diverted to a white project. Where were the churches of Detroit when that happened?

Thomas A. Tripp, Board of Home Missions, Congregational Christian Churches.

Looking at the relationships of life might give us a better perspective. Perhaps the easiest work is done in the secondary relationships such as foreign missions. But maybe our work should be in primary relationships—in our own neighborhoods. We must help the churches to know what they can do. For example, there is the excellent work of Williams of Chattanooga. His church saw to it that the Negroes got places in which they could buy good shoes at fair prices. If we could set up some sort of process whereby we could keep pegging away with little leaflets and pamphlets, we could help little church groups to know what they could do and how they might do it. That would be as great a contribution to solving the race problem as anything else I can mention.

Miss Powdermaker.

When people operate on their race prejudices, they have two possible motivations: 1) it pays and they do not suffer, and 2) their actions stem from anxiety and fear. In many states in the South I frequently found that white men who were pillars of the church were the very ones who were mistreating their Negro sharecroppers. So far as I could see, in one particular community the local church took no stand. It would seem to me that here in this community prejudice brought prestige as well as profit. We cannot do anything about the profits, but we can do something about the prestige. Churches could work on both of these things. You cannot allay fears with facts because fears are not based on facts. The anxieties and fears have to be removed by emotional methods. This comes within the province of church work.

Mr. Cottrell.

I should like to call our attention to Mr. Embree's motion to set up a commission to do a particular job. Another way to look at this motion might be to see it in broader terms. It might be in order for us to ask how large a task in terms of organization there is to be done in the field of race relations. What kinds of organizations seem to be involved? What organizations do we now have to rely on? What resources of existing groups could be drawn together? How large a task would it be to co-ordinate our activities? This meeting has been called to consider what one church group may do, but the meeting is also conceived in larger terms—in terms of eliminating American racism from American society. What is the job for all groups working at this problem? The task is more than working out techniques of attack.

Mr. Tobias.

I think the A. M. A. should continue to make Negro education the major part of its program. I think it should seek to strengthen the existing institutions. I mean by that to secure financial support and increased endowments for its colleges. I think that is a primary responsibility. I think that those of us who are here as visitors and who through the years have had an opportunity to observe the work of the A. M. A. are obligated to let the members of the Association under whose auspices we are gathered here know how outside observers view the work done by the A. M. A. This is no time to let up, but a time to re-double efforts and to enlarge programs.

A second task for the Association would be to use its influence with leaders of the church with which it is affiliated to the end that they may come up to the front line, as it were, in their interest in race relations. Pearl Buck has been referred to. I am convinced from all that I have observed and read about her that she is doing a valliant job in this area. We will recall that she put all her prestige on the line. She identified herself with all her world prestige with the struggles of the Negro group. Since, she has had little groups of Negroes in her board room at the John Day Company every week, with people like Raymond Gram Swing, Lowell Thomas and others, bringing them into contact with Negro leaders who might express themselves to such outstanding public persons. That is a suggestion to an organization that is distinctly a church organization of the opportunity and the responsibility that it has to line up the most important people in the churches to the end that they may make themselves known and felt on the issue. It is exactly the method that has been followed with regard to other great questions in our country. I can think of twenty persons who, if they were to speak today in one voice to the President of the United States about the problems that we have discussed here today, would bring about a change in conditions overnight. I think it is the responsibility of an organization like ours to line up the really important people, but I think that this needs to be done also so that when a person speaks out as Pearl Buck has done, she will not be alone, and the President and the Congress of the United States will know that she is not alone. The government will know that other important people in American life stand with her.

Katherine Gardiner, Federal Council of Churches.

I think we need to have leaders who will popularize the problem of race relations in our churches. Some goals in regard to segregation in the churches need to be adopted.

Mrs. Elizabeth G. Whiting, Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Why could not the story of the rejection of Negro blood be used to bring the whole problem before the people of our churches? It is a new approach and it is timely.

Douglas Horton, General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Could we not write a brief letter taking up some of today's suggestions, and describing the intolerable situation which we find ourselves in? I for one would be glad to sign such a letter. It would not go from any of the organizations represented here, but from a group of us as individuals.

My conscience has been pricking me ever since I arrived. We all feel the force of the arguments which have been laid before us. What can the little church in Jonesville do about it? Would it be well for the people to seek out Negro families in their communities and bring them into the white churches? Should I as a member of Broadway Tabernacle seek out a Negro church in Harlem and take my family there? Let us say that 90% of the churches fail to live up to their ideals, but there is a minority of churches up and down the country looking for ways to break down race barriers. If there were two or three Negro families in some of the white churches and vice versa, would they serve as a symbol of what we might have? I am asking questions for I am puzzled. We would like to have a good, wise, intelligent technique which we ourselves could use in our own neighborhoods.

Mr. Patterson.

The A. M. A. should stay in the picture. It has done a great work and that job is not yet finished. I have been wondering, as all of our educational institutions look forward to the next hundred years, if we do not have the obligation to be perhaps a little more realistic about the job we are attempting to do. It may be that the Negro people are more ready for a realistic job of education than ever before. I think they are disillusioned about integration into the American culture pattern. Some of them feel that some minority strategy of approach is going to be necessary for some time to come. I believe our leadership will be more effective if we can put our problem in words that the masses of the Negro people can understand—that we attend to the problem of how to make a more satisfactory economic adjustment possible. I am impressed with the fact that we as leaders are probably a little bit too far ahead of the masses. I do not think they always see us and know what we are driving at. That is because they do not interpret the things that we have to say in terms of their major needs at this time. Neither the white nor the colored group here represents the masses. We have a responsibility to get sufficiently close to them so that the methods we choose to solve these problems will be those they can understand. The vast majority are not concerned about racism. They are concerned about economic needs, and until we try to reach them through that need, we shoot beside the mark.

Mr. MacCracken.

It does seem to me that such a commission as was suggested by Mr. Embree calls for the encouragement of church activity in this field.

Mr. Cottrell.

May I read the motion which Mr. Embree presented.

> That it is the sense of this meeting that the American Missionary Association be asked to appoint a commission on racism and international relations; and that the American Missionary Association be asked to implement that commission with an initial operating budget so that material can be gotten together and the various forces in this field can be rallied.

I should like to call for a vote on this motion.

Robbins W. Barstow, President, Hartford Theological Seminary.

I am very much aware of the psychology to which Mr. Crawford has referred: that any group must realize that it is much better to work with any other group than for them; to try to integrate an idea through their cooperative efforts than to embody an idea directed toward the other group. In the second place, I do think that we are organized to the point of despair. In my own community whenever a new organization is proposed I always hope that we can scrap six of the existing ones. It might be a wise procedure in carrying out the spirit of the motion presented by Mr. Embree, to suggest the following:

> That the American Missionary Association be encouraged to carry these contacts further and perhaps call a conference so that with the aid of these existing agencies it can be seen if they can correlate what they are doing and among themselves sub-divide into groups to accomplish the work before them.

There is a need for existing organizations to correlate their studies and surveys. Along that line it seems to me we could carry the spirit of this proposal without forming another organization.

Mr. Tobias.

I should like to say, with respect to the Commission for a Just and Durable Peace, that its references in the preliminary drafts to Africa and India are so incidental as to suggest that no satisfactory treatment of the subject from the world angle would come out of that Commission, and that is not a criticism of the work of the Commission. The Phelps-Stokes Fund is the one to study Africa and peace aims. Mr. Embree's motion takes in all the colored peoples of the world. When we remember the struggle of Japan before the League of Nations in the interest of the principle of racial equality, it would seem that there needs to be considerable study of this question. I think we can say that Negro leaders are thinking about this. Men in the educational field, like Rayford Logan and groups working with him, have seen the need for something. Therefore, I find myself hoping that the A. M. A. will take the responsibility for organizing such a commission whether it wants to take the responsibility for carrying it on or not. We should get the best people in America interested in this vital question, regardless of race or creed. I believe that confidence in the A. M. A. is strong enough to assure its wholehearted support in this new venture.

Mr. Caliver.

I was going to caution against a motion attempting to carry on more studies of Negro life in America. Negroes have been studied more than any other group in the world. I would like to see a motion to take those studies and see whether they are any good and go forward in developing a technique of social action in terms of the studies already made.

Miss Kenyon.

The A. M. A. has been particularly successful in making indigenous approaches at its various schools. I wish we could have five to ten thousand dollars for one project in the South and one in the North in which our churches and schools, white and Negro, could work on some phase of the race relations problem.

Mr. Clement.

I want to support Mr. Embree, that we ask the A. M. A. to undertake the establishment of a commission, but I would like to suggest that if the A. M. A. finds that $10,000 is too small a fund or is not available, that they will not hesitate to talk with other corporations about this whole idea. Racism is not local or even national, but international.

I keep thinking about Japan's plea for brotherhood before the League of Nations several years ago. I keep thinking of Haile Selassie's plea. We are not going to have peace in the world of any sort until we agree that we ought to have some kind of society where discrimination based on race is non-existent.

This commission, if it is appointed and put to work on the problem of racism and the international situation, ought to have as its frame of reference the fundamental assumption that mankind is one, and that there should not be a society where discrimination is made on the basis of race or color.

Monroe Work, Tuskegee Institute.

We are working out our program for peace before the war has ended. That is well for we need to do this. We have no organization today to handle the race situation, but we are in a position to do that by setting up an organization such as has been proposed by Mr. Embree.

N. C. Newbold, North Carolina State Department of Education.

Mr. Embree's motion appeals to my imagination. I hope that this group will find it desirable to accept the motion. If we find ourselves enmeshed in too many organizations and discover that there is a duplication of effort, we could easily withdraw.

Mr. Barstow.

My point is that commissions, committees and other organizations do not tend to withdraw when they find duplication. I would suggest that a new commission should grow out of exploratory contacts if it is seen that such a commission is needed.

Charles H. Thompson, Editor-in-chief, Journal of Negro Education.

I am in favor of the motion. It would seem desirable to combine the energies of the many organizations interested in the same field of work.

It was finally moved, seconded and carried that the following action represent the sentiments of the seminar:

> Voted that it is the sense of this assembly that the American Missionary Association be encouraged to carry forward its contacts looking toward a closer integration of existing agencies in racial work, correlating their studies and surveys, and using cooperatively their expert staffs in coming to close grips with the problems of racism in America and in the world at large; and should it be desirable, a general commission might be formed to implement future work.

Mr. Crawford.

I move that this conference express its appreciation to the American Missionary Association for calling and sponsoring this seminar, and to the Broadway Tabernacle for extending its hospitality to us.

Mr. Cottrell.

I think I express the appreciation of the A. M. A. Division Committee and of myself personally when I thank you for the generous manner in which all of you who are busy and some who have come a long distance have given of your time and interest in attending and participating in this seminar. We appreciate it greatly.

Dear Dr. Johnson:

I am coming to Atlanta on November 11 to see the Cranbrook Exhibit and I should like to have some time with you and the other members of the Southern Regional Council Staff. I should like to gain enough information about the SRC to be able to cooperate more intelligently as an AMA Staff worker. I have just wired Dr. Ira DeA. Reid asking him if the Council office is open on Saturday. If it is not, I shall be forced to be in Atlanta on November 10.

I am on my way to New York but the understanding in Atlanta will contribute much to my effectiveness there.

Dear Miss McCulloch:

Thank you for your letter of December 22. I am sending you under separate cover a package of materials illustrating the "Tenth Man" project which Dr. Kleazer promoted in the high schools when he was with the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. I think that these will be useful to you in your analysis of race relations projects for young people.

There is a good deal of this sort of thing in the files of the Commission, but with our limited staff we can not undertake to assemble it or make notes about it. I am afraid that Mr. Brown got the wrong impression on this point. Of course, you are welcome to come and make whatever use of the files you wish.

All good wishes for the new year.

Dear Dr. Johnson and Dr. Reid:

On his return from his recent trip East Mr. Edward Brown of our staff told me that he had talked with you relative to materials on interracial activities of high school age groups which I am desirous of assembling and examining for use in preparing a pamphlet for the Missionary Education Movement. The enclosed form letter will give you a bit more detail on the scheme of the pamphlet.

Mr. Brown tells me that you advised him that there are a good many reports of such activities in your files and that some of these could be "just bundled up and sent along" to me, that others would have to be kept in your files but that notes based on them could be sent me. I should very much appreciate having these materials as early in January as you can let me have them as the draft of the pamphlet must be ready shortly thereafter.

If there is any further information I need to give you for your guidance in selecting materials please let me know at once and I shall be prompt in answering questions though I have tried to indicate the type of materials in the enclosed letter.

Drs. Johnson & Reid

Dear Dr Johnson & Dr Reid.

The Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada is preparing a series of pamphlets on Christianity and race relations in the United States, for use in the home mission study program in 1946. Our office is assisting with one of these, designed for 15-17 year old boys and girls and older youth, that will describe projects already being carried on and make suggestions for further action. Many encouraging activities are being carried on by such youth groups all over the country but it is difficult to assemble accounts of them. Will you help us at this point?

This letter is going to editors of youth magazines and interracial publications, leaders of youth groups, and workers in inter-racial organizations. Whichever you are, will you use the channels open to you to ask young people or their leaders to report any activities in race relations which they are conducting, either to you for forwarding to us or directly to me at this office? We shall also be grateful for any stories that you have at hand. Please indicate the age of the young people engaging in the activity.

We should like to know of programs conducted by young people for better understanding among Indian, Oriental, White, and Negro people; of interracial study or fellowship groups, of action projects either by youth of one racial group for another, or by two or more racial groups working together on some enterprise of common interest.

Any information to be used in this particular pamphlet should be in my hands before the end of January 1945, the sooner the better.

We conceive of the project as one card with two different scenes because the legends are the same on both cards. In filling orders we send one-half of each scene.

Under separate cover we are sending you fifty of each scene and 100 promotion blurbs. You may want to distribute these with a letter to the members of your Executive Committee as well as to your staff and others. Because we thought you and your colleagues might be interested in using this new greeting card, we are enclosing one for your examination. Please display it advantageously.

The cards with envelopes cost $5.00 per hundred. The cards are not folded in order that those who want to have their names engraved on them by some local printer may be able to do so. We do no engraving.

Because our supply is limited, I advise you to place your order with me at Fisk University as soon as possible in order to insure delivery. We are beginning to fill orders now.

Dear Dr. Brownlee:

I am writing to ask your help in clarifying the status of the American Missionary Association's grant to the Southern Regional Council. We were under the impression that Dr. Charles S. Johnson had approved a grant in the amount of $1,000 for our 1945 budget. In July of last year we received a check for $250, which was described as a quarterly payment, but this was all we received. A recent letter from Miss Wernert to Miss Clay states that no provision has been made for an additional appropriation.

Since Dr. Charles S. Johnson has gone to Japan, we are not sure what the situation is now with respect to an appropriation to the Council. Naturally, we are hopeful that we will receive an appropriation of at least $1,000 toward our 1946 budget. Shall we submit a formal application? I shall greatly appreciate your advice.

Your letter of March 8 concerning the A. M. A. appropriation for the Southern Regional Council is before me.

As I understand it, Dr. Johnson tentatively listed $1,000 in his budget for 1945-1946. Our fiscal year runs from June 1 through May 31 and appropriations are sent out quarterly. Dear Friend:

We hope you have used the "Races of Mankind" posters with profit to your groups. To keep you, our patron, up-to-date with our new materials, we are sending you copies which are enclosed. "What Do You Know about Races?" is a question and answer test which you are free to mimeograph for use with your groups. In your poster set you received a copy of the annotated bibliography, "American Minority People during World War II;" enclosed is a revised copy.

Last year our inter-racial Christmas greeting cards came off the press late and many people expressed regret that they did not know about them earlier. Cards for Christmas 1946 are now ready for sale. From the enclosed announcement and samples, you see that two different cards are available on white, yellow and blue paper. These cards with envelopes are $7.00 per hundred, a price which you recognize as a wholesale price. If you like the cards well enough to use them, we should like to have your order early. The cards are packaged flat so that if you desire it, your printer can engrave your name with ease.

Very truly yours,

Edmonia W. Grant

It might be to the good of the Southern Regional Council to send me one hundred copies each month. The A.M.A. was the first missionary society to support the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. I'm eager to keep some of our key people informed about the work of the SRC.

WHAT'S WHAT AND WHO'S WHO

In sponsoring this Centennial Institute the American Missionary Association seeks to thrust its ideals of human brotherhood into the future on the basis of intelligent understanding and forthright action. The Association was founded in a Baptist church in Albany, New York, on September 3, 1846, as an abolition society. It opened the first antislavery mission in Africa and the first school for freedmen south of the Mason and Dixon Line. It sought from the beginning to foster free public schools and trained their first teachers. It took the lead in chartering Howard University and founded Hampton Institute, Fisk University, Atlanta University, Talladega College, LeMoyne College, Tougaloo College, Straight College (now Dillard University), and Tillotson College. In 1896—fifty years ago—these institutions had fewer than 300 bona fide college students; today they have 11,500, with a combined annual current expense budget of four million dollars. Its Department of Race Relations, under the direction of Charles S. Johnson, is at the service of all agencies and institutions which seek to improve human relations through better interracial relations. Its office is at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Broadway Tabernacle, in the early days, was the Chatham Street Chapel, which was the center of antislavery agitation under the inspiration of Arthur and Lewis Tappan, New York merchants, who were among the founders of the American Missionary Association.

A ROLL CALL OF SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL GROUPS

A Report Prepared for
The Commission on Curricular Problems and Research
By
Ellis F. Hartford
Coordinating Agent

November 30, 1946
University of Kentucky
Lexington, Ky.

A ROLL CALL OF SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL GROUPS

Introduction

The Commission on Curricular Problems and Research of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools has given consideration to the problem of reconversion which faces it in postwar Southern education. During the war years, its activities, as were all those of the Association, were held to a minimum. A great many of their recent contributions have been necessarily related to the war effort. During this time, however, the chief undertaking of the Commission--the Southern Study--was completed. This major undertaking resulted in a number of significant reports by individual schools participating in the Study and a final report by the staff. In normal years the completion of a major study such as this would have meant a great deal of discussion, interest, and action by a number of schools and colleges as the findings were reviewed and evaluated. This opportunity for the maximum realization of the findings and values of the Southern Study may be irretrievably lost as one of those intangible casualties of the war. Certainly, all that can be done to retrieve that opportunity should be the concern of this Commission and of the colleges and secondary schools which compose this great regional Association.

This much, however, is clear. The emergence from the war and the completion of the Southern Study brings the Commission to the point of rethinking, planning and formulating its longtime, continuing program of service to and through the colleges and schools composing the Southern Association. The Commission is concerned that it shall meet its responsibilities, that it be ready to perform those research and service functions for the Association it may have to do, and that it shall fulfill the role in Southern education which peculiarly belongs to it as a regional agency.

In other words, this Commission is concerned that its reconversion be in terms of the mission it should undertake and the contribution it should make to education in the South.

The problem of reconversion to postwar education is a concern of many other regional groups--associations, commissions, committees, councils, and societies--interested in various educational programs and problems of the South. The Commission believes that a necessary step in the reconversion is an effective mobilization of all regional educational agencies in order that a concerted, cooperative attack may be made upon the problems which must be solved in this region.

The Commission has given consideration to this opportunity with the thought that its own activities and program might be more readily coordinated with those already in progress. Conversely, it was felt that any assistance it could provide in the way of encouraging effective cooperation among the regional programs of education would meet with a ready response.

Accordingly, the Commission arranged for a permanent office to be maintained by a Coordinating Agent as a part-time representative of its Executive Committee. This office began to function on January 4, 1946. The first instruction to the agent was that a brief survey be made of the regional groups which are at work upon educational problems, studies, and researches in the South and a report be made to the Commission.

The method of study was simple. Early in January, 1946, twenty-five inquiries were sent to as many regional groups requesting the needed information. Twenty-three replies were received in time to be incorporated in a preliminary report which was made to the Commission at the meeting in Memphis on March 26, 1946. Following the March meeting it was decided to continue the study in the attempt to provide a more complete report. Consequently, thirty-four letters of inquiry were sent to additional regional groups in March and April, 1946. Twenty-five of these replied early enough to be utilized in this report.

For the most part, the information set forth in this report is that submitted by the officials reporting for the various groups. However, in a few instances it was necessary to consult official publications of regional groups and other sources to find necessary additional information. In this connection the 1944 directory of the Southern Rural Life Council entitled Agencies Concerned with the Quality of Rural Life in the South and certain publications of the Committee on Southern Regional Studies and Education provided useful supplementary information. It is hardly necessary to add that the report can hardly be considered complete in any literal sense. The list of regional agencies and organizations is lengthy and the line of demarcation between those concerned with education and those related to other regional problems is nebulous. Hence, it was necessary to make certain arbitrary decisions at the risk of appearing to be inconsistent. It is obviously difficult to keep a list of such proportions strictly up to date. Meetings are held at various times throughout the year, new officers are elected, activities are completed or begun so frequently that changes occur before information collected can be utilized in a report. For such errors of omission and commission as may be discovered, the coordinating agent must plead guilty.

The report is offered in the hope that it will be found useful by Southern educators and groups who are concerned with the task of educational reconstruction in the region. Many old problems remain; new ones plague the would-be improvers of the Southern scene as they return to post-war educational positions. It is intended that this brief roll call may assist in the reorientation of individuals and groups at work upon the educational problems and opportunities of the South.

10. Committee on Southern Regional Studies and Education of the American Council on Education.

Appointed in April, 1943 by the American Council on Education. The Committee was created to undertake a study of:

(a) The resource needs of the Southern area.
(b) The research materials bearing on these needs.
(c) The adequacy of methods for improving educational materials bearing on resources and their use.
(d) The possibilities of inter-agency and inter-state cooperation to develop more effective educational use of resource information dealing with Southern resource-use problems.

During the first year of its existence, the Committee completed an exploratory study which indicated the need for a regional facility to assist state and regional groups to develop and implement programs in resource-use education. Accordingly, the Committee was established to serve in this capacity with the following general functions:

(a) Serve as a clearing house for information on resource use education.
(b) Assist the states, and agencies and institutions within states, to develop and increase the effectiveness of their resource use education programs.
(c) Identify need for, develop, and secure coordination of regional program in resource-use education.

The Committee has consistently followed two major policies in the exercise of the functions listed above:

(a) Services are provided after coordination among appropriate state and regional agencies.
(b) Organizations which are, or might be, capable of performing any of the above services are encouraged to do so. The committee has taken the position that one of its major objectives is to work itself out of a job.

Major activities have included: the holding of three major regional conferences (Gatlinburg Conferences I and II) and Chapel Hill; preliminary work on a regional volume, EXPLORING THE SOUTH; preparation of reports of these conferences; two conferences with regional agencies; assistance to several universities and colleges in the development of regional materials, services, and instructional materials; instrumental in establishing The Regional Materials Service at George Peabody College; preparation and publication of the study CHANNELING RESEARCH INTO EDUCATION; and collaboration with regional groups such as the Southern States Work Conference, Southern Rural Life Council, Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

In addition, there have been numerous instances of cooperation with and assistance to state agencies and institutions in matters relating to resource use education.

A periodic newsletter, RESOURCE USE EDUCATION, is prepared and distributed to interested groups, colleges, schools, and individuals.

11. Committee on Teacher Training in Church Related Colleges of the South.

This Committee submitted only a nominal report stating that it is not functioning actively at the present time. Inability to hold meetings has prevented the formation of objectives and the development of a program. The only activity which has been completed to date was a study of teacher training programs in the church related colleges of South Carolina by means of questionnaire.

Chairman: W. C. Herbert
Wooford College
Spartanburg, South Carolina

12. Committee on Work Conferences on Higher Education of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Committee first appointed in 1941 by the Executive Committee of the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education and the Commission on Curricular Problems and Research to develop a work conference which undertakes to explore current problems in Southern education. Work conferences were consequently developed and held as follows:

Date	Place	Report
1. July 6-19, 1941	University of the South Sewanee, Tennessee	General Report. Printed in The Southern Association Quarterly, November, 1941.
2. June 21-27, 1942	Sewanee Military Academy Sewanee, Tennessee	Second General Report. Printed for the Southern Association Quarterly, Durham, N. C., 1942.
3. 1943	No conference held	Third General Report, Printed for the Southern Association Quarterly, Durham, N.C., 1943.
4. 1944	No conference held	Fourth Report. Printed in The Southern Association Quarterly, October, 1944.
5. 1945	No conference held	Fifth Report. Printed for The Southern Association Quarterly, Durham, N. C., 1945.
6. 1946	Converse College Spartanburg, S. C.	Completed report, Studies in Higher Education in the South, to be published at an early date.

During the war years when it was impracticable to hold a summer work conference the Committee rendered valuable services to institutions which undertook studies of problems by faculty groups. Institutional studies in higher education have been reported in 47 institutions with a total of 142 committees at work. The range of subjects under study included: curriculum, 30 committees; planning for postwar education, 12 committees; teacher education, 10 committees; evaluation and examinations, 9 committees; guidance and personnel service, 7 committees and numerous others. Significance of this type of institutional study is expressed by the Committee as follows:

> ... such indigenous study initiated by institutions concerned with the study of their problems through the utilization of their own resources is probably the most significant development in higher education in the South. (See fifth report, page 5.)

A second recent major activity of the Committee has been participation in the Cooperative Study of Teacher Education in cooperation with the Southern Conference on Teacher Education and the Conference of Deans of Southern Graduate Schools.

A third recent activity of the Committee planned in lieu of a summer work conference for 1945 was the preparation of a document on Southern education which summarized the materials developed in the work conferences in the cooperating institutions, and by affiliated organizations. The tentative report entitled Studies of Higher Education in the South received wide circulation.

Additional publications have occasionally appeared from the Committee in The Southern Association Quarterly; the report "College and Community" in the February, 1945 issue representing an unusually valuable contribution.

13. Conference of Academic Deans of the Southern States.

Only a nominal report received covering the recent war time period during which the group was necessarily inactive. Annual meetings resumed in connection with the forthcoming sessions of the Southern Association in Memphis. three yearbooks, 1939, 1940, and 1941. The yearbook was merged with the magazine and discontinued in 1942. The magazine is published four times a year, November, January, March, and May. It has a circulation at present of 1,000, embracing all of the states in the United States and a number of foreign countries.

The conference grew out of an effort on the part of the directors of teacher training and certification of the Southern States to promote a fair degree of reciprocity in certification. As a result of this joint work, it seemed desirable for these prople to set up an organization that would enable them to work together upon common problems in the region. The conference has studied and worked with a view to improving both pre-service and in-service education of teachers in the region.

It is the purpose of the conference to stimulate study relative to educational problems and to plan in terms of goals and objectives that will promote the improvement of teacher education and certification programs.

Definite criteria were developed in regard to reciprocity in certification and most of the states modified their certification regulations in such a manner as to enable teachers in transferring from one state to another to receive certification with less difficulty.

Purpose: To encourage the training of executive leaders and skilled administrators for the public service.

Activities: The chief activity of the program is the provision of an internship training experience for carefully selected Regional Fellows. The program covers a period of 12 months. Three months are spent in the TVA (or other government agency) and one quarter each in the three sponsoring universities.

During the first two years of its existence the program provided training for twenty Regional Fellows. More than half of those who have completed their training now occupy positions in either State or Federal agencies in the South.

61. Southern States Work Conference on School Administrative Problems.

Organized in 1940 to provide a cooperative plan for state departments of education and state education associations of the Southern Region to study educational problems of mutual interest.

The major objectives are:

(a) To provide a continuing opportunity for educational leaders of the Southern Region to study problems of region-wide significance relating to the organization and administration of education in the region.
(b) To develop improved means of assuring group and inter-state cooperation in facing and solving important current educational problems.
(c) To prepare bulletins and handbooks giving the tentative conclusions of the work-conference as to educational policies and procedures which are found to be most acceptable and which are recommended for use throughout the region.
(d) To cooperate with the participating states in developing programs or adjusting their own programs to implement recommendations of the Work-conference.
(e) To cooperate with other organizations in carrying out studies and preparing practical programs for improving the educational status of the region.

The annual work-conferences have grown steadily in membership despite the disadvantages imposed by the war. Two major projects considered in the 1946 work-conference were as follows: (1) Study of elementary education in each state in the region and in the Southern Region; (2) Continuation of the cooperative study of vocational problems in each state in the region and in the Southern Region.

A number of publications have materialized from the programs of the work-conference. At this time, the following are still in print:

(1) RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER LEARNING (No. 2, 1943, 25 cents.)
(2) STATE RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF EDUCATION (No. 1, 1942, 25 cents.)
(3) PROBLEMS OF TEACHER PERSONNEL (No. 3, 1942, 25 cents.)
(4) SCHOOL TRANSPORTATION (No. 2, 1941, 25 cents.)
(5) SCHOOL STANDARDS (No. 4, 1941, 25 cents.)
(6) ADMINISTRATION OF STATE CURRICULUM PROGRAMS (No. 5, 1941, 25 cents.)

64. Tennessee Valley Agricultural Correlating Committee.

Organized: 1934.

Members: Thomas P. Cooper, representing the Land Grant Colleges of the Tennessee Valley area;
J. C. Mc Amis, representing the TVA;
James G. Maddox, representing the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Purpose: To coordinate those phases of the research, extension, land-use planning, and educational activities of these agencies which are related to a unified, regional agricultural program.

Activities: The Correlating Committee as such does not ordinarily engage in activities or projects, although special undertakings involving joint activities among the participating agencies may be carried on by or through the Committee. The correlating functions of the Committee are exercised chiefly, however, by facilitating the establishment of cooperative projects and the carrying on of cooperative activities among the participating agencies. The committee accomplishes these functions largely through the medium of the Valley-States Conference, Standing Committees of that Conference, and Contact Officers in each of the cooperating land-grant colleges. The activities of these groups are carried on through channels and day-to-day operations of the office of the Executive Secretary of the Correlating Committee.

The following standing committees are maintained: Organization, Research, Extension and Resident Teaching, Resource Utilization, and Cooperatives.

Semiannual meetings known as Valley States Conferences are held. The 25th Valley States Conference was held at the Piedmont Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia on April 3, 1946.

October 7, 1947

Dr. Fred L. Brownlee
New York 10, New York

Dear Mr. Brownlee:

About a year ago we began sending you each month a hundred copies of New South.

Now that printing costs have got so high, we are trying to find ways of cutting down our bill, though we wish anxiously to have the paper continue to reach people who find it useful.

Do you think it might be possible for the AMA, or the Board, to cover the cost of these copies, say with a block subscription at half-price, which would be fifty dollars a year? I am aware of the years of generosity of the AMA toward us and toward the Commission, and am therefore the more hesitant to at all in this vein. And if you do find them still useful (to you and doubtless to us), and some subscription arrangement would be awkward, we will gladly send the hundred along as before. And will continue to appreciate the aid to our good name provided by your circulation of them.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear Ralph:

This is what went out to each of the Council's state officers with a copy of Employment on Merit. Extra copies went to Chairmen.

Southern church papers would show an extra flicker of interest on something on this subject that reached them from Atlanta. The ones I would send to number 35. I await your thumbnail sketch and enough more copies, to wit 35, for us to make the mailing to church papers.

Additionally, I am sending the pamphlet to a number of the Catholic Bishops in the South with a letter from me as enclosed.

I made bold to use your name in a letter the other day to Mr. Sam Katz of the American Jewish Committee's staff at Philadelphia. I am offering myself as a sometime speaker before their local meetings. I thought if he called you for dope as to who this George Mitchell was, you would be willing to say what you knew.

Mr. Galen R. Weaver
American Missionary Association
Congregational Christian Churches
287 Fourth Avenue
New York 10, New York

Dear Mr. Weaver:

I cannot believe that the Birmingham bombing was done by the Reds.

Atlanta was the city in which the church women did quite a lot on housing. The story has appeared in the bulletin of the National Council of Church Women within the last year. We haven't a copy here, but presume it could be had from the National Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. And the Christian Century is supposed to have carried a write-up on it also.

As to the church women, back in 1946 the Atlanta Council of Church Women got interested in the whole question of housing and pretty soon established a Housing Committee. During this time (and I believe still), the chairman of the Atlanta Council of Church Women was Mrs. W. B. Suddeth, who is a member of one of the leading Baptist churches of Atlanta. One of the early moves was to arrange tours of the more squalid housing areas. People from the two principal Atlanta newspapers were invited along, and for weeks the Atlanta papers carried prominently pictures of bad housing conditions. A good many of the pictures showed the visiting teams of church women standing in front of the homes. A little later a Congressional subcommittee on housing, including among others Congressman Rains of Alabama and John Sparkman (I believe before he went to the Senate), came to Atlanta, and the Council of Church Women laid a great many figures before them. They worked diligently on behalf of public housing in general. A Coordinating Committee on Housing was established, composed of quite a number of women's organizations, many of them not church-connected, and in this way the movement was broadened. The women got various members of the City Council to attend their housing meetings. One Councilman in particular showed great interest in the housing needs of the city and, largely through his efforts, a city ordinance was passed in 1947 setting up minimum standards for housing and getting power to require remodelling of sub-standard units. By one device or another, the implementation of this act was delayed until 1949, but in that year a staff of inspectors was engaged and the ordinance began to be applied. Through February 28, 1951, 2,277 buildings had been substantially remodelled as a consequence of the ordinance. This covered 5,230 family units. 10,237 buildings have been inspected, and health inspection has been arranged for 33,414 units. Some houses have been ordered demolished.

At one stage in the long controversy, certain real estate agents in the city made the accusation that the Atlanta Council of Church Women was "communist-tinted." But tinted or not, they were kept busy.

Mrs. Suddeth and her friends would be the first to disclaim that they got all this done, but they were certainly persistent and effective.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

You will be interested in a reply to the letter which I sent to our white Congregational Church in Birmingham. Mr. Henry M. Edmonds wrote under date of March 15 and I received it only yesterday. I think Mr. Edmonds is giving part time to the church and that he is a teacher at the college there. I wonder how reliable his interpretation of the particular bombing case might be? We will be eager to hear Mrs. Tilly's version as soon as it is ready to share with us.

I note in your last copy of "New South", February 1951, an item about the church women of one large city who took leadership in getting the slum areas publicized and in organizing a coordinating council of women's organizations to deal with housing problems. I would like very much to have the city identified and to know something in detail of exactly what was done. I am speaking before the Church Council on Social Work in May on this very problem of church action in getting better housing and this case history would be exceedingly helpful.

Dear Mr. Weaver:

I am very apologetic for not having attended long since to your letter of weeks back about the disgraceful bombings in Birmingham. I have a number of excuses for not having written but no reasons.

After so long, however, I have interviewed the Police Commissioner, talked with one of the detectives who investigated the case and examined the file.

Without going into details it looks like an exceedingly clever case of communist manipulation.

The police department here by the way would be glad for you or anybody else to come and look at the records.

Division of Race Relations

The American Missionary Association is a Christian Missionary Society organized in 1846, "to spread the Gospel of Christ wherever it has opportunity." From the beginning it was actively opposed to slavery which then existed and to those prejudices of race and caste which still exist.

Its membership is composed both of life members at large and of the official delegates to the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches.

For nearly a century it has worked with Southern Highlanders, Negroes, American Indians, Orientals, Mexicans, Puerto Ricans, and Mormons. Some of its early schools have become independent colleges; some have become state-supported schools; some have developed into centers of experimental community education.

In January 1942, the Association established a Division of Race Relations. The staff of this division is based at Nashville and composed of a small group of trained workers, Negro and White. Its aim is to work towards the fulfilment of Christian aims by Christian means in the whole area of race relations, but especially in the removal of those barriers of caste and class which yet obstruct full participation of Negro citizens in our American democracy and of Negro Christians in our Christian church fellowship.

To these ends the Division offers the services of its staff in several forms of work.

1. Common Ground Workers: Staff members available to communities which desire skilled assistance in organizing themselves for constructive solution of local interracial problems, such as those arising in connection with housing, restrictive covenants, labor, and employment practices, transportation, welfare, recreation, and community planning. These workers may also take initiative in stimulating activity of existing organizations where urgent need is apparent.

2. Counsel by correspondence on how to develop action programs, institutes, or start courses on race relations, where to turn for speakers, materials, or book lists and the like.

3. An annual national institute of race relations, located in 1944 and 1945 at Fisk University, and assistance in setting up state and local interracial institutes.

4. A loan exhibit. The Races of Mankind, prepared by the Cranbrook Institute of Science, and obtainable as a loan at nominal cost. Preparation of smaller exhibits of pictures, pamphlets and books on interracial themes on request.

5. Preparation of materials on request for national and state-wide organizations and periodicals, and preparation of certain materials on race relations which will be issued by this office and listed for purchase at nominal cost when available.

6. Special staff workers as follows: one to work especially with youth groups desiring aid in organizing interracial activities; one to work especially with ministers and ministerial organizations; one to work especially with church organizations emphasizing the Congregational-Christian Churches and related bodies.

Communications should be addressed to CHARLES S. JOHNSON, Director, Division of Race Relations, American Missionary Association, Fisk University, Nashville 8, Tennessee.

THE RACES OF MAN

EARLY MAN LACKING MEANS OF WIDE TRAVEL AND COMMUNICATION DEVELOPED INTO VARIED TYPES WHICH WE CALL RACES. PEOPLE THEN NEEDED TO KEEP PEACE WITH FEW NEIGHBORS. TO-DAY ALL MEN ARE NEIGHBORS AND WITH ALL MEN IN TIME WE CAN AND WE MUST LIVE IN PEACE.

Race Relations Division, American Missionary Association
287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y.

WHY ARE THERE DIFFERENT RACES?

Very small groups of people have the extreme characteristics of white, yellow, and black "races"; the great majority of the people of the world are the "inbetweens"—those with various shades of tan and brown.

Man's greatest adventure was his spread from somewhere in Asia to all corners of the world.

Originally man was neither light nor dark. As he advanced into the areas of hot sunlight and long summers to the South, those with darker skins were better able to survive. The short wide nose developed as the best means of inhaling the moist warm air, and body hair disappeared.

As he advanced into the north, those with lighter skins were better able to absorb the sunlight in the short months of summer and so store up a quantity of Vitamin D against the long dark winter to come. Here, too, the long thin nose was better adapted to inhale and warm the cold air, and a large amount of body hair was some protection against the cold. In some places in Asia, a fold of skin developed over the inner corner of the eyes to produce what we call the slant eye. The geographical differences between men are however of small magnitude when one considers the fundamental likeness.

The population of the world was small in the days of early man and differences, once begun, tended to persist through isolation and inbreeding. Each so-called Race became functionally adapted to living in the area in which it found itself. There was no question of superiority or inferiority, for the white man would have suffered in the hot tropical sun as much as the Negro would have suffered in the cold North.

With the growth of civilization, man has been enabled, through the use of proper clothing and scientifically prepared food and vitamins, to move into all areas of the world, no matter what his color. The so-called racial differences are superficial, and man is essentially the same and has the same potentialities wherever you find him, be he light, dark, tall, short, fat or thin, long headed or round headed.

THE JEWS ARE NOT A RACE

Chief Rabbi W. A. Matthew, of the Royal Order of Ethiopian Jews, at the Harlem Synagogue. His followers are not converts but are from families in the West Indies and Africa whose Hebrew faith stems from the Falashas of Ethiopia—direct descendants from the House of David and of Solomon.

a Jewish Negro

Jews are people of any race who practice the religion of Judaism. They are found among all races and sub-races, and among people of every conceivable physical type and occupation. Certain physical characteristics which are called "Jewish," such as the curved nose, are found among millions of non-Jewish peoples of Eastern Europe and Western Asia which is the area from which many Jews originally came. Even Jewish culture is a composite of customs from the many areas in which they have lived. Indeed, persecution of a Jewish "race" is a comparatively new thing. Previously the Jews were persecuted for their religion. Now that we have religious freedom, there is invented a mythical "racial" basis for the persecutions.

THE FOODS WE EAT ARE A GIFT FROM ALL PEOPLES

The crab-apple and the hazelnut are the only important foods contributed to our table by the ancient Europeans. Everything else we eat we have borrowed from someone else. If the contribution of the American Indian alone were removed we should have no kidney beans, lima beans, chocolate, corn, peanuts, pineapple, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, pumpkins, squash, avocado, tomatoes, tobacco or turkeys.

CULTURE IS NOT INBORN

culture Chinese

Race deals with matters that are inherited, but such things as are called culture (speech, clothing, habits, music, etc.) depend on the surroundings in which the child lives. The little girl drinking the ice cream soda is of the yellow race but her culture is American.

SCIENCE OF RACE CURRICULUM ESSENTIAL

Where are the fascist myths about race exploded? Where do Americans learn the science of race and culture? Educators who strive to help the United States become the arsenal of democratic ideals essential to winning the peace, consider the teaching of the science of race and culture a fundamental task. As a visual aid "The Races of Mankind" posters were developed by the Race Relations Division of the American Missionary Association. These fifteen posters give scientific evidence of human unity, compare the three major divisions of mankind--white, black, and yellow--and answer some of the questions most often asked about race.

The titles of these 18 by 20 inch posters, designed for use in an average size classroom, or small auditorium, suggest their content: "What Is Race?" Why Are There Different Races?" "Nationalities Are Not Races," "Who Are the Aryans?" "The Jews Are Not a Race," "Inventions Have Come from All Races," "The Composition of the American Negro," "No Race Is Ape-Like," "The Negro Is an Integral Part of Our Culture," "Culture Is Not Inborn," and "The Foods We Eat Are a Gift from All Peoples."

"Why Are There Different Races?" is a drawing which shows man going from central Eurasia to all parts of the world. "As he advanced into the areas of hot sunlight and long summers to the South, those with darker skins were better able to survive. ...As he advanced into the North, those with lighter skins were better able to absorb the sunlight in the short months of summer and so store up a quantity of Vitamin D against the long, dark winter to come. ...The geographical differences between man are, however, of small magnitude when one considers fundamental likenesses."

"No Race Is Ape-Like" shows a black, a white, and a yellow man in the primitive stage. "Some people compare the human being with the ape but the human being is a very different animal. The ape wears a permanent fur coat; no human is gifted in quite that way. The northwest European, the Australian native and the Ainu people of northern Japan have more hair on their bodies than any other human beings. The ape has thin lips and not much nose. In human beings thick lips are characteristic of peoples of West Africa; thin lips are characteristic of peoples in northwest Europe; the rest of humanity has lips of varying degrees of thickness.

All peoples have the same number of bones in their bodies (206), the same internal organs, the same blood, the same skin, except larger or smaller amounts of two chemicals, and the same brain. The average brain size differs. The largest brain was that of an idiot; Raphael, Dante and Bach had small brains. Brain size is no measure of intelligence."

Poster sets of "The Races of Mankind" may be ordered from Mrs. Edmonia W. Grant, Director of Education, Race Relations Division, American Missionary Association, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York, for $5.00 per set. This price includes mailing costs within the United States. Included with each set is an annotated bibliography, "American Minority People during World War II."

To Directors of Agencies in Race Relations:

Simple, dramatic factual material can be especially valuable in a program to improve human relations. To this end we are developing materials such as those enclosed and described:

(1) The "Races of Man" posters which give visual presentation to significant facts about race and culture.

(2) "What Do You Know about Race?" a question and answer test. You are free to print this test in your publication and to mimeograph it for use in your groups.

(3) "American Minority People during World War II," an annotated bibliography of basic readings for Americans concerned about race relations. Group leaders interested in current problems use the sources listed to be brought up to date. You may want to review this bibliography in your publication; you may want to provide copies for your leadership.

(4) Christmas greeting cards with the dramatic message of interracial brotherhood.

If, after you examine these materials, you think that they can be useful to members of your groups, we should be glad to serve you. Prices are listed on those materials which are for sale.

May we look forward to hearing from you?

Very truly yours,

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT RACE?

By

Edmonia White Grant, Director of Education
Race Relations Division
American Missionary Association

1. The Germans are an Aryan race. True - False. False, because there is no Aryan race. The term Aryan applies to language spoken by a pre-historic people who spread over parts of Asia, including India and the Iranian Plateau. An Aryan is anyone who speaks an Aryan language, as Sanscrit, Armenian, Slavic, English, German, Yiddish, Latin, or Greek.

2. The Jews are a Semitic race. True - False. False, because Semitic applies to language. The Arabic and Hebrew languages are Semitic. Today, few Jews speak Hebrew as few Roman Catholics speak Latin. An Arab who speaks an Arabic language is as "Semitic" as a Jew who speaks Hebrew.

3. The Germans are not a pure white race. True - False. True, because there is no pure race of people. Biologically we produce pure races of animals by controlled breeding, by mating brothers and sisters, parents and children, and other close relatives. People do not mate in this way; that is why there is no pure race of people. In man there is only one race--the human race. There has not been enough incest in human relations to produce pure races of people. The German nation is composed of people of several physical types in about the same percentage as the French. So many waves of migrations have taken place in Europe that the people of any European country may have all kinds of ancestors: Cro-Magnons, Slavs, Mongols, Africans, Celts, Saxons and Teutons.

4. Skin color is the most important physical characteristic. True - False. False, because everyone (except albinos) has some of the two color chemicals, carotene (which gives a yellow tinge) and melanin (which gives a brown shade); the only difference is in the amount of carotene and melanin present in your skin.

5. The white, black and yellow people are as different from one another as dogs are from cats. True - False. False, because human anatomy which is the same all over the world proves the unity of the human species. Fertile children have been born from the mating of even the most extremely varied physical types of men and women. If mankind were a series of mutually infertile species, this unity would be disproved. In spite of close association cats and dogs do not mate, they are mutually infertile. But differentiated human types cross and re-cross.

6. Man's physical appearance is affected by his environment. True - False. True because man spread from somewhere in central Eurasia to all parts of the world. As he went toward the equator those with dark skins tended to survive because they could resist the strong rays of the sun and thus adjust to the long, hot summers. Dark pigment acts as a filter against the actinic rays of the sun. Of course, the strong rays of the sun made men darker too. Those who went northward tended to survive when they had lighter skin because they were better able to absorb the sunlight in the short summer months and to store up Vitamin D for the winter.

7. The Jews are not a race. True - False. True, because Jews are any people of any nationality or "racial" group who practice the religion of Judaism. There are Chinese Jews, Ethiopian Jews, Jews of India, American Negroes of Jewish faith, Polish Jews, Russian Jews, Italian Jews and many others.

8. All Jews have curved noses which distinguish them from other people. True - False. False, because the curved nose sometimes associated with Jewish people is found among millions of non-Jewish peoples in Eastern Europe and Western Asia. This is also true of other physical characteristics called "Jewish." Jews and non-Jews share alike the physical characteristics of the people in the land of their origin.

9. All the Danish people are typical or average Caucasians. True - False. False, because no nation of people conforms to the average set up for a racial group. The average Caucasian is an abstraction, a statistical concept useful to anthropologists engaged in measurement; as is the average Negroid or Mongoloid person. Thousands of people who consider themselves Caucasian must be measured in trying to find one who has the physical characteristics of an average Caucasian. The same is true for Negroid and Mongoloid people.

10. American Negroes look to Europe, Africa, and America for their ancestry. True - False. True, because American Negroes are a mixture of African, European and American white, and American Indian. Since the American Indian is classified as a Mongoloid, the American Negro is a representative of the three major physical types--Negroid, Mongoloid, and Caucasoid or black, yellow, and white. Many other people not classified as Negroes are combinations of these same three groups, as many people in Latin America. American Negroes look to various countries in Europe, to the American Indian, and to Africa for their ancestry. Very rarely does one find an American Negro who has only African ancestry. And most American Negroes are at least four generations removed from Africa, so greatly removed that there is no more attachment to Africa than there is to Europe. The combination of people which the American Negro represents gives added evidence of the unity of the human species.

11. If we add all the characteristically black, white and yellow people together we have only some of the people of the world. True - False. True, because the people who are known by the three classifications are the minority of the people of the world. The great majority are the "in between," these of various colors of tan and brown as well as other physical characteristics.

12. The blood of Negro and white people is the same. True - False. True, because all blood is classified according to type A, B, AB, and O. These four types are found among all peoples, Negro as well as white. A white American soldier who needs a blood transfusion may find a donor whose blood matches his among any people--Chinese, Negro, Indian, or any other. A white soldier who receives the blood of a Chinese or a Negro does not change in physical appearance because his physical characteristics were determined by genes, tiny cells inherited from both parents. Nor is there any way to tell the racial group of the donor from an examination of his blood. There is no Japanese blood, no German blood, no Negro blood, no English blood, no white blood.

13. All children of parents who are from different racial groups are inferior to both parents. True - False. False, because in Hawaii where there is no racial separatism, marriages between people of the most diverse "racial" groups take place in the churches, and the children of mixed marriages are not discriminated against but develop and hold positions according to their ability. In other places where hybrids or half-castes are subjected social discrimination, they appear to be inferior. White people who are discriminated against also appear to be inferior. But some white and some half individuals brought up as outcasts rise to positions of eminence. There is no biological evidence of the inferiority of the half-breeds. "Every civilized group of which we have record has been a hybrid group, a fact which poses effectually of the theory that hybrid peoples are inferior to pure-bred ones." Ralph Linton, "The Study of Man," New York: D. Appleton-Century, 1. p. 34.

14. All the foods we eat are a gift from ancient Europeans. True - False. False, because the crab-apple and the hazelnut are the only important foods contributed to our table by the ancient Europeans. Everything else we eat we have borrowed from some other people. If the contribution of the American Indian alone were removed we should have no kidney beans, lima beans, chocolate, corn, peanuts, pineapple, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, pumpkins, squash, avocado, tomatoes, tobacco or turkeys.

15. American inventions provide us with only some of our basic comforts. True - False. True, because modern inventions are built upon inventions of the past, inventions from all peoples. Here are some of them: Egyptians: copper, bronze, wheat, the plow, alphabet, ink, paper, glass, playing cards, checkers, chess; Babylonians: codified law, coined money, the arch; Hittites: horses as draft animals, iron; Assyrians: cotton, banks, postal system; Chaldeans: astronomy, the zodiac, the week, degrees of the circle; Arabs: camels, the use of milk, calculus, algebra, Arabic numerals, zero, coffee; Chinese: tea, porcelain, gunpowder, silk, rice, parasols, spectacles, mariner's compass, asbestos, kites, paper money, and the fingerprint system of identification.

Civilization, as we know it, has come from many sources; we add our contributions to this continuous, world-wide process.

Miss Grace E. Marr

Dear Miss Marr:

Dr. Mitchell has referred your letter of January 13th to me for reply. The plans of the American Nurses' Association to initiate "an intergroup relations project in approximately six different geographical areas of the United States" seems to us an excellent idea -- very sound in concept. We believe that it is only through involvement of the people most concerned in a given area of community activity that progress towards integration will come in various community services. The selection of project sites would seem to be the first opportunity to encourage such involvement.

We believe that there would be gains in raising yourquestion about appropriate states and cities with the president of the Nurses' Association in each of the Southern states. I believe that the judgment of Mrs. Laura Fitzsimmons (Pres. Georgia Association of Nursing, Veterans Administration Hospital, Augusta) should be sought as to whether the project would serve as an opportunity for enlarging the insights both of members of the profession and of the community at large in regard to the efforts of the American Nurses' Association to extend democratic practices. We hope that, by all means, one or two communities in the Southern region will be included among the project sights. Perhaps the choice of one might be the particular interests of the state association to impove its own practices. The other might be a state or a community already geared for an integrated approach to the objectives of the program.

Your basis for judgment is much better than ours on the specific places under either category.

It occurs to me that you will find many supporting community efforts in Tennessee.

We will hope to be kept in touch with developments in regard to this proposal. And will be happy to cooperate in such ways as ams possible at later stages.

With my cordial good wishes,

Dr. George Mitchell
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

The American Nurses' Association plans to initiate an intergroup relations project in approximately six different geographical areas of the United States. We would like to undertake the project only in those cities and/or states where the climate of opinion regarding race relations is conducive to the success of the project. As helpful as the newspaper, magazine and pamphlet articles following the May 17, 1954 decision of the Supreme Court in relation to public schools are, they do not quite meet our present need in deciding upon project sites. To meet the need of nurses who might be apprehensive about having the project started, especially in the South, we have need for statements from authoritative sources indicating:

1. whether or not it is sound to conduct a project, as described below, at this time, and

2. what states and cities, especially in the South, are appropriate for a project such as this.

We would like to request whatever advise or suggestion you may be able to make in relation to these questions. The final plans for the project will be completed as soon as qualified personnel have been appointed to conduct it. The tentative plan is as follows:

1. To undertake the project in from 6 to 10 racially heterogeneous communities where the nurses have expressed their willingness to cooperate.

2. To have the project conducted by a roving team including a project director, a research person, and a public relations person. This team to be assisted by an assistant project director, a committee of nurses and secretarial help in each community.

3. Plans for the implementation of the project in a given community to be modified in accord with the suggestions of an advisory committee composed of local social science and intergroup relations experts.

4. Headquarters for the roving team to be ANA headquarters at the above address; for the assistant project director and secretarial staff, space in the office of the district or state nurses association.

5. Steps in carrying out the project:

   a. An audit of the current status of integration of minority group members into schools of nursing; of minority group nurses into nursing service units in hospitals, public health agencies, et cetera; and of minority group nurses into the activities of the professional organizations. The audit to be conducted, in approximately 3 months, by the roving team in cooperation with the nursing and advisory committees. The roving team to remain in the community until

   b. A plan is developed by which to progress toward complete integration in nursing in the community under study.

   c. Execution of the plan by the assistant project director and the nurses on the committee with assistance from the roving team and local intergroup relations experts periodically and as needed.

   d. Regional conferences to be conducted simultaneously to orient nurses, employers of nurses, and--insofar as advisable--the community to the methods used and results achieved in order that they can apply the best methods in their own communities.

   e. Progress and final reports to be prepared. The project to be continued for 3 years in those communities where it is favorably received and to be discontinued in less than 3 years in any community where discontinuance is advisable.

In the event this brief summary of the project plans is inadequate as a basis for your reaction to the questions we have asked, please let us know and we will supply more complete information.

We would like to thank you, in advance, for whatever assistance you may be able to give in relation to these questions.

Sincerely yours,

Grace E. Marr

THE FUNCTIONS OF THE PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATION

Robert K. Merton

THE professional association[1] is an organization of practitioners who judge one another as professionally competent and who have banded together to perform social functions which they cannot perform in their separate capacity as individuals. It is typically a voluntary association. The degree to which it is voluntary may, however, differ greatly from case to case. It may range from the extreme in which the option to join is small since the penalties of not belonging are great, as in the case of county medical societies, to the other extreme, in which the option is large since the penalties for not belonging are negligible, as in the case of the more than seventy-five national engineering societies.

Professional associations differ also in their structure. They may be closely controlled from a central office or may allow considerable autonomy to local branches of the association. I do not, however, intend to explore these variations of structure, important as they are, for it is not its structure which most significantly characterizes the professional society, but its functions.

The professional association is as the professional association does: its manifest and latent social functions, not the structure designed to put these functions into effect, are its social excuse for being. That is why we can largely neglect, in this short examination, the organizational structure of the association in order to center upon its functions.

Organizational Aims and Functions

Just as function must be distinguished from structure, so must function be distinguished from the stated objectives of the organization. Professional associations tend to be alike in putting into their statements of purpose a strong affirmation that they are designed, in the first instance, to work through their specialized competences for the welfare of the community in general and of their respective clienteles in particular. The American Medical Association announces as one of its principal aims the steady improvement of health care (1); the American Bar Association, the promotion of the administration of justice (2); the American Nurses' Association, the improvement of nursing care for all the people. And so, similarly, through the roster of the hundreds of professional associations, great and small, in this country.

What the association professes as its aims may coincide with what it actually does—but again, it may not. The statements of public purpose do provide guide lines for gauging the measures to be taken by the association. This is true for declarations designed not only to reach the general (that is, the professionally uninstructed) public but also, as everyone connected with such associations knows, to reach the membership of the organization itself. The declarations of high purpose are not merely window dressing, although they are in perpetual danger of becoming so. This is particularly the case when the profession confronts a crisis in which the interests of its members seemingly or actually conflict with the interests of the public.

Nevertheless, it would be too facile and often mistaken to assume that such statements of public purpose merely render lip service to social values. Even when they are being neglected in practice, they afford a potentiality of control over actions contemplated by the association and serve to bring these actions into line with the announced purpose.

Occasional or sometimes sustained departures of a professional association from its declared public purposes can result from the multiple and not always easily reconcilable functions of the association. For example, the association is committed to look out for the economic and social welfare of practitioners in the profession, for if the membership organization does not do so, who will? Again, it is typically dedicated also to the objective of raising the standards of professional education, for if the organized body of informed professionals does not take on this task, who else can? Yet sometimes objectives such as these, principled as they are, may collide, or may seem to collide, with the interests of the public. A profession with reason to suppose that its members are not receiving an income commensurate with their worth may press for a rise which many in the public will judge excessive. (This sort of thing helps form the image of the professions as a "conspiracy against the public," so energetically propagated by Bernard Shaw.) Or the association, on behalf of its apparently unimpeachable purpose of improving the competence of practitioners, may call for a great increase in public funds for advancing professional education. This capitalization of brain power may raise the cost of the (more effective) professional service. This, too, may not sit well with laymen who feel themselves twice penalized: once, by taxation and again, by higher fees for professional care. They can tell when the fiscal shoe pinches but they cannot so easily distinguish excellent professional care from good, and good from mediocre or inferior care.

Beyond these potential sources of conflict, there is the further possibility that a professional association may, for a time, come to be in the hands of those who conscientiously put the interests of the profession above all other interests, if only because they identify themselves so strongly with their profession that they can see the rest of the world only through the biased perspectives afforded by their professional spectacles.

It may be considered tactless to admit this possibility of a conflict of interest between a profession and the public, but it is unwise to deny it. Much as we should like it to be, we must not suppose that "all things work together for good." The social world is not inevitably a natural harmony of interests. At least in the short run, it is not the case that what is good for the profession of medicine or of law or of nursing is necessarily best for the community, and conversely. Only if these potential and actual conflicts are recognized and admitted, rather than put aside as an unpleasant embarrassment and systematically denied, can they be mitigated and worked out. The "irreconcilable" can be reconciled only if the sources of conflict are anticipated, continually appraised, and dealt with through that manner of equitable adjustment which man has proved, in his long history, he can occasionally achieve.

Every professional association faces the difficult task of trying to reach and to maintain a delicate balance between fulfilling its functions for the community and protecting its professional constituency from exploitation by the community. The not too distant days in which the nurse was rewarded for her dedication to high purpose by a dismally low income remind us that the balance can be lost at the expense of the professional group, just as numerous other instances remind us that it can be lost at the expense of the clientele.

This may be enough to suggest what I mean by saying that the public objectives affirmed by a professional association need not coincide with their actual functions. Now, if structure provides only the machinery for the performance of functions and if stated objectives provide only a guide to the selection of functions, what, then, are the basic functions which the professional association actually performs? Or, to substitute momentarily for the many-meaninged word "function," what do professional associations actually do, and what are some of the ramified consequences of what they do?

Dr. Robert Merton is professor of sociology at Columbia University, and consultant sociologist for the American Nurses' Association. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and former president of the American Sociological Society. Co-editor of the recently published book, The Student-Physician, he is engaged in sociological studies of medical education conducted by the Columbia University Bureau of Applied Social Research, of which he is associate director.

Types of Social Functions

The professional association does so many things that, if we are to understand them, we must find a way of sorting them out into their several kinds. For this purpose, we can draw upon a way of thinking about the social functions of an organization which sociologists have found helpful. This involves designating the human units for which these activities are functional: individuals, subgroups, the organization, and the larger society(3). Some functions of the professional association primarily affect individual members of the profession (and indirectly their clientele); others have consequences primarily for the profession as a whole and for the association as its corporate expression; and still others primarily affect the larger social system in which individuals and organizations find themselves. This notation of kinds of multiple functions has the further merit of sensitizing us to the possibility that some activities of a professional association which are functional for one or more of these units can be dysfunctional for others—that is, can interfere with their adaptations—a possibility to which I have already referred.

Functions for Individual Practitioners

Perhaps the most pervasive and far-reaching function of the professional association for the individual practitioner consists in giving him social and moral support to help him perform his roles as a professional. The organization helps see to it that professional people need not cope with their professional problems alone. This supportive function does not require the organization to cater to their weaknesses; rather, it can serve to reinforce their strengths.

Particularly in the salaried professions, as distinct from the prevalently free-lance, fee-paid professions, the lone professional cannot effectively safeguard his social and economic welfare. There may be a considerable gap between the prevaling schedule of salaries and the schedule which, in all equity, should obtain(4). For generations, this has been notoriously true of the salaries of college professors. Whether through collective bargaining, which is still infrequent among professional associations, or through the less direct pressures of appeal to the public opinion, which is the characteristic though immediately less effective mode, the association works to reduce the extent of this gap between what is and what should be in the sphere of salaries.

The protective functions of the association for the individual practitioner are not limited to the narrowly economic matter of salaries. Others operate indirectly to improve his conditions of work. They are designed to enable him to do his professional job more effectively, to the further benefit of his clients. (The clientele, typically, shows no awareness of the benefits they derive from the work of the professional association.)

In the professions, as in all other forms of activity, sustained motivation is necessary for superior performance of roles. These motives to do well must be harnessed to the institutionalized system of rewards. This is one of the functions of associations, particularly of salaried professionals, which press for the provision of opportunities for advancement in accord with the growth of professional experience and competence of the practitioner.

The association works also to help prepare the practitioner for the more effective discharge of his professional roles. It acts on the philosophy that professional education is a lifelong process; establishes institutes to advance the education of the practitioner; protects both him and the public by working toward legally enforced standards of professional competence; and helps motivate practitioners to develop their skills and to extend their knowledge.

These and related functions can be summed up by observing that, in the professions, each practitioner is his brother's keeper. Each is expected to live up to or to exceed the acceptable standards of practice, and to see to it that others also do so. This means that the profession develops social and moral ties among its members who enter into a community of purpose. This cannot be accomplished under a system of laissez-faire, which can be freely translated, in this context, as a hands-off policy with each for himself and, in the ensuing disorder, let public indignation take the hindmost. It can be accomplished through an association of professional people which, through its solidarity of purpose, expresses a commitment to professional ideals and, through its solidarity of organization, polices both professionals and nonprofessionals to insure that conditions for living up to these ideals are provided.

This review, it may have been noted, has uniformly dealt with functions of the professional association for members of the profession rather than for members of the association only. This was not a lapse. It was meant to emphasize the important point that members of the profession who are not members of the association typically receive an unearned increment of social, moral, and economic gain from the work of their professional colleagues in the association. In the not inappropriate idiom, those who remain outside the organization are the "free-loaders": they do not pay their way, either in dues or in kind. True, the free-loaders in a profession often do not see themselves as such. They do not realize that they are nonpaying and nonparticipating beneficiaries of the sustained work done by those who make up the associations representing their profession. Yet they are in much the same condition as citizens who would avoid paying taxes and taking part in public service while benefiting from the taxes and activities of the rest who contribute to the commonwealth. It is a task confronting every professional association to convert the free-loader into the member, preferably an actively participating member, not only that he may do his share of the work which the organized profession needs to have done but also in order that his voice may be heard when the organization formulates its policies.

Functions for the Profession

We can now drop the first tier of functions—those for the individual practitioner—and proceed to the second, composed of functions for the profession as a whole. As I have suggested, although the same organizational activities tend to have both types of functions, some of these can be seen to operate primarily for individual practitioners and others primarily for the profession as a collectivity.

The foremost obligation of the association is to set rigorous standards for the profession and to help enforce them: standards for the quality of personnel to be recruited into the profession; standards for the training and education of the recruits; standards for professional practice; and standards for research designed to enlarge the knowledge on which the work of the profession rests. The association must be in the vanguard. The standards it sets must be more exacting than those with which the lay public might be content. After all, only the informed professionals can know the potentialities and not merely the current realities of professional practice. They are the custodians of the professional traditions of the past; through their constituted organizations, they must also try to anticipate the future and continually raise their sights.

To say that the professional association must be unendingly engaged in pressing for higher standards of personnel, education, research, and practice is to say that it is committed to dissatisfaction with the state of affairs in the profession as it is. At least in its charter of purposes, the professional association repudiates that final smugness which assumes that everything possible has already been attained. It is thereby committed to keeping members of the profession from resting easily on their oars, even if they should feel so inclined. They must be brought to see that today is tomorrow's history, that the motto of the Passavant Hospital holds for all the professions: "more than yesterday, less than tomorrow."

In this particular sense, the professional association is a kind of organizational gadfly, stinging the profession into new and more demanding formulations of purpose. It must therefore be prepared to become a target for hostile criticism by those members of the profession who find themselves or feel themselves disadvantaged by the continuing forward thrust toward raising the standards of the profession.

This is only another instance of the "non-contemporaneity of the contemporaneous," of the co-existence of generations. At any time in the history of a profession, its members are variously trained and variously competent, since they have entered the field at different times. The less highly trained, naturally enough, look with some displeasure, if not despair, at the rising standards of qualifications for professional practice. To cope with this familiar problem, organizations have invented the device of the "grandfather clause," which exempts current members from having to meet the newly instituted and more rigorous standards of the profession. Even so, there typically remains a residue of resistance and hostility toward the policy of heightening standards.

This is inherent in the process of growth of a profession and those who staff the professional association should know it. They should know that the life of officers in a forward-moving professional association is not a tranquil one. They should realize that an excess of tranquility may only register the growth of complacency in the profession and the decline of responsible criticism among its constituted representatives. They should sense that the quiet organizational life may only mean that the profession is not living up to the commitments which it, in effect, made when it accepted the monopoly of rights and immunities conferred on it by society. If the obligation to raise standards for the profession makes life difficult at times, it is only the price which the truly professional association must be prepared to pay.

Since the dynamic of every profession is provided by the growth of its specialized knowledge, the professional association has the further function of advancing research in its field, either directly through research agencies of the association or, more often, indirectly through help to other individuals and groups in the profession. It can provide a clearing house of professional knowledge; it can help make the research career a feasible and honorable one in the profession; it can work toward the expansion of opportunities for research. In this respect, the professional association has elements of the learned society just as in some of its protective functions for individual practitioners, it has elements, regulated by a professional ethic, of the trade union(5).

The function of facilitating research does not stand alone. If the results of research are not disseminated among the profession, they are inert, powerless to move the profession forward. The association therefore establishes professional journals devoted to the reporting and spreading of new knowledge as well as ancillary house-organ journals devoted to information on the changing role of the profession in society.

By working to raise the standards of personnel, education, practice, and research, the association best serves a latent function for the profession, a function not directly contemplated in these activities which have worth in their own right. To raise these standards tends to improve the social standing of the profession. It lays the groundwork for a deserved rise in social esteem. The rise of a profession in the eyes of the community is not merely the result of what is often described as "public relations," of persuading the public that the profession should be more highly regarded. As publicists know, the development of a "public relations" program is no adequate substitute for the reality to be reported.

The flow of authentic information to the public about what is actually taking place in the profession has as its principled role the narrowing or closing of the gap between these actual advances and the public understanding of what these mean for the quality of professional service. If the face which the profession presents to the public is more attractive than the reality, the temporary rise in social esteem will only be the prelude to a great fall. It is the task of the association to improve the effectiveness of the profession; the task of its department of public relations to see to it that the degree of improvement becomes widely known. The art of meiosis—that is, of sustained understatement—is the art appropriate to the public relations arm of a truly professional association.

Functions for the Society

The functions of the professional association for individual practitioners and for the profession are, in the main, conspicuous ones, readily identifiable by those who would look and see. But one of the association's principal functions for the society of which it is a part is far from evident; it has often gone wholly unnoticed. This is its function, as one of the great intermediate associations, to help prevent the atomization of society into a sandheap of individuals, each intent on pursuing his own private interests. Such an atomized condition is a step toward totalitarianism, which consolidates power over these socially disconnected individuals into a single center. As one thoughtful observer of this process has described it for a case in which totalitarianism came to prevail:

> The destruction of the independent labor unions in Nazi Germany was followed by the prohibition of independent economic organizations of every kind. It was not the fact of labor that was central; it was the social fact of union. All autonomous organizations were destroyed and made illegal: professions, service clubs, voluntary mutual aid groups, fraternal associations, even philatelist and musical societies. Such organizations were regarded, and correctly, by the totalitarian government as potential sources of future resistance, if only because in them people were brought together for purposes, however innocent, that did not reflect those of the central government. As organizations they interposed themselves between the people as a society and the people as the masses. (6)

In a word, the professional association helps furnish the social bonds through which society coheres. It provides unity in action, social cohesion even without contiguity. The association mediates between the practitioner and profession, on the one hand, and, on the other, their social environment, of which the most important parts are allied occupations and professions, the universities, the local community, and the government.

The association relates each profession to allied professions. These relations may be faulty—they often are—but they are less faulty than they would be were it not for the numerous organizational liaisons which typically develop. It should also be admitted, even though it be regarded as another tactless observation, that the association also seeks to validate the scope, not infrequently the expanding scope, of the jurisdiction of the profession and to safeguard it against the rival claims of neighboring professions and technical occupations.

This pressure toward expansion derives in part from advancement of professional knowledge. It often produces strains and stresses on the relationships between neighboring professions. This problem only underscores the importance of instituting and maintaining effective liaison between professions, for only if this is firmly established can the relationship bear the stresses which initially conflicting claims to jurisdiction impose upon it. Even so, it is wise to expect residual conflicts of interest between professions which remain unresolved. This is part of the costs of a pluralist society in which decisions about the appropriate division of professional work are not imposed from above. Without strong professional associations, the problem would probably be multiplied and intensified.

The many-sided relations of the profession to the government are also mediated through the professional association. To do more than mention this fact would be to enter upon a long and complex account. It is perhaps enough to refer to the continuing role of the association in formulating policies for legislative enactment and in monitoring proposed legislation which bears upon the work and goals of the profession.

In its relation with the varied groups which compose the social environment of the profession, the association must develop a sufficient consensus to be able to speak authentically and authoritatively on behalf of the profession. Were a profession such as nursing to be heard through some 400,000 separate voices, with each professional nurse proclaiming her own views and sentiments, only cacophony could result. The association seeks to create a concert of purpose instead.

achieving a flexible consensus of values and policies. It must not only appear to speak for the profession; it must stand on firm ground in doing so. Yet it must provide for dissent, even though it cannot allow dissent to result in noise. To accomplish this result—i.e., an adaptable consensus with full opportunity for responsible dissent—requires formidable feats of organization which cannot, of course, be adequately examined in this short paper. A few general observations may nevertheless be in order.

I begin with the tried, trite, and true proposition that the association must provide two-way avenues for communication: ideas, problems, prospects, experience, and objectives must come to the association from members of the profession, and these, having been examined by democratically elected representatives of the profession, must then go back to the constituency for review. Only the organization of local constituent groups can provide the forum in which issues can be threshed out before action on them is taken nationally.

The professional association, like other large-scale organizations committed to democratic procedure, is confronted with the enduring temptation to transform the avenues of communication into one-way streets, with information and decisions moving only from the top of the organization. Unless the structure provides for reciprocal communication, the association works through control from above, whatever its pretensions to the contrary.

A price must be paid for the two-way street; at times, an unconscionably heavy price. For to wait upon the informed comment, and not merely the reluctant assent, of a far-flung and varied constituency often slows up the rate of advancing the work of the profession. But though this is at times a heavy drag on progress, it is more often, I suspect, only a seeming one. For until the great majority of the profession are themselves persuaded of the merits of proposed changes, any changes which are instituted are apt to be nominal rather than genuine. Only the men and women doing the work of the profession can translate proposals for improvement into reality.

To be able to speak for the profession, the association must be representative of as many of the profession as possible. This means that the association must strive for what the sociologist describes as "completeness."(7) By completeness is meant that all those eligible for membership actually are members. Of course, no professional association has achieved completeness and associations differ greatly in the extent to which they have approached it. After its first half-century, for example, the American Medical Association could count among its members only 9 percent of the 100,000 physicians then in practice; today, more than a century after its founding, somewhat more than two-thirds of physicians are enrolled.

Associations of about the same size may differ substantially in the degree to which they approximate completeness and, consequently, in the extent of the authority and influence they can exercise. That is why professional associations are in principle committed to the effort to enlarge their membership to include as large a proportion as possible of those eligible for membership. As spokesman for the profession, the association must strive to move ever closer to completeness, knowing that this will remain an asymptotic goal —one which is approached but never fully reached. In this way, the association can better serve the multiple functions which are both its obligation and its reward.

Thanks for your good letter of January 8. I am enclosing as you requested a list of the state organizations which cooperate with SRC; yes, you have permission to list them in the appendix of the program manual.

By the by, we would appreciate a copy of the manual when it is completed. I am sure the state staff would, too.

The ANA will sadly miss your steady hand and ready mind. I hope you are staying in the intergroup relations field. There is real need for your skills and special abilities.

Dear Fred:

Just a note to let you know that we are in process of completing a program manual to guide our constituents in their further action to improve intergroup relations in nursing. We recommend to our constituent units that they consult with representatives of public and private intergroup relations organizations in planning their Intergroup Relations Programs.

We would like to include address lists of the local affiliates, including the headquarters office, of the Southern Regional Council, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the National Urban League and the National Conference of Christians and Jews in the appendix of the program manual.

May we have your permission to include an address list of the affiliates of the Southern Regional Council? If so, may we also have an address list of these affiliates by return mail, if possible, please?

The date on which I will leave the staff of the American Nurses' Association is January 30th. I am leaving on a very happy note with real pleasure with the progress which this association is making in its efforts to effect sound intergroup relations in nursing and in nursing practice.

Dear Fred:

Our warm thanks for your letter of January 13th and the list of state organizations which cooperate with SRC which you enclosed. We will include it in the index of our program manual.

We look forward to sending a copy of the manual to you when it is completed. The manual is going to be sold to our state and district constituents and the price for it has not yet been determined. We would like to make copies of the manual available to members of your state staff but will be able to do so only at the cost which we are charging our constituents.

I appreciate your kind words about my leaving ANA staff and I am happy, however, that it is possible for me to leave because the association has established a sound, effective program. I do plan to stay in intergroup relations since this and international relations are my primary non-personal interests. I will spend considerably more time working with a citizens' committee in our neighborhood to improve conditions there, and I plan to write in the areas of intergroup relations and human relations generally. I hope that these will prove to be successful ventures but at least I will try them.

AMERICAN NURSES' ASSOCIATION
2 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

A planning guide for state and district nurses' associations and bulletin editors.

Vol. X, No. 2 February 1959

IN THIS ISSUE

This issue of Guide Lines reports progress being made by SNA's and DNA's in the field of Intergroup Relations, and contains suggestions for planning program promotion to help remove the barriers of discrimination wherever they apply to professional nurses. More detailed guidance will soon be available in the form of an Intergroup Relations Program Manual to be published later this year.

SNA's MAKE PROGRESS IN I. R. PROGRAMS

The recently published Summary Report on the Status of Intergroup Relations Programs in State and Territorial Nurses Associations indicates considerable progress in this area. Compiled by the ANA Research and Statistics Unit, the summary contains information obtained through questionnaires supplied by 36 SNA's. The report shows that: the majority of these SNA's included in their bylaws the function "to develop and promote actively a program for intergroup relations"; twelve of the respondents have appointed special committees on intergroup relations, and of these, seven are currently active; other SNA's are dealing with IR problems through their boards of directors and through their professional counseling and placement service; surveys have been made by some states; and special programs, convention speeches and workshops on intergroup relations are other tools used by SNA's.

Specific action taken during the past year involved a number of areas. Fourteen SNA's reported action in the area of economic security. In eight states, minimum employment practices now contain nondiscrimination clauses and in one SNA, a platform was adopted calling for the elimination of discrimination

INTERGROUP RELATIONS PROGRAM REQUIRES CAREFUL PLANNING

How can SNA's and DNA's promote effective intergroup relations programs? Techniques vary in different parts of the country, but in any state or district careful planning is necessary if maximum results are to be obtained. A number of steps may be taken in promoting an active program:

- Organize Adequately: Include the function, "to actively promote the intergroup relations program" in SNA or DNA bylaws. Appoint a special committee on intergroup relations composed of nurses representing the racial or ethnic groups in the state or district, and provide for participation in program promotion by all SNA or DNA program and section committees.

- Seek Guidance and Assistance: The ANA staff can assist SNA's and DNA's in obtaining clear understanding of the intergroup relations problem in nursing and methods which can be used in program promotion. Staff from public and private intergroup relations organizations can help analyze the problem as it exists in specific states and cities and provide information about methods found most successful in the area. Some of the agencies specifically prepared to assist SNA's and DNA's include: The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the National Urban League, and the Southern Regional Council. State and city commissions against discrimination, human relations centers in universities, social welfare agencies and church groups are also sources of information, guidance and assistance.

- Effect Fair Membership Practices: Hold meetings where all SNA and DNA members will be accommodated and served alike. Adopt policies and practices of nondiscrimination in PC&PS and professional registries. Encourage nondiscrimination in the election of officers, appointment of committees, selection of program participants, selection of SNA and

DNA representatives in community affairs and representation in the SNA and DNA publications. These practices help develop an environment which will encourage members to bring their questions and problems to the SNA or DNA for objective discussion and action.

- Assess Intergroup Problems in Nursing: Make use of the "Index to Assist SNA's and DNA's in Assessing Intergroup Relations in Nursing." This questionnaire can be used in determining whether or not discrimination exists in your state or district. (Copies of the index may be obtained free of charge from ANA headquarters.) Make a study of the descriptive analysis of discrimination in nurse employment which will be distributed to SNA's and DNA's this spring. You may also want to conduct local surveys of schools of nursing and agencies that employ nurses and familiarize yourself with the problems known to your registrars and PC&PS counselors.

- Keep Members Informed: Nurses need to know the facts about intergroup relations problems and how they affect nursing. For example, what is the effect of discrimination on their own education, practice, economic security and welfare? What civil rights laws exist in your state? What are other organizations doing in the field of intergroup relations, and what progress is being made by your own SNA and DNA? Keep members informed through speakers at meetings, SNA and DNA bulletins, and through local newspaper publicity.

- Conduct Programs and Workshops on Intergroup Relations: SNA workshops are valuable in preparing DNA leaders in program promotion and in informing, guiding and assisting DNA members. Involve ANA or SNA staff, local intergroup relations consultants and associations which have integrated successfully. Integrate intergroup relations concepts and principles in all appropriate SNA and DNA programs. Hold DNA workshops for DNA members representing all sections.

Encourage members to attend university workshops on human relations, and community programs on intergroup relations. Special programs might also be planned for such occasions as Brotherhood Week and Human Rights Day.

ECONOMIC SECURITY PROGRAM PROMOTES RACIAL EQUALITY

The Washington State Nurses Association has made tangible progress in promoting racial equality in the economic security program. In ten of the twelve contracts negotiated or re-negotiated during the first six months of 1958, clauses were included stating that there should be no discrimination in the hospital's employment conditions with regard to race, creed or color. The ten contracts covered twenty-two hospitals and represent two-thirds of the contracts in existence in Washington.

- Obtain Support of Groups Allied to Nursing: It is important to let allied health groups know what you are doing about intergroup relations. State and local units of other nursing organizations, schools of nursing, state boards of nursing, departments of nursing service in the field of industry and public health, state hospital associations, medical organizations, and civic groups concerned with recruitment of nurse students or with health care -- all need to be informed about your progress in this field. You might plan conferences on this subject, distribute program material to leaders of the groups and invite them to send representatives to participate in programs on intergroup relations.

- Participate in the Mary Mahoney Awards Competition: Be prepared, about five months prior to each ANA biennial convention, for the Mary Mahoney Award to the person or group of persons who made the most significant contribution to the improvement of intergroup relations in nursing in their state. SNA and DNA members should be encouraged to suggest nominees. DNA's should submit the name of their nominee to the SNA which in turn evaluates SNA nominees and submits one nomination for the award to the ANA.

- Evaluate Your Progress: From time to time, you will need to evaluate your program and to take stock of the progress you are making. SNA's can use the annual ANA report form as a measuring device and compare each year's report with SNA reports in former years.

ANALYSIS TO BE COMPLETED ON DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES

The descriptive analysis of discriminatory employment practices in nursing, now being compiled by the ANA Research and Statistics Unit, is scheduled to be completed by the end of February. The analysis is based on information obtained from public and private intergroup relations organizations, nurses professional registries and professional counseling and placement service offices. It will be forwarded to SNA's and DNA's for their use in program planning. The analysis will not include names of institutions or persons involved, and the data is to be restricted to internal use throughout the ANA in its work to improve intergroup relations.

in all aspects of nurse employment.

Some states reported efforts to open new opportunities for Negro nurses through SNA professional counseling and placement services, and there is evidence that increasing numbers of minority group nurses are using the registries.

In the field of legislation, one state indicated that it had actively supported bills directed toward protecting civil rights.

A number of SNA's reported the election of officers and the appointment of committee members belonging to minority groups. Nurses from racial and ethnic minority groups are serving on various committees of twenty-two SNA's.

Fourteen states used members of minority groups as speakers or resource persons during the past year. And various SNA's indicated that they consulted with or utilized the services of other groups specializing in human relations.

Copies of the summary report for 1958 have been sent to all state executive secretaries and additional copies are available to DNA's. Since the report contains concrete program information, many SNA's and DNA's will want to make it available to their program and section committees as a guide to action.

ROCKEFELLER GRANT AWARDED TO FOUNDATION PROJECT

The American Nurses' Foundation has received a grant of $9,500 from the Rockefeller Foundation supporting for, a third year, the International Nursing Project which began in November 1956.

The project consists of interviews with selected foreign nurses working in this country under the ANA exchange program. Its object is to secure information on the personal and professional needs and expectations of these nurses and how they are met. Mrs. Jeanne Broadhurst, ANA research associate is conducting the research.

In addition to interviews, field visits are made to the communities and hospitals or agencies, and during the past two years approximately 200 nurses from abroad have been visited in the field.

Two reports have been presented to the Committee on Nursing in International Affairs of the ANA and a final report of the project will be prepared during the current year.

New PC&PS Location

Moving day for the national office of the ANA Professional Counseling and Placement Service is expected to be during the last week in February. Plans are being made to move the ANA PC&PS office from 37 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, to the new ANA headquarters office at 10 Columbus Circle, New York. The new telephone number will be JUdson 2-7230.

Foundation Committee Appointed

Appointed to the Technical Committee of the American Nurses' Foundation at the December meeting of the board of directors were: Isabel Harris, Minneapolis, Minn., chairman; Margaret Arnstein, Washington, D.C.; Katherine J. Hoffman, Seattle, Wash.; Everett G. Hughes, Chicago, Ill.; John F. Marchand, M.D., New York, N.Y., and Ira De A. Reid, Haverford, Pa. Committee members were appointed to serve for a period of two years. The Technical Committee reviews applications for research funds and recommends areas of needed research.

Report On Disaster Nursing Valuable to SNA's

The Report of the Work Conference on Disaster Nursing held in 1956, contains much information SNA's will find valuable in developing their program of planning and training for national defense. This extensive report contains all the speeches, discussions and ideas presented at the Work Conference, and many of them can be implemented locally. Copies of the report are available at cost from ANA headquarters. The price is $5.

Eleanor Loija to Head INSA

Mrs. Eleanor Loija, R. N., has accepted the position of assistant executive secretary, INSA section, and will join headquarters staff February 16.

Mrs. Loija was formerly an instructor at Boston University School of Nursing, and has held numerous other positions including: psychiatric nursing consultant, Department of Mental Health, Louisville, Ky.; director of nursing service and education, Medfield State Hospital, Harding, Mass.; and night supervisor, Choate Memorial Hospital, Woburn, Mass.

Mrs. Loija attended the Northeast Baptist Training School for Nursing at Roxbury, Mass., was a student at the University of Hawaii, and received her B. S. and M. S. degrees from Boston University School of Nursing.

Recent Articles on I.R.

American Journal of Nursing articles which deal with intergroup relations program promotion include: "General Duty Nurses and the Intergroup Relations Program," May 1958; and "Intergroup Relations and Professional Registries," February 1959.

March AJN to Feature Life of Mary M. Roberts

The March issue of the American Journal of Nursing will feature a story and photographs from the life of nursing leader Mary M. Roberts, who died January 11 at the Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in New York.

Miss Roberts, a pioneer in the field of nursing for half a century, had received many national honors. She was editor of the AJN from 1921 to 1949, and has been editor emeritus since. Miss Roberts was the author of two books on nursing -- "American Nursing, History and Interpretation," published in 1954, and "The Army Nurse Corps, Yesterday and Today," only recently completed.

March is Red Cross Month

Next month is traditionally Red Cross Month throughout the nation, and this year marks the 50th anniversary of Red Cross Nursing Service. Through its extensive educational activities, the American Red Cross has made a substantial contribution toward raising health standards in our country, and is supported by the ANA in its campaign for members and funds.

National Health Forum

The 1959 National Health Forum, sponsored by member agencies of the National Health Council, will be held March 17 - 19 at the Palmer House, Chicago, Ill. The Forum will consider means of combating an estimated one billion dollar loss, through ill-health of the nation's workers. Leaders in the fields of industry, labor, medicine and public health will attend, and the program should be of special interest to nurses working in occupational health.

My dear Mr. Herring:

Perhaps you have already received an "official" invitation (and acceptance of your willingness) to participate on March 6, with the panel of speakers for the Desegregation Committee of the American Ortho-psychiatric Asso.

I asked Dr Lauper, because of the shortness of the time, to send you a copy of the invitation which had been sent to the other - Dr. Benj. Fine, Prof. Melvin Tumin, Mr. Louis Redding, and chairman, Dr. Stewart Cook.

I want to tell you how glad we are that you will come. I could not get Dr Oscar Cohen to-day as he's away until to-morrow when I will get to work on the money for your travel up here.

Meanwhile, we'd like you to plan 15-20 minutes of talking on what your experiences are in re Desegregation process & what from your view, could be the kind of help which might be needed from professional people as make up our membership: MDs, psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, anthropologists etc. I'll be in touch with you further & hope to see you during 2/13-14.

I do wish that it were possible to write an individual letter to you as a participant in the 1958 annual meeting program. It is unfortunate because of limitations of staff and time that it is not possible to dictate more than 400 letters that would be involved.

Both of us, however, would like very much to convey to you our deep appreciation for the unique value of your presentation to the 1958 annual meeting. There has been almost uniform enthusiasm expressed about the high level of content presented by authors of papers, panel participants, workshop people, chairmen, and discussants. I do wish that we could convey to you some of the individual comments that were made on your particular part in the program.

Many thanks, again, for your contribution to the 1958 annual meeting success and your fine cooperation with the Association in facilitating the work of the program.

September 1947

* * * * * * * * AMERICAN CHILDREN NEED YOUR HELP * * * * * * * *

The shocking neglect of millions of American boys and girls has for too long been a matter of both official record and public indifference. Here are a few facts from official congressional reports as to the state of our Nation's children:

EDUCATION: Tens of thousands of schools are either closed or underteachered because school districts do not have the money to keep schools open and to pay teachers. Two million American children of school age do not attend any school.

CHILD HEALTH: Far too many children are suffering from illnesses which medical science knows how to prevent, and millions of children grow up with physical and mental handicaps without the benefits of the medical care they need: 75% of American children need dental care; 5,000,000 have defects in vision; 1,000,000 have hearing defects; 500,000 are affected by rheumatic fever and rheumatic heart disease, etc., etc., etc.

CHILD NUTRITION: The large number of young men, rejected by Selective Service during World War II, whose physical deficiencies are directly traceable to poor nutrition in childhood, emphasize the fact that the nutrition of American children has been inadequate. The Surgeon General of the United States has testified that 70% of the boys who had poor nutrition 10 to 12 years ago were rejected by Selective Service.

These are shameful facts of which no American mother or father can be proud. These are not merely a dull conglomeration of statistics. These are boys and girls who are being deprived of their American birthright to a good education and a fair opportunity to realize the full promise of better and richer democratic life.

A PLAN OF ACTION

The American Parents Committee - after consultation with leading members of Congress and many child welfare experts and educators - has marked out the following as immediate steps which the American people can take to correct these intolerable conditions. The American Parents Committee is calling upon mothers and fathers and others concerned with the welfare of children to work for the immediate enactment of federal legislation -

1. To provide federal grants to the States to assist them in eliminating inequalities in educational opportunities.

2. To provide federal grants to the States to assist them in giving school health examinations and in correcting the physical and mental defects found among school children.

3. To provide increased federal grants for the expansion of the school lunch program which is one of our best weapons in the war against malnutrition.

This is a practical program of action! In fact, Congressmen are now making up their minds on these three important measures affecting millions of American children. When Congress reconvenes in January these three measures will come up for consideration. If Congressmen feel that the American public is indifferent about these problems the bills will be shelved as they have been in the past years. However, if they get a flood of letters supporting these bills from tens of thousands of mothers and fathers, Parent-Teacher Associations, child welfare agencies and others, the bills will be passed.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION BILL
(Senate bill 472 and House bill 2953)

This bill authorizes annual federal grants of $300,000,000 to the States to assist them in reducing inequalities in educational opportunities. States having proportionately more children and less financial ability to educate them would receive proportionately larger grants. State and local control of educational policies and administration is strictly guaranteed. Thus, this bill recognizes that while the primary obligation to educate our children rests on the States and local communities, the Federal Government must assume some responsibility of seeing that every American child has an opportunity for an education whether the community in which he lives can afford it or not. As a congressional committee put it: "Citizens of the States are also citizens of the Nation."

This bill had already been approved by the Senate committee which studied it and is now on the calendar of the Senate for consideration. The House subcommittee which held extensive hearings on the bill has also approved it. Both committees reported that federal aid for education is the only practical method of eradicating the numerous educational slums which are a disgrace to our Nation.

NATIONAL SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES BILL

This bill authorizes annual federal grants of $10,000,000 to the States in order to assist them in the important work of giving school health examinations and help in correcting the physical and mental defects found among school children. Each State would determine for itself how it wants to and can provide school health services. While all States now carry on some health work among school children - on the whole this work is hopelessly inadequate. The passage of this bill would give needed financial aid for carrying on this very important work. As a Nation we can no longer tolerate conditions under which so many American children come to adult life with physical and mental defects which can be prevented or corrected at any early age.

Significantly, this is the only child health bill which received a hearing in the House of Representatives this year. The long list of health experts who testified for the bill is a measure of its soundness. Not a single witness appeared against it. The Chief of the United States Children's Bureau testified that under this bill much could be done to discover and correct defects and conditions which interfere with the normal growth and development and educational progress of school children. A Senate hearing has been promised.

NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM

Of the 26,000,000 school children between the ages of 5-17, nearly 8,000,000 are now participating in the school lunch program. This is undoubtedly our Nation's most important program for the prevention of malnutrition among school children. Yet, we must report to you that this program is now in serious jeopardy. Here are the facts.

During the previous school year, the Federal Government appropriated $81,000,000 for this program. When this came up for consideration this year, it looked for a while that Congress might eliminate the program entirely or reduce the appropriation so that more than half the States could no longer carry on. Because of the great public support of the program, however, Congress finally approved a reduced appropriation of $65,000,000. It should be carefully noted, however, that the joint Senate-House Committee in charge of this appropriation issued the following warning to the States regarding future funds for this purpose:

> "The conferees on the part of both the House and Senate have agreed to direct attention to the fact that in the consideration of funds for the school-lunch program they have emphasized that it is essentially a local program and that the States have not done their full share in complying with the spirit of the matching provisions contained in the National School Lunch Act. * * * The conferees on the part of both Houses desire to make it abundantly clear, therefore, that . . . they are now placing the respective States on notice with respect to their obligations under this program and that failure of the State legislatures to act in the premises will have no effect in determining the future requirements of this program."

In plain words this means that unless strong public support of the National School Lunch Program is made very evident to Senators and Congressmen during the next few months, federal appropriations for this purpose may be reduced much further. With federal aid, schools have been able to supply school lunches at low cost. However, if the Federal Government does not continue to make substantial appropriations for this program, it will no longer be possible in many States to continue to provide free lunches to children unable to pay and we may expect a considerable increase in the price charged to others.

PLEASE TAKE THESE STEPS NOW!

The American Parents Committee urges you to become an active spokesman for the millions of voteless fellow Americans who are too young to speak for themselves. Will you make a major effort to get hundreds of letters going in to the two Senators from your State and your own Congressman? Will you ask the other members of the organizations to which you belong to write? Be sure you also write. Please take these steps now:

1. Read this Bulletin to your friends and members of the organizations to which you belong.
2. Ask us for extra copies for posting in school, library, church and other bulletin boards.
3. If possible see your Congressman and Senators while they are back home, or write them expressing your interest in these three matters.
4. Interest your friends, your Parent-Teacher Association, women's clubs, or social organizations in these matters and urge them to write letters to Congress.
5. Send us names of others to whom you wish us to send this Bulletin, without charge of course.

Mail should be addressed to your two Senators at the Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C., and to your own Representative at the House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

Mr. George J. Hecht,
The American Parents Committee, Inc.,
52 Vanderbilt Avenue,
New York 17, N Y.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

Replying to your request as to whether contributions made to The American Parents Committee, Inc. would be deductible as charitable contributions on income tax returns, we are pleased to render our opinion as follows:

The United States Internal Revenue Code provides in Section 23, Subdivisions (o) and (q) that there may be deducted from gross income for the purpose of determining net income for income tax purposes, contributions made to "a corporation, trust or community chest, fund or foundation .... organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes or for the prevention of cruelty to children .... no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation" (underscoring supplied), and that such deductions will be permitted to the extent of 15% of gross income in the case of an individual, and 5% of net income in the case of a corporation.

1. Contributions from Individuals: You have advised us that you expect that a large portion of the activities of The American Parents Committee, Inc. will consist of the local work of its chapters and affiliates throughout the United States which will have nothing to do with legislation. If the Bureau of Internal Revenue should decide, as we know you hope and expect that it will (but on this there may be some doubt), that the activities of The American Parents Committee, Inc. relating to legislation are not a "substantial part" of its activities, we are of the opinion that the Bureau should and will rule that contributions made by individuals to The American Parents Committee, Inc. are deductible as charitable contributions on income tax returns to the extent that the statute allows.

Many organizations which are active in trying to influence legislation nevertheless have rulings from the Bureau of Internal Revenue that contributions to their support are deductible on income tax returns. Among such organizations are The National Child Labor Committee, actively engaged in the strengthening of child labor laws, and State Charities Aid Association, which is engaged in working for health and welfare legislation in New York State. These organizations also have other activities and the Bureau of Internal Revenue has apparently decided that their legislative activities are not a "substantial" part of their activities. You have told us that you hope and expect that The American Parents Committee, Inc. will receive a similar ruling inasmuch as that Committee is trying to organize a large number of local chapters and affiliates which in their local communities throughout the United States will do a great deal of child welfare work which has nothing to do with legislation.

You have, as you know, caused to be organized, solely for charitable and educational purposes, another organization, named "The American Parents Committee Education Fund, Inc." which is an entirely separate corporation but which now has the same Board of Directors as The American Parents Committee Inc. You have advised us that contributions to The American Parents Committee Education Fund, Inc. will be used exclusively for charitable and educational work, disseminating information concerning the needs of children and undertaking research regarding the needs of children and that no part of the funds of such corporation will be used in, nor will any of its activities be concerned with, carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation. On the basis of the foregoing, we are of the opinion that contributions made to this latter corporation by individuals will undoubtedly be deductible as charitable contributions on income tax returns to the extent the law permits.

2. Contributions from Charitable Foundations: Charitable foundations "organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation" are by Subdivision (6) of Section 101 of the Internal Revenue Code exempted from income tax. Any such charitable foundation should not, in our opinion, be concerned with the deductibility of any contributions it may make to The American Parents Committee, Inc., provided that such contributions, together with any other activities of such charitable foundation concerned directly or indirectly with attemptingto influence legislation, do not together constitute a substantial part of the grants and/or activities of such charitable foundation.

3. Contributions from Business Firms which Make Products Used By or For Children: Regardless of the deductibility, under Section 23, Subdivisions (o) and (q) of the Internal Revenue Code, of contributions made to The American Parents Committee, Inc., it is possible that certain business firms which would be benefited, directly or indirectly, by the work of The American Parents Committee, Inc. may be permitted to deduct the contributions made by them to The American Parents Committee, Inc. as ordinary and necessary business expenses. Such business expense deductions are not subject to the percent of income limitations which apply to charitable contributions. Such deductions are likely to be allowed to business firms making products used by or for children, but final determination regarding the deductibility of such contributions will, in any event, be based upon the nature of the contributor's business and the activities of The American Parents Committee, Inc.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

I am very much impressed with your pamphlets, "Wanted: An Educated South" and "Wanted: A Healthy South", which I have just seen. I am anxious to get some prominent Southerner to represent the South on the American Parents Committee.

The South has the most to gain from the activities of the American Parents Committee. As, of course you know, children of the South suffer because of unequal distribution of educational child health and child welfare services. Some Southern states have twice as many children per thousand population as certain northern states. The people in some of the rich northern states have five times as much income per child as some of the people in the southern states. If some southern states spent all their normal revenue for education alone, they could not support their schools as well as the average northern school.

I should be awfully happy if you could see your way clear to accept membership on the Executive Committee of the American Parents Committee. We will meet about every two months in New York City. If it should be impossible for you to come to the meetings, perhaps either you or Mr. Paul Williams would be one of the Vice Presidents of the American Parents Committee and perhaps you could nominate some New Yorker who has an interest in the welfare of the South, and who has a wide acquaintance in the South to represent the interests of the South on the Board of Directors. We would keep you advised by bulletin what is done by the American Parents Committee.

We should like to work closely with the Southern Regional Council. I am enclosing herewith a list of our officers and the Executive Committee, and some data about the activities and objectives of the American Parents Committee.

Sincerely yours,

I am delighted to learn that you have agreed to become associated with the American Parents Committee. I am happy to advise you that you were unanimously elected to the American Parents Committee's Board of Directors (actually we call it the Executive Committee because it sounds funny to have a Board of Directors of a committee).

Dear Mr. McCuistian,

I am glad to lend my modest support to the request of the American Parents Committee for aid in their campaign to get local action throughout the country on behalf of contruction of new elementary schools.

The problem is doubly acute in the South. We have the same upward surge of children needing classrooms as the rest of the country; in addition, as you well understand, we have the great backlog of new buildings needed to bring facilities for Negro children abreast of those for white children. I do not see how local and State governments in the South can possibly meet this need. And yet meeting it, soon, is the best way to get the situation in which the demand for human rights will have been met.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

There are two ways that you can be of great help to the APC.

(1) The APC intends to have introduced into the 81st Congress the Public School Survey and Construction Bill. I am enclosing herewith two copies of the first draft of the Bill and will welcome any changes and suggestions you or any members of your organization care to make in the Bill. I shall appreciate it very much if I may have your changes early in September. I have no doubt quite a number of changes will be made in the draft of the Bill before its introduction.

You, of course, are aware of the desperate need for more schools because of the sharp increase in the birth rate during and since the war. The situation is particularly bad in the Southern States in which there are 1/3 of the nation's children and only 1/9 of the nation's wealth.

I am enclosing a reprint of an article which will appear in the September issues of PARENTS' MAGAZINE and SCHOOL MANAGEMENT, explaining the need for the Bill and I am also enclosing a memorandum on the main reasons for the Bill.

(2) The second request I am taking the liberty of making to you, is to ask you to write a letter to the General Education Board supporting our application for a grant, to assist us in conducting an educational campaign on the need for new schoolhouse construction to house the increased number of children who in the next decade will be swamping the schools.

I have already seen Mr. Fred McCuistion of the General Education Board on this subject and he seems interested in our plans. I am going to ask for $15,000 (a year for two years) to pay the salaries of a full-time worker on this job, plus a secretary, and expenses for traveling, printing and mailing costs. We hope to stimulate local parents' organizations as well as local and state teachers' organizations to work vigorously for new school construction and we expect to personally contact members of Congress and leading national organizations and interest them in federal aid for schoolhouse construction.

I would appreciate it ever so much if you would write a letter to Mr. McCuistion supporting our application for a grant. Unless you would prefer to write him direct, I would like to have you send me the letter so I can attach it to the APC's application for the grant.

Assuring you of my appreciation of your help in these matters and with best regards to you,

I have looked through with interest the April issue of the NEW SOUTH, on the subject of "Housing in the South". I am wondering whether you have gotten out or whether you would get out an issue entitled "Children in the South". This might contain very little new material, but you could take the information that you had previously gathered to study on education and health and add to it material you could get on juvenile delinquency, children in broken homes, etc., etc. Perhaps we could be of some help to you in getting material for such a report.

If you decide to publish it, we would like to have quite a large number of copies of that particular issues.

OUR DESPERATE NEED FOR MORE SCHOOLS — and what can be done about it

The U. S. Census Bureau, using a special grant from the American Parents Committee, has prepared a new, vitally important table on future school enrollments, which should stimulate every parent, every PTA and every school administration to action.

By GEORGE J. HECHT
Publisher, Parents' Magazine and Chairman, The American Parents Committee

BAD AS CONDITIONS are now in many public schools —particularly in poorer communities and in states with the least taxable wealth—the school crisis throughout the United States is likely to get much, much worse!

Four million children of school age are not attending school at all. Many children are going to school only six months of the year, instead of the normal ten months. In some communities no public schooling is provided beyond the eighth grade. A large percentage of textbooks are in a filthy condition and are out-of-date. In many communities schools are already terrifically overcrowded. In other communities the buildings are unsafe . . . some schools are merely one-room, ugly wooden shacks.

During and since the war, more than 350,000 of our 850,000 teachers have left teaching, in addition to the normal turnover. There is a particularly alarming loss in men teachers. More than 110,000 "emergency" teachers are now employed who do not have the proper qualifications. 75,000 teaching positions remain unfilled. Fewer young people are going into teaching as a profession, largely because of the low pay offered.

Many people do not realize that the school situation is not likely to get better but actually is likely to get much, much worse during the next ten years. Never was the future so dark for American school children as it is today. In five years we are apt to look back upon 1948 as an educational utopia—unless a tremendous effort is made all over the country to meet the crisis.

This prediction is based on the fact that during and since the war a million to a million and a half more children were born each year than were born on the average before the war. These extra "war babies" are growing up, and will increasingly flood the schools. This fall the "war babies" born in 1942 will be entering the first grade. Next year these "war babies" will be promoted and will swamp the second grade classes and the large numbers of children born in 1943 will flood the first grade classrooms, and so on. Which means that for at least the next decade, school enrollments will speedily grow larger and larger.

Before the war the annual birth rate varied from 2,200,000 to 2,500,000. During and since the war it rose to 3,500,000 and even to 3,900,000 last year.

Communities all over America are faced not only with the necessity of maintaining existing schools and repairing and modernizing school buildings that were neglected during the war years, but also with the frightfully expensive task of building more schools to accommodate the extra millions of children born during and since the war. And all this at a time when, due to the increased cost of living, teachers' salaries must be increased and all other costs are going up.

ARTICLE REPRINTED FROM PARENTS' MAGAZINE
Copyright 1948 by the Parents' Institute, Inc. Printed in U. S. A.

While we knew, in a general way, that the increased birth rate during and since the war would materially increase the need for schools, till now there has been no accurate forecast as to the size of the demand for school enrollments by grades during the coming years. The U. S. Census Bureau's forecast of population has been given in five-year age groups; i.e., under 5, 5 to 9, 10 to 14, and so forth; and neither the Census Bureau nor the U. S. Office of Education nor the National Education Association had these figures translated into future school enrollments, year by year and grade by grade.

The U. S. Census Bureau had no regular funds available to do this job, in spite of its importance. And so, the American Parents Committee paid the Census Bureau to prepare such a table which is reproduced herewith. It should be studied with great care by school superintendents, school board members, as well as by parents who are concerned about the education of their children and of the nation's children. Note how the enrollments in the various grades increase as the "war babies" grow up.

If you will study the percentages of change since 1947, in the lower third of the table, you will note, for example, that in 1951, only three years hence, the school enrollments will be up over 1947, 20% in the first grade, 27% in the second grade, 28% in the third grade, 18% in the fourth grade, and so on. Fifth grade enrollment in 1951 will not be affected by war births to any degree. In (Continued below) individual communities, future school enrollments may be higher or lower than the national average, primarily because of family migration. Consider carefully what effect the probable increases in enrollment will have on your community's schools. Do you have enough elementary schools to house this vastly increased number of children who will flood the elementary schools in the next few years?

In three years (1951) it is estimated that total school enrollments will be approximately 2,400,000 more than they are this year. Eight years hence (1956) it is estimated that there will be approximately 8,000,000 more children seeking enrollment in the schools than this year.

On the basis of reports to the National Education Association from 64 school systems in areas over 30,000 in population (Educational Research Service Circular No. 3, 1948), it would appear that present-day school building costs are running around $800 or $900 per pupil for elementary and secondary schools. Assuming an average cost of school construction of $850 per pupil, and applying this figure to the increases in school enrollment given above, this indicates that within three years (1951) $2,040,000,000 will be needed for new school construction and that within eight years (1956), $6,800,000,000 will be needed, not counting the normal needs for the repair and maintenance of existing school buildings. And these additional schools will mean further increases in costs for teachers' salaries and for other school maintenance expenses.

Certainly most local communities haven't the funds to finance the new school construction they will need.

U. S. CENSUS BUREAU'S EXPLANATION OF THE ABOVE FORECASTS

By J. C. CAPT
Director, U. S. Bureau of the Census

THE FORECAST of school enrollment in the coming years is based on the estimated population of the United States for July 1, 1947. Inasmuch as this base population was estimated by adding current estimates of natural increase and net foreign migration to the population enumerated on April 1, 1940, it is not subject to any considerable revision.

The number of survivors of the base population on July 1 of each year, 1948 to 1960, was computed by applying to the base population survival factors representing the proportion of the population at a given age expected to be alive one year later. Thus, the population under 24 years of age on July 1, 1947, was reduced by such survival factors to forecast the population 1 to 24 years old on July 1, 1948. The population 1 to 23 years old on the latter date was reduced similarly to obtain forecasts of the population 2 to 24 years old on July 1, 1949. This process was repeated until the forecasts for (Continued on last page)

And very few of the states have enough taxable wealth to provide the needed money for their local communities. The Southern states, which have about one-third of the nation's children and yet only one-eighth of the nation's wealth, will be utterly unable to build the schools needed in their states.

Even if your community is wealthy enough to build the schools that are needed and even if your community is in a state wealthy enough to vote state aid to its local communities, you must remember that there are thousands of other communities which are not financially able and which cannot obtain state aid for this purpose.

For these communities, the only solution is a national program of school construction. The Federal Government has, for years, made grants to the states to build roads and has recently passed legislation appropriating hundreds of millions to construct local hospitals and institutions for the mentally ill. Why shouldn't Congress appropriate money for the construction of schools? Without an educated citizenry no country can prosper. Yet, unless much more money is appropriated for education by the Federal Government, as well as by state and local governments, millions of children in this country will have no chance to receive even a minimum of education, and illiteracy will increase shockingly.

For the past 25 years, efforts have been made, largely under the leadership of the National Education Association, to persuade Congress to pass a bill providing for Federal grants to the States for elementary and high-school education. During the past session of Congress, a bi-partisan Federal Aid for Education Bill passed the Senate, but in the House of Representatives it never got out of committee and so could not be voted upon. This bill would have provided $300 million for current operating expenses. It provided, however, that no money could be used for school construction.

The main argument for Federal aid for education is the need to equalize educational opportunities throughout the United States. The least wealthy states of our nation have proportionally the most children to be educated. In some states there are 50 percent more children per 1,000 population than in other states. If some states spent all their tax revenues for education alone, they could not support their schools as well as the average school of the nation is supported.

The people in the wealthiest state have five times as much taxable income per child as the people of the poorest state. Some communities spend sixty times as much on education per child as others do. It is all wrong to deprive children of a decent education just because they happen to be born in one of the poorer states, in which there is not sufficient wealth which can be taxed to maintain decent schools. In order more nearly to equalize the educational facilities throughout the United States, the Federal Government must exercise its power to tax wealth where it is and to assist the poorer states to provide education for the children where they live.

THE FEDERAL AID for Education Bill, if and when it is enacted, will appropriate funds to the states to help them support their local elementary schools and high schools and will apportion the funds accordingly to the number of children, with the needier states receiving the largest amounts. The Bill provides a minimum of support ($5 per child per year) for education in each state.

Helpful as the passage of this bill would be, it would not solve the problem of where the money is to come from to build the new schools which are needed. The American Parents Committee therefore proposes that in the next session of Congress an effort be made to pass two school bills rather than one. Certainly the effort to get Federal grants to the states to assist in the current maintenance of elementary and secondary schools should be continued. But also there should be introduced a companion bill, to be known as the School Construction Bill, which would be similar to the Hospital Construction Act (the Hill-Burton Act) which was passed by the 79th Congress. This School Construction Bill will provide that all funds appropriated by it would be used for new school construction and modernization. The funds would be distributed among the States by the U. S. Office of Education. Such a bill is now being drafted by the American Parents Committee and the Committee will seek to have it introduced on a bi-partisan basis in the 81st Congress, which will convene in January, 1949. It will provide for an appropriation of $200 million for the first year, $250 million for the second year, $300 million for the third year, and thereafter as much as the Congress shall decide is needed. The money is to be divided among the States and Territories in proportion to the number of their children and taking into consideration other factors such as their taxable wealth. Those States and Territories with proportionally the greatest number of children and the least wealth would receive relatively more of the total amount appropriated. The educational agency of each state will distribute the Federal grants as it sees fit, in its sole discretion, to the communities within the state, but the local communities and the States must guarantee to provide the teachers and the maintenance for these new schools.

One of the main reasons that the Federal Aid for Education Bill (which would aid states to maintain and operate schools) has not been enacted is because of the argument that Federal support will lead to Federal control of education, which in turn will lead to abuses. We do not agree with this argument because the Federal Aid for Education Bill specifically prohibits Federal control. Moreover, for years the Federal Government has made grants to universities and colleges and for home economics and vocational education. We have yet to hear of any complaints that the Federal Government attempts to control education in these fields. However the Federal-control-of-education argument cannot be used successfully against the proposed School Construction Bill, inasmuch as it would assist only school construction and not the maintenance and operation of schools.

The Federal Aid for Education Bill has Bi-Partisan Support

Said Senator Robert A. Taft: "There are a number of states which simply cannot provide enough funds for adequate education, even though they spend a larger amount of their citizens' incomes than do more prosperous states. I feel that the whole country has an interest in seeing that at least a minimum education is provided for every child born in the United States."

Said President Truman: "I regard the proper education of our youth as a matter of paramount importance to the welfare and security of the United States. Public provision for education has been primarily the concern of the several states, and must remain so. The maintenance of freedom of thought and expression depends in large measure upon keeping our systems of education free from central control. But it is necessary and proper that the Federal Government should furnish financial assistance which will make it possible for the states to provide educational facilities more nearly adequate to meet the pressing needs of our nation.

"The cost of providing adequate systems of schools has long been beyond the financial resources of many of our states. Now a real crisis exists. Rapid increases in school population have resulted in overcrowding. Higher prices have brought sharp increases in construction and operating costs. Expanding employment opportunities in other fields have attracted teachers away from the schools. Many of the teachers who have stayed in the schools because of their interest in their work are underpaid and must have their salaries increased. We cannot expect to hold our present teachers, no matter how strong their devotion, nor to attract the additional teachers we need, unless they are properly compensated.

"Unless the Federal Government comes to the aid of the states in meeting these needs, there is danger of a serious breakdown in our systems of education. We cannot take such a risk."

of Congress will be back in their home districts. That will be an excellent opportunity for school officials, officers of Parent-Teacher Associations and individual parents to see them, or write them, to impress them with the need for both federal aid for the maintenance of elementary and high schools, and for the construction of much-needed new school buildings to house the vastly increased number of children born during and since the recent war.

While every effort should be made to get Congress to pass both these school bills, no stone should be left unturned to get adequate funds for school maintenance and new school construction appropriated by local communities and by each of the States and Territories. Without question the major financial support for school maintenance and new school construction should come from local and state sources.

Any Federal aid that may be obtained is merely supplementary assistance to meet emergency and special conditions.

And so school officials, Parent-Teacher Associations, civic and labor organizations and individual parents should energetically attempt to persuade their local and state legislators to appropriate sufficient money to maintain their schools adequately and to build the new schools that will be needed when the extra "war babies" grow up and go to school.

Our current generation of children will be cheated if we do not provide adequate schools for them. Our industry will suffer because, as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce recently pointed out, the economic status of our people is directly related to their educational status. Our democracy will be threatened because good government depends upon an educated citizenry.

U. S. CENSUS BUREAU'S EXPLANATION OF FORECASTS

each year, 1948 to 1960, had been computed. The survival factors used were consistent with the assumptions of medium mortality employed in the preparation of the forecasts in our reports, Forecasts of the Population of the United States: 1945-1975 (copies of which can be obtained from the U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.). A detailed description of the medium mortality assumptions and a discussion of the considerations that support them is presented on pages 10 to 16 of that report.

Since the forecasts include the survivors of persons born between July 1, 1947, and July 1, 1960, it was necessary to forecast the number of births for each fiscal year (July through June) of this period. The very high birth rates for the past few years have exceeded even the high fertility assumptions used in the printed report just referred to. We have, therefore, so projected the trend of annual births as to link by a smooth curve the actual number of births for the year ending June 30, 1947, with the original forecast of births based on the medium fertility assumptions for the year ending June 30, 1955. In effect, then, the new projections of fertility imply a higher level of fertility in the next few years than did the original medium rates but a more rapid decline up to 1955, after which the original rates and the revised rates agree. A detailed description of trends in fertility, including the medium fertility assumptions referred to above, is presented on pages 16 to 34 of the report.

It has been assumed in preparing the population forecasts that net immigration of children and youths would be negligible for the period with which we are concerned. If there should be a substantial net immigration between 1947 and 1960, the forecasts now given you would be too low, not only by virtue of the immigrants themselves, but also by the addition to the population of their offspring. We feel that it is unlikely that net immigration will be very large, but it is difficult to make an accurate prediction of the amount.

The forecasts of enrollment by grade were computed in three steps. First, the proportion of children at each age attending school was projected on the basis of past trends. All of the projections represent increases in the enrollment rate. The projected enrollment rate for each year of age was then multiplied by the forecast number of children of the same age. The sum of these results represents our forecast of the total number enrolled regardless of age or grade. Finally, the distribution by grade of the total forecast enrollment was computed partly on the basis of the forecasts of population by age, which were used to estimate the size of each entering class between 1947 and 1960, and partly on the basis of recently published statistics of the United States Office of Education showing the proportion of an entering class reaching each successive grade.

Since our basic enrollment figures were for April, we have made all the enrollment projections also refer to April of the given year. There are, of course, seasonal changes in the enrollment by grade; and the figures for April are ordinarily somewhat lower than those for either the preceding or the following October, particularly in the younger ages.

It should be emphasized that the figures we are giving you are rough estimates that should be used to forecast only the broad general trends. The projections assume that past trends will continue in an orderly fashion. Another war, for instance, would have a serious effect upon the trends. The estimates by age are more reliable than those by grade since they are influenced by fewer factors. The age estimates involving children born after 1947, however, are obviously weaker than those for older children. In applying the estimated percentage change in any area smaller than the United States as a whole, one should bear in mind that the future number of children can be affected positively or negatively by internal migration.

Main Reasons For The

PUBLIC SCHOOL SURVEY AND CONSTRUCTION BILL

The emergency need: The public elementary schools of the U. S. are as a whole already overcrowded and many of them are in need of repair and modernization. Furthermore, because of the sharp increase in the birth rate during and since the war, these schools will increasingly be swamped as the "war babies" grow up to be of school age. Here is the U. S. Census Bureau's forecast of increases in elementary school enrollment during the next 10 years:

	Elementary School Enrollment	Cumulative Increases over 1948
1948	18,686,000
1949	19,579,000	893,000
1950	20,521,000	1,835,000
1951	21,394,000	2,708,000
1952	22,172,000	3,466,000
1953	23,487,000	4,801,000
1954	24,781,000	6,095,000
1955	25,789,000	7,103,000
1956	26,394,000	7,708,000

The estimated cost of the needed new school construction: Elementary school capacity must be increased in the next ten years to provide for about 8,000,000 additional enrollments. Based on an average cost of school construction of $850. per pupil (this figure obtained from the National Education Association) the American Parents Committee estimates that $6,800,000,000. must be spent on new elementary school construction, not counting the normal need for repair and maintenance of existing school buildings.

The National Education Association in 1944 estimated school building plant needs of 1.29 billion dollars a year for a ten year period. The National Resources Planning Board estimated in 1943 a total postwar school capital outlay need of 12.45 billion dollars, while the Twentieth Century Fund Survey of 1947 estimated 9.9 billion dollars for additional educational plant needs.

Why Federal aid for new school construction is urgently needed: Only the richest communities will, unaided, be able to finance, even with commercial borrowings, the new schools that they need. Only a few of the richest States will be able to give adequate State aid to their poorer communities to assist them in constructing new schools. And the poorer communities and States have proportionally the most children to be educated. In the Southern States there are 1/3 of the nation's children and only 1/9 of the nation's wealth. Only with Federal aid for school construction to supplement whatever the States and communities can afford will it be possible to build the schools that will be needed to educate the nation's increased number of children born during and since the war.

This bill would supplement the Bill for Federal Aid for School Maintenance: The Public School Survey and Construction Bill would supplement the Federal Aid For Education Bill which would appropriate $300 million a year for school maintenance. The two bills do not in any way overlap and it is hoped that all organizations and individuals concerned about the proper education of the nation's children will work for the enactment of both bills. Both are needed.

An advantage of The Public School Survey and Construction Bill: One of the main reasons that the Federal Aid For Education Bill has not be enacted during the past 25 years in which efforts were made to have it passed, is because of the argument used against it that Federal support will lead to Federal control of education which, in turn, will lead to abuses. The American Parents Committee does not agree with this argument because the Federal Aid For Education Bill specifically prohibits Federal control and because Federal control has not developed during the many years that the Federal Government has given aid to land-grant colleges, as well as home economics and vocational education. The Federal-control-of-education argument cannot be used successfully against the Public School Survey and Construction Bill, inasmuch as it would assist only school construction and not the maintenance and operation of schools.

The realistic, practical approach of the Bill: The bill establishes an emergency 5-year program to give immediate financial aid to the States. The bill provides:

(1) Federal grants for State-wide surveys of the most pressing elementary public school building needs. This will enable the States to make quick and thorough analyses of their problem and to plan a program for meeting the problem.

(2) As soon as a school district decides that it will construct a new school the bill will provide a loan to enable the school authorities to hire an architect, draw up blueprints and make all necessary advance plans. This will save considerable time.

(3) The school district can then apply for a Federal loan of half the total cost or an outright grant of half the total cost -- or both.

(4) Within each State the State educational agency would have the job of setting up priorities as to the relative needs of the various school districts, giving special consideration to rural communities and areas with relatively small financial resources.

Explaining certain provisions of the Bill: The bill is divided into two main Titles -- Title I providing for Federal grants-in-aid for surveys and construction to be administered by the U. S. Office of Education; Title II providing for loans to be administered by the Federal Works Agency.

The formula for dividing the money among the States is similar to the provision in the Hospital Construction Act and is weighted in favor of the States with the largest number of school children and the smallest financial resources.

The Bill is purposely limited to Elementary Schools because they will be flooded first by the increased number of children. There will be no appreciable increase in High School enrollment for ten years until the "war babies" grow up to High School age. For the next decade the educational crisis will be predominantly in the Elementary School field. This Bill should be passed promptly as an emergency measure to meet conditions resulting directly from the war which caused the sharp increase in the birth rate.

The bill contains the strongest possible language to guarantee State and local control of education and to expressly prohibit any direct or indirect Federal control.

"PUBLIC SCHOOL SURVEY AND CONSTRUCTION ACT"

A BILL

To authorize loans and grants to the states to assist in the construction of elementary public schools.

There exists a pressing need, national in scope, for the construction of additional public school buildings for pupils of elementary school age;

PURPOSE OF ACT

Sec. 3. The purpose of this act is to assist the several States -

(a) to survey the need for construction of elementary public schools, and to develop programs for construction of such schools as will, in conjunction with existing facilities, afford the necessary facilities commensurate with their educational needs.

(b) to construct elementary public schools in accordance with such programs.

this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the United States Commissioner of Education, (hereinafter referred to as the "Commissioner") State applications for funds for carrying out such purposes.

State Applications

Sec. 5. (a) To be approved, a State application for funds for carrying out the purposes of section 3 (a) must -

(1) designate a single State educational agency as the sole agency for carrying out such purposes;

(2) provide for making a survey in accordance with section 3 (a) containing all information required by the Commissioner, and for developing a program in accordance with section 3(a) and with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner.

(3) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commissioner may from time to time reasonably require, and give the Commissioner, upon demand, access to the records on which such reports are based.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any application for funds which complies with the provisions of subsection (a).

Allotments to States

Sec. 6. (a) Each state for which a State application under section 5 has been approved shall be entitled to an allotment of such proportion of any appropriation made pursuant to section 4 as its population of persons of ages 5 to 14, inclusive, bears to such population of all the States, and within such allotment it shall be entitled to receive 50 per centum of its expenditures in carrying out the purposes of section 3(a) in accordance with its application: Provided, That no such allotment shall be less than $20,000.

(b) The Commissioner shall from time to time estimate the sum to which each State will be entitled under this section, during such ensuing period as he may determine, and shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which the Commissioner finds that his estimate for any prior period was greater or less than the amount to which the State was entitled for such period. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Commissioner, the amount so certified.

(c) Any funds paid to a State under this section and not expended for the purposes for which paid shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States.

PART B - CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Authorization of Appropriations

Sec. 7. In order to assist the States in carrying out the purposes of section 3(b) there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years, the sum of $250,000,000 for the construction of elementary public schools: Provided, That any amount of the sum authorized to be appropriated for a fiscal year which is not appropriated for such year, or which is not allotted in such year by reason of the failure of any State or States to have plans approved under this part, and any amount allotted to a State but remaining unobligated at the end of the period for which it is available to such State, is authorized to be appropriated for the next fiscal year in addition to the sum otherwise authorized under this section. The sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Commissioner, State plans for carrying out the purposes of section 3(b).

State Plans

Sec. 8(a) A State plan for carrying out the purposes of section 3(b) must -

(1) designate a single State educational agency as the sole agency for the administration of the plan, or designate such agency as the sole agency for supervising the administration of the plan;

(2) contain satisfactory evidence that the State agency so designated will have authority to carry out such plan in conformity with this part;

(3) set forth an elementary public school construction program which is based on a State-wide survey of need; set forth the general manner in which the State will determine the priority of projects based on the relative need of different areas lacking adequate elementary public school facilities, giving special consideration to rural communities and areas with relatively small financial resources; and which meets the other requirements of this Act;

(4) provide that in a State where separate educational plant facilities are required by law for separate races, an equitable apportionment of the funds shall be made available under authority of this title for the benefit of such races: Provided, That the term "equitable apportionment" shall mean a plan of apportionment which results in the expenditure of funds for elementary public schools of no less than a sum which is in the ratio in which the population of such races in the State bears to the total population of such State;

(5) provide for affording to every applicant for a construction project an opportunity for hearing before the State agency;

(6) provide that the State agency will make such reports in such form and containing such information as the Commissioner may from time to time reasonably require, and give the Commissioner, upon demand, access to the records upon which such information is based.

(b) The Commissioner shall approve any State plan and any modifications thereof which comply with the provisions of subsection (a). The eligibility of a State to receive grants under this title shall not be conditioned upon its applying for, or qualifying for, loans under title II of this Act.

Allotments to States

Sec. 9 (a). Each State for which a State plan has been approved prior to or during a fiscal year shall be entitled for such year to an allotment of a sum bearing the same ratio to the sums authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 7 for such year as the product of (a) the population of persons of ages 5 to 14, inclusive, of such state and (b) the square of its allotment percentage (as defined in subsection (b)) bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all of the States.

(b) The allotment percentage of any State shall be 100 per centum less than that percentage which bears the same ratio to 50 per centum as the per capita income of such State bears to the per capita income of the United States (excluding Alaska), except that (1) the allotment percentage shall in no case be more than 75 per centum or less than 33 1/3 per centum, and (2) the allotment percentage for Alaska and Hawaii shall be 50 per centum each, and the allotment percentage for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands shall be 75 per centum;

(c) The allotment percentages shall be promulgated by the Commissioner between July 1 and August 31 of each odd-numbered year, on the basis of the average of the per capita incomes of the States and of the continental United States for the three most recent consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be conclusive for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation: Provided, That the Commissioner shall promulgate such percentages as soon as possible after the enactment of this title, which promulgation shall be conclusive for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949.

(d) The amount of the allotment to a State shall be available, in accordance with the provisions of this title, for payment of 50 per centum of the cost of approved projects within such State.

(e) The Commissioner shall calculate the allotments to be made available under this title and notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts thereof. Sums allotted to a state for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such State for such purpose for the next fiscal year (and for such year only), in addition to the sums allotted for such State for such next fiscal year.

Approval of Projects and Payments for Construction

Sec. 10(a). For each project for construction pursuant to a State plan approved under this title, there shall be submitted to the Commissioner through the State agency an application by the State or a political subdivision thereof. Such application shall set forth -

(1) that the application is in conformity with the State plan and contains an assurance that the applicant will conform with the applicable requirements of the State plan;

(2) that it has been approved and recommended by the State agency and is entitled to priority over other projects, in accordance with the provisions of section 8(a), (3);

(3) that the rates of pay for laborers and mechanics engaged in the construction of the project will be not less than the prevailing local wage rates for similar work as determined in accordance with Public Law 403 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 30, 1935, as amended.

The Commissioner shall approve any application which complies with this subsection. No application shall be disapproved until the Commissioner has afforded the State agency an opportunity for a hearing.

(b) Upon approving an application, the Commissioner shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to 50 per centum of the estimated cost of construction of the project; and upon such certification the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amounts so certified to the respective States.

(c) Amendment of any approved application shall be subject to approval in the same manner as an original application. Certification under subsection (b) may be amended, either upon approval of an amendment of the application or upon the revision of the estimated cost of a project. An amended certification may direct that any additional payment be made from the applicable allotment for the fiscal year in which such amended certification is made.

(d) The funds paid under this section for the construction of an approved project shall be used solely for carrying out such project as so approved.

TITLE II - LOANS FOR ADVANCE PLANNING AND CONSTRUCTION

PART A - ADVANCE PLANNING

Loans or Advances

Sec. 101. In order to assist the states in carrying out the purposes of section 3(b) the Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to make loans or advances to public agencies to aid in the financing of the cost of architectural and engineering surveys, plans, working drawings, specifications, procedures, and other action preliminary to the construction of elementary public schools: Provided, That the making of any loan or advance under this title shall not in any way commit the Congress to appropriate funds to undertake the construction of any public works so planned.

Sec. 102. For the purpose of making loans or advances under section 101 of this Act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1,1948, and ending June 30, 1953, a sum not to exceed $40,000,000. Sums so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

Sec. 103. Funds appropriated for the making of loans or advances hereunder shall be allotted by the Federal Works Administrator among the several states in the following proportion: 75 per centum in the proportion which the population of persons of ages 5 to 14, inclusive, of each State bears to such population of all the States, and 25 per centum according to the need, as determined by said Administrator, for additional funds in the several States to carry out the purposes of this Title.

Sec. 104. No loan or advance shall be made hereunder for any project unless such project shall have been approved by the designated state educational agency.

Sec. 105. Advances under this Title to any public agency shall be repaid by such agency if and when the construction of the project so planned is undertaken. Any sums so repaid shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

PART B - CONSTRUCTION

Sec. 106. In order to assist the states in carrying out the purposes of section 3(b) there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, a sum not to exceed $250,000,000. Sums so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

Sec. 107. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized, subject to the provisions of section 108, to make loans to any State or other public agency having jurisdiction over elementary public schools to aid in the financing of the cost of construction of such schools. Such loans shall be subject, however, to the following limitations:

(a) No loan shall be made for any project unless such project shall have been approved by the appropriate state educational agency and by the Commissioner of Education, and unless such project is included in a comprehensive program developed pursuant to section 8(a) (3) of this Act.

(b) No loan shall be made for any project in an amount exceeding 50 per centum of the estimated reasonable cost thereof, as determined by the Federal Works Administrator.

(c) Every such loan shall bear interest at the rate of 2 per centum per annum, payable semiannually.

(d) The bonds or other obligations evidencing any such loan (1) must be duly authorized and issued pursuant to State and local law, and (2) may, as to the security thereof and the payment of principal thereof and interest thereon, be subordinated (to the extent deemed feasible and desirable by the Federal Works Administrator for facilitating the financing of such projects) to other bonds or obligations of the obligor issued to finance such project or that may then be outstanding.

Sec. 108. In making loans for projects pursuant to the provisions of section 107, the Federal Works Administrator shall adhere to the order or sequence of priority for projects established by the Commissioner of Education and shall take such measures as, in his judgment, will assure that the engineering plans and specifications, the details of construction, and the completed project conform to the project as approved by the Commissioner of Education.

Sec. 109. The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized (a) to hold, administer, exchange, refund, or set at public or private sale any bonds or other obligations evidencing loans made under this title; and (b) to collect, or provide for the collection of, interest on and principal of such bonds or other obligations. All moneys received as proceeds from such sales, and all moneys so collected, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

TITLE III - GENERAL PROVISIONS

Sec. 201. Except as otherwise specifically provided, nothing in this Act shall be construed as conferring on any department, agency or officer of the United States the right to exercise any supervision or control over any school, or any State educational institution or agency, with respect to which any funds have been or may be expended pursuant to this Act, nor shall any term or condition of any agreement under this Act relating to, or any grant or loan under this Act to or on behalf of, any such school or agency, prescribe or affect its administration, personnel, curriculum, instruction, methods of instruction, or materials for instruction.

Sec. 202. The Commissioner of Education is authorized to promulgate regulations in conformity with the provisions of this Act as may be necessary to effectuate the provisions of title I.

Sec. 205. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Works Agency for each of the five fiscal years during the period beginning July 1, 1948, and ending June 30, 1953, such sum as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions under this Act.

Sec. 206. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any State, person, or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, and the application of such provision to other States, persons, or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

REPORT OF THE APC'S LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES ON BEHALF OF CHILDREN DURING THE 80th CONGRESS AND PLANS FOR THE 81st CONGRESS

APC CONDUCTS FIRST LOBBY FOR CHILDREN

During the 80th Congress, for the first time in history, the interests of children in the United States were defended before the Federal legislature by an organized lobby devoting itself exclusively to legislation concerning children. This new children's lobby, established as the American Parents Committee, vigorously championed the cause of millions of neglected American children, seeking legislation that would meet their health, welfare, and educational needs.

Although every business and trade association, as well as labor organizations, the veterans, farmers, and other groups, have their effective lobbies in Washington staffed by full-time professional workers, the American Parents Committee is the only organization in the United States to have full-time professional lobbyists in Washington working solely in the interests of American children, according to the lobby registration reports of the Congress.

In every session of the Congress, legislation is proposed that could advance or retard the health, education, and welfare of the United States' 46 million children. There are 5,000 to 33,000 bills introduced; of these, bills concerning children are referred to a dozen House and Senate Committees, a multitude of Subcommittees. As many as 3,000 bills may be reported by Committees during the session; a few more bills receive hearings; but most fail to pass. In this legislative landslide the Congress often ignores bills affecting children.

WHY CHILDREN'S LEGISLATION NEEDS FULL-TIME LOBBY

Operations of Congress continue to be complicated, even with the streamlining applied by the Reorganization Act. It's a full-time expert job to follow legislation, to know where bills are from day to day. News, radio comment mainly covers large domestic and foreign issues, frequently after the Congress has acted. It is not surprising that parents often don't know what bills affecting children are before the Congress, which of the 435 Representatives or 96 Senators are considering them, or even that any Congressmen are considering any bills concerning children.

To fill these gaps with information tied to action, the American Parents Committee was established. As the spearhead of its effort the APC maintained one full-time lobbyist in Washington during the first session of the 80th Congress, and during the second, as the Committee's support and program developed, two able lobbyists, both working exclusively on United States children's legislation. This Washington staff, dispensing with secretarial service to save money, served in active liaison with Governmental agencies, individual Congressmen and Congressional committees, and with numerous voluntary organizations, groups, and individuals.

WHAT APC HAS ACCOMPLISHED

The American Parents Committee is less than two years old. During its first legislative venture it faced a politically divided Federal Government, and a Congress, which, after a torrent of dissension over international and military affairs, enacted virtually no domestic social legislation of consequence.

In spite of the inherent difficulties and in spite of its youth, the American Parents Committee has already made a contribution to the welfare of our Nation's children. During the 80th Congress the APC helped:

(1) to save the 1949 National School Lunch program.

(2) to halt the false economy policy started by the Congress of reducing the U. S. Children's Bureau budget further and further each year.

(3) to focus the attention of Congressmen, Congressional Committees, and many national organizations on the need for adequate health services for school-age children, the most neglected health-wise of all child age-groups.

(4) to fight off crippling amendments to the federal aid to public education bill, and to bring the bill nearer to passage by the Congress than it has ever been since first introduced a quarter of a century ago.

(5) to finance an hitherto unobtainable forecast by the U. S. Census Bureau of future school enrollments, broken down by year and by grade. The forecast is vital in estimating the needs for new school construction.

(6) to establish a National Citizens Council on Migrant Labor and to have included in the Council's program the objective of securing proper safeguards in health, education, and welfare for migrant children.

(7) to prevent ill-advised Senate floor action on the National Science Foundation Bill which would have nullified the permissive language of the bill making possible future basic research in the social sciences.

(8) to have 1948 platforms of both major political parties include references to child welfare, health, and education.

SPECIFIC BILLS SUPPORTED BY THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE DURING THE 80th CONGRESS AND PLANS FOR ACTION IN THE 81st CONGRESS

During the 80th Congress the American Parents Committee campaigned for the specific children's bills and appropriations analyzed in the following pages. These also outline the APC plans for legislation to benefit children to be undertaken during the 81st Congress, which convenes in January, 1949.

National School Health Services Bill

Drafted by the American Parents Committee, this bill would provide a $10 million grant in aid to the States to assist them in conducting health examinations of school children and to do corrective work on physical and mental defects discovered. Five Republican Senators, Leverett Saltonstall, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (Mass.), H. Alexander Smith (N.J.), Raymond E. Baldwin (Conn.), Irving M. Ives (N.Y.), and a Democrat, J. W. Fulbright (Ark.); and former Republican Representative, now Judge Evan Howell (Ill.) introduced and sponsored this bill.

The sole exclusively child health measure to be considered during the 80th Congress, this bill had favorable hearings in both Senate and House Health Subcommittees, but failed to reach a vote in either House. No new health services legislation whatever was enacted by the 80th Congress.

As an alternative to enactment of the National School Health Services Bill the APC suggested revision of Title V of the Social Security Act to provide for health services to school children. The 80th Congress amended the Social Security Act, but the revisions dealt largely with coverage and benefits, Title II. The 81st Congress might consider revision of Title V. Five ranking members of the Senate Finance Committee have advised they will consider this approach. Moreover, the Social Security Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee may present a further report on revisions of the Act at the opening of the 81st Congress.

National School Lunch Program

Although the Federal Government has been appropriating annually for the National School Lunch Program for the last 13 years, House and Senate Appropriations Conference Committee during the first session the 80th Congress issued a statement warning that Federal financial support for the program might be withdrawn; that they believed the States should prepare to finance the program alone.

Between sessions, in November, 1947, the American Parents Committee took the initiative of calling a one-day conference in Washington to emphasize to organizations and the public that continuation of the National School Lunch Program was in jeopardy. Approximately 50 organizations were represented at the conference.

When the school lunch appropriation was under consideration by both House and Senate Appropriations Committees during the second session of the 80th Congress, the APC testified in support of it. The APC sent out approximately 10,000 letters to school superintendents, Parent-Teacher associations, women's clubs and civic groups urging support of the appropriation.

In the second session, under the impact of aroused public opinion, Congressional opposition to the lunch appropriation died down, questioning of the terms of state-federal matching formula quieted, and the Congress not only did not discontinue support of the program but appropriated approximately $80 million for its continuation. It will be necessary during the 81st Congress for the APC vigilantly to watch the fate of the lunch program and to work for an appropriation adequate to carry the program forward.

U. S. Children's Bureau Funds, National Child Research Institute Bill

The 1948 fiscal year activities of the U. S. Children's Bureau were seriously handicapped by a $190,000 cut in its relatively small operating budget. The APC testified before both Senate and House Appropriations Committees urging not only a full restoration of the cut but also an increase of approximately $50,000 to finance a national clearinghouse on child life research. Bulletins were sent out by the APC to national organizations asking their support of the Bureau's budget.

Congress refused the requested increase, but the House proposal to reduce the Bureau's appropriation further was averted by Senate action, followed by compromise in conference. Operating funds for the Bureau were thus saved from further reduction.

Because it seems unlikely that substantial enough increases in the Children's Bureau regular budget can be obtained in the 81st Congress fully to finance the proposed national clearinghouse on child life research, and also to finance grants in aid to universities and to other public and private agencies for such research, the American Parents Committee has drafted a National Child Research Institute Bill to be introduced in the 81st Congress. Similar to the bill which was enacted to create the National Institute of Health, the proposed Child Research Institute would be administered by the U.S. Children's Bureau.

Federal Aid to Education, the School Construction Bill

The American Parents Committee cooperated with the National Education Association and approximately 40 national lay organizations to work for passage of the federal aid to education bill. The APC testified before both Senate and House Education Subcommittees and urged its local members and groups to write to Washington in support of this legislation.

The bill, appropriating $300 million toward current maintenance of elementary and secondary schools, passed the Senate 58 to 22 on April 1, 1948. Although favorably reported by the House Education Subcommittee, the bill failed to reach a House vote because of indifference or opposition of the House leadership.

The APC will continue to support this bill during the 81st Congress. In another approach to meet the crisis in education, however, the APC is drafting a companion bill, to be known as the School Construction Bill, similar to the Hospital Construction Act passed by the 79th Congress. This bill would appropriate $250 million a year for grants to the States for school building and modernization. The Federal grant would be distributed on the basis of the number of school children and the taxable wealth of States.

Schools, today overcrowded, will be flooded with additional children in the next few years as the "war babies" born since 1940 as our birth rate began to double, reach school age. The U. S. Census Bureau, at the suggestion of the APC, and financed by a $500. payment by the APC, prepared a special forecast of future school enrollments, broken down by years and by grades. This information, sorely needed, had never before been tabulated. The Census Bureau, in this study, estimated that in three years (1951) there will be need for school facilities for 2,400,000 more children than are enrolled in schools in 1948. In eight years' time (1956) school facilities for an additional 8,000,000 children will be needed.

Within the next three years there will be need for an estimated $2,400,000,000. and in the next eight years an estimated $8 billion in new school construction. The lack of financial resources in most localities and most States to meet such a staggering responsibility makes it absolutely essential that federal aid be available for new school construction. Moreover, a charge that federal aid for building schools would lead to federal domination of education is obviously groundless.

Children in Families of Migrant Farm Workers

The American Parents Committee helped to organize the National Citizens Council on Migrant Farm Labor; is represented on its Board of Directors; and has contributed to its operating funds, in order to work for better health and education for the thousands of pitiably disadvantaged children in families of migrant farm workers.

National Science Foundation Bill

Vetoed by the President after passage in the first session, of the 80th Congress, on the grounds that its projected administrative pattern was unwise, the National Science Foundation Bill was in danger of public and Congressional neglect in the second session, when it was re-introduced in changed form. The bill would authorize, among other basic researches, scientific inquiry in the medical field, and would make permissive eventual inquiry in the social sciences, both of which would mean much to child health and welfare.

The APC was the only organization with a professional lobbyist working for the bill during the second session. This provided essential liaison between scientists, the Administration, and Congressional sponsors. The APC successfully helped to retain the bill's permissive clauses in Senate action, and supported the bill in the House hearing. The House leadership failed to push the bill to passage. Unified effort should mean enactment of the bill in the 81st Congress and the APC will work to this end.

Child Welfare Planks in Political Party Platforms

Never in the past have the platforms of the political parties dealt specifically with the needs of children as they have with those of labor, the veterans and the farmers. The chairman of the APC made presentations to the Platform Committees at both the Republican and Democratic Conventions, urging the adoption of the following five planks:

(1) Adequate provision for children who are deprived of parental support through more complete protection under the Social Security insurance programs, and through programs for aid to dependent children.

(2) The National School Lunch Program, taking into account the need for the States themselves to support this program.

(3) Protections against harmful child-labor.

(4) A program of federal aid to education without federal control.

(5) The stimulation by federal aid of State efforts to combat juvenile delinquency, and to meet the nation's requirements for maternal and child health and welfare services with especial emphasis on the health needs of neglected school-age children, crippled children, and migrant children.

Aside from the National Education Association, whose presentation was confined to federal aid for education, no other organization testified before these Platform Committees on the needs of children. Planks on education and child health were included in both Republican and Democratic Platforms, while the Democratic Platform also mentioned specifically adequate financing for the School Lunch Program, and continuing efforts to reduce juvenile delinquency.

The APC will use its best efforts in the 81st Congress to have these planks translated into legislative action.

Now, if ever, write to Congressmen and Senators on behalf of an adequate appropriation for THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM!

Unless Senators and Congressmen receive an avalanche of mail promptly, an inadequate appropriation will be voted for the National School Lunch Program for the government's next fiscal year (1949).

Here are a summary of and conclusions from a nation-wide survey, that we have just completed, which reveals NEW IMPORTANT FACTS about the National School Lunch Program:

(1) There are millions of children who need, but who are denied, the benefits of the National School Lunch Program because the federal appropriation is too small! The Program is yielding untold benefits in combating malnutrition among American children (in addition to providing a market for farm foods that otherwise might spoil or become surplus). The Nation cannot afford to perpetuate the appalling situation revealed when the draft for the last war led to over five million rejections for military service - 40% of which were due to improper nourishment. America cannot afford to neglect its children! Our security as well as our economic well being is at stake.

(2) For the past two years the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended an appropriation of $100 million. The proposed $65 million federal appropriation for the 1949 fiscal year is not anywhere near enough because --

(a) Many more children need to be included in the program (as pointed out in #1).

(b) A deficiency appropriation of $6 million had to be voted for the fiscal year 1947 when $75 million was initially appropriated, and a deficiency appropriation of $5 million had to be voted for the fiscal year 1948, when the initial appropriation was $65 million. And since then the cost of food has risen sharply!

(c) The 1949 appropriation should include an additional $10 million for the purchase of equipment to enable the poorer schools to start lunch programs. Grants-in-aid for this purpose are specified in the National School Lunch Act and in the 1947 appropriation $10 million was specified for this purpose.

Write to your Senator and Congressman that the proposed appropriation of $65 million for the fiscal year 1949 is not enough, and ask for the inclusion of $10 million for school lunchroom equipment. Address Senators care of the Senate Office Building, and Representatives care of the House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

NEW FACTS REVEALED BY THE MARCH, 1948, SURVEY OF THE SCHOOL LUNCH SITUATION, MADE BY THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.

CALIFORNIA

2,500 additional schools could come into the lunch program if funds were available. Current participation takes in but 25% of the total state enrollment, and 75 schools have already discontinued lunch programs due to high cost and low rate of reimbursement. An additional $800,000 of Federal aid would be needed to reimburse at full rates set by the Department of Agriculture, schools now in the program. Additional Federal aid of $2,000,000 annually would be needed to bring all schools into the program that wish to enter it.

Comment from California: "...if this program is to reach those children who need it most, it is essential that funds be provided for kitchen equipment for one or two years."

DELAWARE

15 additional schools with total enrollment of 5,784 children could be brought into the program if funds were available. $120,000 additional would be needed to reimburse at full rates schools now participating, and an additional $174,000 annually would be required to bring into the program all schools wishing to participate.

ILLINOIS

12,000 schools with enrollment of 1,250,000 children could be taken into the lunch program if there were sufficient funds. Approximately 35% of children have dropped out of the program due to higher costs. An additional $300,000 of Federal aid would be needed to reimburse schools currently participating at full rates.

IOWA

4,000 one-room rural schools with enrollment of 40,000 children have been unable to participate due to lack of Federal aid. At present rates of reimbursement, less than full rates allowable, this state would require $140,000 additional to make full reimbursement. To bring into the program all schools that wish to enter it would require an additional $1,200,000 annually.

Comment from Iowa: "...a raise in price to children always bars those who need the lunch most."

MARYLAND

80 additional schools with approximately 16,000 children could be taken into the program if funds were available. 13 schools have been forced out of the program, more than 200 are operating with a deficit, and 21 have changed from Type A to Type B lunches. It is estimated that 10,000 additional children would participate in the plan if prices could be reduced. $250,000 would be needed to reimburse at full rates schools now in the program, and an additional $500,000 annually would be required to bring into the program all schools that wish to enter it.

MASSACHUSETTS

125 additional schools with 37,500 children could be brought into the program if funds were available. 28,924 children have dropped from the lunch program due to high prices. This state would need $269,000 to reimburse at full rates the schools now in the program, and an additional $100,000 annually to bring into the program all schools that wish to enter it.

MICHIGAN

4,627 additional school districts with 763,131 children might come into the program if funds were available. Well over 20,000 children have dropped out of the lunch program due to high prices. This state needs $350,000 additional Federal aid to reimburse at full rates schools now in the program, and approximately $8,303,563 additional annually to bring into the program all schools that wish to participate.

Comment from Michigan: "...many comments received on the noticeable improvement in health and attitude of children when school lunches are made available."

MISSOURI

1,400 additional schools with enrollments of over 40,000 children could enter the program if funds were available. 28 schools have discontinued the lunch program due to higher costs and low rates of reimbursement, and over 20,000 children have dropped from the lunch program because of increased prices. Missouri needs $500,000 additional aid to reimburse at full rates all schools now in the program, and an additional $600,000 annually to bring into the program all schools with the wish to enter it.

Comment from Missouri: "...it was reported that 68% of the school children are not receiving adequate diets."

MONTANA

30 additional schools with enrollments of 3,500 could be taken into the program if additional funds were available. And additional $50,000 would be needed to reimburse at full rates all schools now participating, and the additional sum of $220,000 annually would be required to bring all schools into the program that wish to enter it.

NORTH CAROLINA

100 schools with approximately 17,000 children could be brought into the program if funds were available. 50,000 children have dropped out of the lunch program due to increased prices. $272,000 would be needed to reimburse at full rates the schools now in the lunch program, and $22,500 additional annually would be needed to bring into the program all schools that wish to enter it.

NEBRASKA

Many schools are kept out of the program by lack of funds for kitchen equipment. A state-wide diet survey shows that 70% of Nebraska's children are deficient in diet.

OKLAHOMA

3,500 schools with attendance of 100,000 could be taken into the program if funds were available. 100 schools have been forced to drop from the program, and 31% of the children have discontinued eating in school lunchrooms due to high prices. This state needs $700,000 additional to reimburse at full rates schools now in the program, and would require $3,070,000 additional annually to bring all schools into the program that wish to enter it.

Recent survey in Oklahoma indicates that many children in the state eat but one balanced meal each day -- and that meal is obtained in the school lunchroom.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Approximately 1,000 schools with enrollments of 100,000 children could be brought into the program if sufficient funds were available. This state would need an additional $400,000 to reimburse at full rates all schools now in the program. $1,080,000 additional annually would be required to bring into the lunch program all schools that wish to participate.

TEXAS 1,250 additional schools with enrollments of 125,000 children could be taken into the program if funds were available. 150 schools with 275,000 children were forced to drop out of the program, and 10,000 children have dropped out due to higher prices. Texas would require $1,000,000 to reimburse at full rates all schools now in the program, and $2,500,000 additional annually to bring all the schools into the program that wish to enter it.

UTAH Schools with attendance of 70,000 children could be taken into the program if funds were available. This state would need $350,000 additional to reimburse at full rates the schools currently participating, and would need an additional $630,000 annually to bring all schools into the program that wish to enter it.

VIRGINIA $72,000 additional would be needed to reimburse at full rates all schools now in the lunch program.

WEST VIRGINIA 400 additional schools with enrollments totaling 35,000 could be taken into the program if there were sufficient funds. 240 schools have been forced to discontinue lunch programs. $250,000 would be required to reimburse at full rates the schools now in the program, and an additional $400,000 annually would be needed to bring all schools into the program that wish to enter it.

WYOMING $88,609 would be needed to reimburse at full rates all schools now in the lunch program.

OHIO 4,356 elementary and high schools with enrollments totalling 1,113,994 pupils could be taken into the lunch program if funds were available. This state would require an additional $800,000 to reimburse at full rates schools now participating. They estimate it would take four times this amount additional annually to bring into the program all schools with the wish to enter it.

KANSAS Approximately 115 schools with attendance of 12,000 pupils could be taken into the program if funds were available. An additional $65,000 annually of Federal funds would be necessary to bring into the lunch program all schools with the wish to enter it.

VERMONT 590 schools with attendance of 15,000 children could be brought into the program if there were sufficient funds. In the year 1949, an additional $18,000 would be needed to reimburse at full rates schools in the program. An additional $40,000 annually would be needed to bring into the program all schools that wish to enter it.

THESE ARE THE FACTS! IT IS UP TO YOU TO SUPPORT THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM

Note: If your State is not in this sampling, you can determine the status of the National School Lunch Program in your state by asking your own State officials.

HERE IS WHY THE SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM MUST BE CONTINUED AND EXPANDED!

SCIENTIFIC AND AUTHORITATIVE EVIDENCE of the need as reported by the National Research Council, the U. S. Public Health Service and other medical and scientific groups is presented below:

RURAL COUNTIES: A study of the diets of farm families in 66 counties scattered over the country showed that 65% in the North and West, and 73% in the South are eating inadequate diets.

LARGE CITIES: Diets of low-income families in Baltimore, Cleveland, Detroit Pittsburgh and Syracuse showed that 27% had diets below minimum standards. 74% of 2,000 high school students in New York City had a daily caloric intake below their calculated energy requirements, and 62% were deficient in one or more nutrients. Another study in Chicago showed that 72% of the 7,000 children examined had diets below minimum needs.

SMALL CITIES AND VILLAGES: A survey covering 20 small cities and 140 villages across the nation showed that less than one-fifth of persons examined had diets meeting the standards of the National Research Council.

WOMEN COLLEGE STUDENTS: Over 3,000 were examined in colleges in the North Central states, and 66% were found to have sub-standard diets.

FLORIDA: A study of rural school children revealed that less than 10% are properly fed. Dietary deficiencies were found to be as follows: Milk, 97%; eggs, 90%; vegetables, 64%; citrus fruits, 64%; fats, 77%; bread and cereals, 50%.

GEORGIA: In six Georgia communities, 89% of children were found to have inadequate diets.

INDIANA: In Boone County, more than 80% of 3,000 children examined were found to have inadequate diets. This county is above average economically and the local farmers raise most of the food they need, yet their children are, for the most part, undernourished.

MAINE: Elementary school children in one community studied were found to be improperly nourished in 86% of cases.

MARYLAND: Dietary survey of more than 1,100 children in Worcester County showed as high as 81% lacking in one or more food essentials.

MINNESOTA: Out of over 11,000 elementary school pupils in 34 schools, only 45% were found to have adequate diets; 26% were rated as definitely poor. Another survey of 1,080 pupils in rural, suburban, small town and city schools showed only 27% to have good diets, while 40% definitely had insufficient diets.

NEW YORK: A recently completed michrochemical blood survey of 1,200 school children in New York State communities revealed that 54% were malnourished, lacking one or more diet essentials. Another survey of New York City high school students revealed that 74% had sub-standard diets.

PENNSYLVANIA: 10,000 children were studied, and 85% were found to be inadequately nourished. In respect to degree of nourishment, only 0.2% were found to be excellent; 15% fair; and 85% failed to exhibit good nutrition in one or more respects. Analysis of what these children ate shows the following deficiencies: protein 52%; calories 48%; calcium 49%; iron 48%; vitamin A 53%; B vitamins 52%; C vitamins 38%.

TEXAS: An examination of school children in Texas revealed that 20% were so anemic as to require medical attention. 50% could not meet Red Cross standards for blood donors.

HOW HAS THE LUNCH PROGRAM BENEFITED THE CHILDREN

Growing evidence shows that the National School Lunch Act has been one of the most beneficial that our Congress ever passed for the children. It shows that proper nourishment, if for only one meal a day for less than half the days in the year, can improve health, increase growth, reduce absences from school, make children more alert mentally and thereby save the school tax dollars.

MINNESOTA: A school in St. Paul reports: "...since the hot lunch program was started the school nurse has found only a few (children) underweight; instead of over half of the school. School attendance has improved ninety per cent."

In another study more than half of the children were found to have poor diets before the lunch program was started and only one tenth had good diets. Children were taught food values and the lunch program was started and at the end of the first year, poor diets had dropped to 26% and good diets had increased to 28%.

NORTH CAROLINA: A survey of children in one school district, showed that 24% have swollen gums due to a vitamin deficiency. After giving them canned grapefruit juice for only six days, 84% of the children showed definite improvement.

IOWA: Dr. Boyd of the University of Iowa, College of Medicine, reports: "There is good evidence that the majority of children fail to receive diets meeting accepted standards. Eighteen years of observation of children who were given proper diets as contrasted to children who have average diets has convinced the Department of Pediatrics that the adoption of better diets for children would lead to improved health and physique and to the lessening of disease. The wholesomeness and vigor of well nourished children stands out in sharp contrast to the status of children having average diets.

MISSOURI: Twenty rural schools were selected for study. School lunch programs were started in ten of them. In schools with the lunch program, attendance increased 12% and scholarship by over 9%, bearing out statements of teachers that when children are better nourished, they are healthier and learn more readily.

MICHIGAN: A low nutritional status was found in a group of school children selected as representative, when examined in February in Michigan. Many of the children showed abnormalities of the skin and mucous membrane, the results of multiple vitamin deficiency disorders. These children were of families of better than average economic status. They were given an enriched soup for 3 months as part of school lunch and upon re-examination were found to have made significant gains in ascorbic acid and iron status and a great gain in weight and riboflavin status.

VIRGINIA: How the lack of a proper diet retards learning was demonstrated by a controlled experiment in Lynchburg. Children were tested as to ability to perform a variety of practice activities and divided into two matched groups. One group was given additional thiamine for a month and a half and when re-tested showed gains over the control group ranging from 7 to 87 percent.

FLORIDA: Over 1200 children in 9 schools in 2 Florida counties were examined in 1942. Children in two schools having lunch programs were selected for study and special attention. Children in a third school having no lunch program, served as a control group. In school No. 1, children having gross symptoms of malnutrition were given vitamin and iron concentrates to supplement the lunch of good nutritive value. In school No. 2, children also had a good lunch and those who were anaemic at the beginning of the term were given iron and liver concentrate. The effects of better nutrition in school No. 1 were shown by unusual increases in physical measurements, developmental age, improvement in general health, school attendance and progress, and marked decrease in anaemia and gingivitis. Children in School No. 2, showed general improvement but to a less marked degree.

NEW MEXICO: In a study to determine what gains children would make if given a wholesome nutritious lunch at school, it was found that after a period of only four months the children who ate the lunch at school showed striking gains over those who did not in height, weight and musculature. Their attitudes and mental alertness also improved.

RE: The Federal-Aid-to-Education Bill which is likely to remain buried in a House of Representatives Committee unless letters pour in to Washington at once urging that the Bill be put to a vote before the end of this session of Congress.

The Senate has passed the bi-partisan Federal-Aid-to-Education Bill which would make annual grants of $300 million to the States to assist them in the maintenance of their schools. The Bill provides that the poorer States get larger grants per child than the richer States, but each State would get a minimum of $5 per child per year.

But in the House of Representatives the various committees involved apparently do not want to permit the Bill to be debated on the floor and voted on. This session of Congress will probably adjourn in mid-June. If the House of Representatives does not act on the Bill before adjournment all the work on the Federal-Aid-to-Education Bill will have to be done all over again next session, and 20 million school children will be deprived of the better education that more funds would make possible. The lack of schooling, particularly in the poorer states, is shocking! It would be most useful if you would write at once to the following members of the key committees who are either opposed to the Bill, or are non-commital, or are doing nothing at this time to advance it for House action.

MEMO TO:

Re: The serious cutting of appropriation for the U.S. Children's Bureau and what you can do to help the situation

This year the appropriation for the U.S. Children's Bureau was less than last year's. And now the House of Representative's Appropriation bill for the government's next fiscal year (beginning July 1, 1948) calls for a further cut to a mere $1,385,000, not including the child health and welfare grants-in-aid to the States that the Children's Bureau administers under the Social Security Act. Details of the situation are explained in the enclosed joint statement by four organizations concerned with the welfare of children.

You can help by writing a letter to:

Senator William F. Knowland
Senate Office Building
Washington 25, D. C.

He is the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Federal Security-Labor Department Appropriations of the Senate Appropriations Committee. He is a Republican from California.

Please write him that, in your judgment or that of your organization, the Senate should not only restore the proposed cut in the Children's Bureau appropriation, but should also grant the full amount that the Bureau requested, namely $1,600,000 which includes funds for a national clearing house for research in child life, the restoration of traveling expenses for the staff and funds to more effectively administer and supervise the grants-in-aid to the States.

Public hearings on the appropriations for the Federal Security Agency, of which the Children's Bureau is a part, will probably be held the week of May 10th. If you can and will come to Washington to testify on this subject, write or wire Senator Knowland to be assigned a date to testify.

The matter is urgent. You can help by writing promptly and getting others to do so.

Sincerely yours,

OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE:

There will be a meeting of the members of the Executive Committee of the American Parents Committee on Wednesday, December 1 at luncheon at 12:30 p.m. at the Uptown Club, 60 East 42d Street, New York City. Please ask for the private room reserved in the name of Mr. George W. Naumburg.

At this meeting there will be discussed, (1) a complete reorganization of the American Parents Committee; (2) its program of activity for 1949, and (3) the 1949 Budget and ways to raise it. We hope you will make every effort to attend. Please notify us on the enclosed postcard whether or not to expect you.

On the day previous, Tuesday, November 30, the APC will hold in New York City a Conference To Preview Legislation For Children in the 81st Congress and we hope also that it will be possible for you to attend either the morning or afternoon session, or both. Ticket is enclosed, on the reverse side of which is the program.

As I believe you will be interested, I am enclosing a report of the social legislation passed in the 80th Congress. Only two of the measures that the APC worked on during the 80th Congress passed; namely, the continuation of adequate support for the National School Lunch Program, and a slight increase in the Budget for the U. S. Children's Bureau.

Among the legislation that the APC is working on for introduction in the 81st Congress is the National Child Research Institute Bill which is described in an article in the NEW YORK TIMES, reprint of which is enclosed.

$5,000,000 SOUGHT IN CHILD RESEARCH

Parents' Committee Plans to Push for National Institute in Children's Bureau

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—Plans to press for a National Child Research Institute in the Children's Bureau, with an initial $5,000,000 annual authorization, were revealed here today by the American Parents Committee.

Simultaneously Dr. Martha Eliot, medical physician who is assistant chief of the Children's Bureau, described the careful preparation from the standpoint of the "whole child" which has gone into the Bureau's planning for a possible research program.

The bill drafted under the auspices of the Parents' Committee would set up a basic research program in the Children's Bureau itself; would provide for grants-in-aid for child research in the states; would set up a clearing-house in the Bureau for reporting to all researchers on all research in progress; and would provide for dissemination of the information gained by child research.

These provisions would carry out the principal recommendations which have been made to the Children's Bureau by groups of experts who have been working since last November on the problem of how to get more basic research into the development of children—their physical growth, social adaptation and emotional development.

"We especially need research which brings different observers together to look at growing children from all points of view," said Dr. Eliot. "So in our conferences on research we have taken the multi-professional approach."

Such a conference, she said, would include a sociologist, one or two pediatricians, a social worker, a psychiatrist, d an anthropologist.

Two days discussion last June, she said, resulted in a general agreement that on the national scale the basic study which most needed doing was an intensive research into cultural patterns of family life, a sort of an assay of the American melting pot. One expert said that there are more than a hundred cultural patterns in the United States. "What effect do these patterns have on children when they suddenly change environment?" she asked.

To complement the Gesell studies of child development, which are primarily physiological in terms of motor reactions, she said, there should be companion studies of the emotions of children. She cited the work of Dr. Marion C. Putnam and psychotic children, seriously disturbed emotionally before they are two years of age. Some of them, she said, use sleep to escape reality.

"Sleep of little children is a more complicated situation than feeding," she added. "What is back of disturbed sleep? Why do children cry in their sleep? There needs to be research on this.

"Under the new infant-feeding theory of self-selection, of the baby nursing as long and when he wants to, the problem of sleep bobs up. This in itself shows that the various fields of child-study impinge on each other, and that an inter-related study needs to be done.

"And there needs to be more applied research. How can we learn whether or not the things we are now doing for children are bringing the desired results?"

Among the child research groups which could speed up their programs by grants-in-aid similar to those in effect in other research fields Dr. Eliot mentioned the University of Iowa, Yale University, Columbia University, the University of California and the University of Colorado. She said that no comparable research to that being done in these schools is now being done in the South, and that three or four child research centers should be started there.

From The NEW YORK TIMES
Nov. 1, 1948

Here are Basic Facts about the Needs of

THE NATION'S 46 MILLION CHILDREN*

* 17 years and under. This statement was prepared by THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.
from reports of U. S. Government, Nat'l Education Ass'n, Nat'l Child Labor Committee, Nat'l Citizens Council for Migrant Labor, and National Commission on Children and Youth

Children are our most precious and promising national asset, the only national resource which can assure our future as democratic people. But millions of American children lack basic opportunities to grow in health, to learn to read and write, to eat enough of proper foods.

1. DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Nearly four million children are fatherless, motherless, or both.

Yet six out of every ten such children neither receive public assistance (grants for aid to dependent children) nor Social Security benefits (as survivors of men who have died after being in covered employment).

Some 564,000 children were receiving Social Security benefits as survivors. The average monthly benefit (June, 1947) for a family in which a single child received a benefit, was $13.10. Half the children whose fathers died in 1946-47 did not qualify for even this meager benefit. For one million of the children receiving public assistance (23 out of every 1000 under 18 years) the average grant was only $24.21 per child per month.

2. UNDERNOURISHED CHILDREN

Only 50,000 out of the 200,000 school units of the country have a school lunch program.

Approximately three-quarters of school age children do not benefit. Growing evidence proves that the school lunch program, by providing proper nourishment, if only for one meal a day for less than half the days in the year, can improve health, reduce absences from school. Undernourishment hampers learning.

3. CHILD LABOR

Almost 2,000,000 boys and girls 14 through 17 work for pay, part or full time.

This is twice as many as were gainfully employed in 1940. These figures do not include children under 14, many thousands of whom work in agriculture.

50% of these children are not attending school.

Federal laws protect only about 20% of children against harmful employment, in industries which ship goods across state lines.

4. CHILDREN WITHOUT ADEQUATE SCHOOLING

More than 4,000,000 children of school age do not attend school at all.

Many children go to school only six months a year. In many communities there is no schooling beyond the eighth grade. Most public schools are overcrowded; some schools are unsafe; some are one-room, ugly, wooden shacks.

75,000 teaching positions remain unfilled; 110,000 "emergency teachers" are being employed without proper qualifications.

Money for education is not only too little but is unequally distributed; some communities spend sixty times as much on education per child as others do.

5. NEGLECTED CHILDREN

Health: Every year hundreds of thousands of babies and mothers die needlessly.

Although the national death rate for babies under a year old was 38.3 per 1,000 live births in 1945, in one state only 28 babies out of 1,000 died, while in the state at the other end of the list, 100 out of 1,000 died.

Nearly a quarter of a million mothers and babies have no medical care at childbirth and during the first few days of life. At least one-half the maternal deaths and one-third the infant deaths are preventable.

Nearly 28% of all children under 15 who have disabling illness for more than seven days have neither medical nor hospital care.

Not half the school age children have a health examination even by the class-room teacher, let alone a doctor. Only 1,500,000 of 29,000,000 school age children are known to have had a health examination in 1946.

404,540 crippled children registered for needed care. If adequate facilities for finding the crippled children existed, the number would be doubled.

Welfare: 2,500,000 children have marked behavior difficulties. The bulk of mental difficulties begin in childhood, yet 25 states have no child guidance clinic in any community. Full time clinical service for child guidance is provided in only 27 of the largest cities.

Five-sixths of all United States counties have no full time child welfare worker. Out of the 2,200 child welfare workers paid from public funds one-half are concentrated in seven states, mainly in urban counties.

Juvenile Delinquency: At least 250,000 youngsters annually come before juvenile courts.

Children in Migrant Farm Families: Hundreds of thousands of children in families of migrant farm laborers fail to receive the health, education, and welfare benefits available to children of fixed residence.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

Thank you for your letter of December 20.

Here are "Mary Smith Meets the People" and "By the People." I append to "By the People" some later follow-up information.

Tickler set up MET

We have run out of copies of our first mimeographed edition of "The Home Town Self-Survey", but shall send you one of the fresh ones in ten days' time, when we get out a new edition.

Tickler set up MET

The newspaper manual on race in the news and the pamphlet on the function of legislation in improving social conditions are in preparation, and I am afraid it will be weeks or months before either of them is out.

I am writing Charles Smith at once. He is mainly serving to keep us informed; you recall my reluctance to assume the garment of a pressure group.

With cordial regards,

Sincerely,

THIS IS THE FIRST DRAFT OF THE PEDIATRIC EDUCATION BILL
Your comment and suggestions are earnestly invited while it is still in draft form.

" THE PEDIATRIC EDUCATION BILL "

To amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants and fellowships for medical education in pediatrics.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that Title III of the Public Health Service Act, as amended (42 U. S. C., ch. 6A, subch. II), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

PART H - EDUCATIONAL GRANTS AND FELLOWSHIPS "DECLARATION OF POLICY"

"Sec. 371. The Congress hereby finds and declares that

"(a) there is a shortage of pediatricians essential to maintaining the health of the Nation's children and this shortage is likely to increase unless present facilities for training such personnel are strengthened and expanded;

"(b) the cost of providing adequate professional training and facilities therefor, is so high and the sources of income for pediatric training in medical schools and hospitals affording such training are so limited as to render it impossible for such schools and hospitals to operate at present capacity on a financially sound basis,

"(d) it is, therefore, the policy of the United States to take such steps and to utilize such of its resources as are necessary to provide adequate numbers of persons trained in pediatrics (1) by assisting schools which provide such training in meeting their costs of instruction, (2) by assisting hospitals which provide such training in meeting their costs of instruction, and (3) by assisting States to provide fellowships in pediatrics, recipients of which will be committed to return to practise in an area of need within the State, with a view to providing opportunities for more qualified individuals to obtain such training and to induce greater numbers of students to train for pediatrics and to equalize the opportunities for obtaining such training.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GRANTS

"Sec. 372. In order to enable the Surgeon General, through grants to medical schools for training in pediatrics to assist in increasing the number of individuals adequately trained in the field of pediatrics, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for grants to schools of medicine, $2,500,000 for each of the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1952, and for each fiscal year thereafter such sums as may be necessary. Grants to any medical school from appropriations under this section may be used by the department of pediatrics to increase its basic teaching budget and to develop decentralized teaching and rural extension services.

ALLOTTMENTS TO SCHOOLS

"Sec. 373 of the sums appropriated pursuant to Sec. 372, $20,000 for each fiscal year shall be allotted by the Surgeon General equally among schools eligible therefor. The remainder of the sums appropriated pursuant to Sec. 372 shall be allotted by the Surgeon General among schools eligible therefor on the basis of $40.00 per students enrolled for the first semester which commences after the beginning of such fiscal year. No school shall be eligible for allottments under this section unless it has been approved by the Advisory Council on Pediatric Education.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GRANTS FOR HOSPITALS

"Sec. 374 There are also authorized to be appropriated $1,500,000 for the three fiscal years ending 6/40/52, etc. for grants to hospitals approved by the Advisory Committee on Pediatric Education for pediatric residencies, in order to enable the Surgeon General to assist the hospitals in maintaining adequate training for interns and residents, provide pediatric fellowships and supplemental medical school services.

ALLOTTMENTS TO HOSPITALS

"Sec. 375 Of the sums appropriated pursuant to Sec. 374, $1,000 for each fiscal year shall be allotted by the Surgeon General for each pediatric resident and assistant resident filled in an approved hospital.

CONDITIONS FOR GRANTS

"Sec. 376 (a) No payments from appropriations pursuant to Sec. 372 and Sec. 374 for any fiscal year may be made to any school unless such school has filed an application therefor for such year which the Surgeon General determines contains adequate assurance that - -

"(1) such school is utilizing and will continue to utilize its resources and facilities to train the maximum number of students consistent with accepted standards of training;

"(2) such school does not and will not impose any restrictions against the admission of nonresident students which the Surgeon General finds, in accordance with regulations, to be an unreasonable impediment to the acquisition of medical training by students,

"(3) such school or hospital will submit from time to time such reports as the Surgeon General may find necessary to carry out the purposes of this part, and will comply with such conditions as may, subject to the provisions of section 380, be prescribed in regulations.

"(b) No payments shall be made to any school or hospital from appropriations under section 372 or 374 unless the Surgeon General finds that such school or hospital admits (or in the case of grants with respect to a new school or hospital, will admit) students without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, or national origin, except that, in the case of schools located within a State in which separate facilities are required by law to be maintained for separate racial groups, such grants may be made to schools and hospitals which admit members of the minority racial groups, and may be made to any school or hospital which does not or will not admit members of the minority racial groups if the Surgeon General finds that there are comparable opportunities for qualified members of such racial groups who reside in the State to obtain the type of professional training offered by such school or hospital. As used in this section, "minority racial group" means any race or racial group whose members constitute a minority of the population of the continental United States.

PAYMENTS AND WITHHOLDING OF PAYMENTS

"Sec. 377 (a) The Surgeon General, in accordance with regulations, shall determine from time to time the amount to be paid to each school or hospital under this part and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts so determined. Upon receipt of any such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay in accordance with such certifications.

"(b) Whenever the Surgeon General, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to a school or hospital finds with respect to payments from appropriations under section 372 or 374 that there is failure to carry out any assurances given pursuant to section 376 or to comply with regulations under this part, the Surgeon General shall notify such school that further payments will not be made to it from appropriations under such section until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure. Until he is so satisfied the Surgeon General shall make no further certification for payments to such school or hospital from appropriations under such section.

REGULATIONS

"Sec. 378. All regulations with respect to grants under this part to schools of pediatrics and hospitals shall be made with the approval of the Administrator and after consultation with the Advisory Council on Pediatric Education.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GRANTS TO STATES

"Sec. 379 (a) In order further to increase the number of persons adequately trained in the field of pediatrics and available for practise in areas where there is a shortage of pediatricians, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each of the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1952, and for each fiscal year thereafter such sums as may be necessary, $1,000,000 to enable the Surgeon General to make payments to the States to cover the cost of the State Fellowships awarded to persons pursuant to this section.

(b) The Fellowships which may be awarded for each fiscal year shall be allotted among the several States by the Surgeon General. The Surgeon General shall (A) determine the percentage ratio of children under 12 years of age in each State (as estimated by the Department of Commerce for the year preceding the year which the computation is made) to the number of qualified pediatricians, in each State; and (B) determine the percentage ratio of children under 12 years of age in all the States (as determined by the Department of Commerce for the year preceding the year for which the computation is made) to the number of qualified pediatricians in all the States. When the percentage ratio thus determined in (A) for any State is less than the percentage ratio thus determined in (B) for all the States, the number of Fellowships shall be proportionately increased.

(c) Payments to a State pursuant to this section shall be used exclusively for Pediatric Residents, Assistant Residents, at hospitals approved by the National Advisory Council on Pediatric Education, or for academic postgraduate study in pediatrics and allied pediatric subjects in an approved pediatric center. Appointments of persons to such fellowships under this section shall be conditioned upon (1) the appointee being a graduate of an approved medical school, (2) acceptance of the appointee by an approved hospital, and (3) agreement by the appointee to serve, upon completion of his fellowship, in an area of need within the State receiving the grant for a period of not less than two years. If the appointee fails to fulfill his agreement, or if he voluntarily fails to complete the course of training covered by his Fellowship, he shall, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the State Agency good cause for his failure, be obligated to reimburse the State for the cost (reduced in proportion to the extent to which he has fulfilled his agreement under (c, 3)) of the sums paid to him pursuant to this section.

(d) Fellowships to which a person is appointed pursuant to this section shall be either $3,000 per year for an appointee without dependents, or $3,600 with dependents without residence or $2,000 with residence. These fellowships shall be for not less than six months nor for more than three years and above salaries will be prorated accordingly.

(e) Application for these fellowships should be made by the individual to the official health agency of the State. No payment shall be made to a State for Fellowships pursuant to this section unless the selection of persons for such Fellowships is made (1) without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, or national origin, and (2) on the basis of ability and such other factors as may be permitted in regulations.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON PEDIATRIC EDUCATION

"Sec. 380 (a) There is hereby created the National Advisory Council on Pediatric Education, to consist of the Surgeon General and fifteen members to be appointed without regard to the civil service laws by the Surgeon General with the approval of the Administrator. The fifteen members shall be selected on the following basis: chiefs of the Departments of Pediatric of three approved schools of medicine, three members from a panel of ten nominated by the American Academy of Pediatrics, three members shall be teachers or practioners, of medicine, a representative of the Children's Bureau, of the State Health Agencies, of a School of Public Health, of the American Hospital Association and two laymen. (b) Each appointed member shall hold office for a term of three years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and except that the first terms of the original appointed members shall expire, as designated by the Surgeon General at the time of appointment, five at the end of one year, five at the end of two years, and five at the end of three years. An appointed member shall not be eligible to serve continuously for more than three years but shall be eligible for reappointment if he has not served immediately preceding his appointment,

(c) Each appointed member of the Council, while attending conferences or meetings of the Council, or while otherwise serving at the request of the Surgeon General shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by the Administrator, but not exceeding $50 per diem, and shall also be entitled to receive an allowance for actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while so serving away from their places of residence.

(d) The Advisory Council shall advise, consult with and make recommendations to the Surgeon General on matters relating to pediatric education. The Council is authorized to:

(1) review applications for grants from medical schools departments of pediatric (Sec. 373)

"Sec. 381 Except as otherwise provided in this part, nothing contained in this part shall be construed as authorizing any department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States to exercise any control over, or prescribe any requirements with respect to, the curriculum or administration of any school, or the admission of applicants thereto.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

Enclosed is the data you requested on the number of school children per thousand population in the various states. As you will notice, our figures show the number of school age children per thousand total population, rather than per thousand adult population. If what we send is not sufficient, you should be able to get additional basic data from the following sources:

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

At a hearing before a House of Representatives sub-committee on the National School Health Services Bill last Thursday, Congressman John B. Bennett of Michigan questioned a statement that was made to the effect that in the Southern states there were proportionally more children per thousand adult population than in the richer Northern states. He asked for substantiation of this and I agreed to get it for him.

I remember reading such information in one of your bulletins. Have you this statistically broken down, namely the number of children per thousand adults in the Southern states compared to the number of children per thousand adults in the wealthier states. If you have it will you please send it to me air mail. If you haven't got the basic data on this, will you please write or wire me in order that I can look for this material elsewhere.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I think you would be interested in seeing a copy of our new newsbulletin published by our affiliate, The American Parents Committee Education Fund, Inc.

This affiliated agency does not engage in any legislative activities and is merely to spread information and to promote interest in the needs of children. I am wondering whether you would like to supply me with copy for an early issue of this newsbulletin on the special needs of children in the Southern States. I would want anywhere from two to four pages of material. It should deal with the education, health, welfare and any other needs of children on which you have information. We would be glad to credit the Southern Regional Council for this material, or if there are certain things that you think need to be said and you don't want to take the public responsibility for them, the American Parents Committee might be willing to be the authority for the material provided. It would be our preference to give you credit, however, for all material in the issue.

We want to issue this bulletin monthly and we wish to make it available to the various organizations with whom we try to cooperate. The list of the people who receive our bulletin is not very large, but it is pretty influential.

Looking forward to hearing from you about this, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

THE U.S.A. STILL HAS 80,000 ONE-TEACHER SCHOOLS - MOST OF THEM ARE OLD, WOODEN, ONE-ROOM BUILDINGS WITH PRIVIES

A great many people regard the little red schoolhouse as a thing of the past and link it with the horse and buggy era. And it is true that the one-room schools are disappearing from the American scene. But not as rapidly, perhaps, as it would seem considering these figures just released by the U.S. Office of Education: Forty-five percent of all U.S. schools today are still of the one-teacher type. Most of these one-teacher schools are old, wooden, one-room buildings. Furthermore most of them have no running water and their only toilet facilities are privies. In terms of children, this means that one and one-half million American children are attending such schools.

In the days when only the 3 R's were considered the basis for a sound education, these little schools served their function. Students of varying degrees of aptitude and talent struggled together to make the grade. At the end of a semester they all "passed" together and the same teacher went along with them.

Educational leaders have long since recognized, however, that there is more to the business of getting an education than the basic 3 R's, and the trend is toward larger schools with expert supervision and personnel. Many counties and states have assumed the responsibility of providing adequate school buildings and professional guidance. But there is still a great need.

The number of one-teacher schools in the United States has decreased from 200,000 in 1916 to less than 80,000 at the present time. But the degree of reduction varies widely in the states. For example, the States of Ohio, Washington, Maryland and Indiana have decreased by 90 percent the number of one-teacher schools in the past thirty years. While the following states have only reduced these schools by less than one in three: South Dakota, Nebraska, Illinois, Wisconsin and North Dakota.

As a rule, the teachers in these one-room school houses are beginners, many of them under-trained, often underpaid, with little or no help from trained, supervisors.

The rich, educational environment found in the larger, modern schools is not available in the one-teacher type. The school superintendent, supervisors, guidance officers, health services and many of the other services needed, particularly by rural youth, are still lacking in many communities.

The contents of this newsbulletin may be reprinted provided credit is given to the American Parents Committee Education Fund, Inc. and a marked copy sent to us.

Experts in the educational field, in an attempt to offer more children better educational environment have consolidated local districts, thus providing better facilities to serve the local communities, particularly in rural areas. Through this reorganization, the larger units are able to provide the smaller districts with some degree of vocational education, cooperative education and work experience programs as well as the health and special services where needed.

In areas where there are no funds to support educational facilities for the upper grades and high school level, the county, state and district supply funds to send their students to nearby towns and villages. Tuition fees as well as transportation are borne by the local districts. At the present time more than 4,000,000 children are transported annually to other school districts at a cost of $130,000,000 as compared with the 1918 transportation cost of $8,000,000 for approximately 200,000 children. The child-population increase, as well as recognition of the importance of education, are responsible for this tremendous increase in transportation costs.

The picture of the one-teacher school is not all black. It did, in its time, serve the community as a neighborhood center and was near enough to the farmers' homes to avoid long hours of travel for their children. There was often a close bond of friendship between student and teacher when both had to pitch in with the chores of keeping the schoolhouse clean and warm.

The trend to large units, better trained personnel and supervised help in the complex problems of child guidance at the early school-age level, continues but all too slowly. Too many American children are still being educated in the horse and buggy era!

Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth

PROGRESS BULLETIN

Number 2 FSA Building, 4th & Independence Ave., S. W., Washington 25, D. C. November 8, 1949

ENTHUSIASTIC NATION-WIDE CITIZEN RESPONSE

Extension of plans and activities on all fronts for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth has been required to meet overwhelming nationwide response, Leonard W. Mayo, chairman of the National Executive Committee, announced following an all-day session of the Committee in Washington October 22.

Several thousand letters expressing interest in the Conference and desire to participate have come from organizations and individuals. A progress report to the Committee revealed how State and local citizens' committees, widely representative of official and voluntary groups and individuals concerned with child development, are rapidly forming throughout the nation.

"The accent on mental, emotional and spiritual development as the focus of the Conference's concern for children and youth has struck a responsive chord in layman and professional worker alike," Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau and secretary of the National Committee said in telling the executive group that, for breadth of interests represented, and spontaneity, the responses already had outdistanced previous White House Conferences on children.

The executive committee meeting, first to be held since the appointment of the eighteen-member group by the National Conference Committee last month, evaluated progress and developed over-all planning. Consideration was given to the plan of work and composition of the Technical Committee on Fact Finding and the four advisory councils on: Participation of National Organizations; Federal Government Participation; Youth Participation; and State and Local Action. Full membership was appointed to the Conference Program Committee and the Committee on Budget and Finance.

Agreeing with President Truman that "the greatest challenge facing the world today is how it can help its children to be secure in themselves, in their families and in their communities" are: Charline Banks, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Ruth Schaffer, Columbus, O.; and Herman Neusch, Amarillo, Tex. All are members of the National Committee.

STATE LANDSLIDE

"We asked for citizen participation and we got it", Melvin A. Glasser, executive director of the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth reported to the Executive Committee on October 22.

A total of 37 states and territories and the District of Columbia have already responded to the President's and Mr. Ewing's requests to form state committees for the Midcentury Conference, Mr. Glasser said. Governors in 23 states and territories and the District have already appointed committees. An additional 14 governors have replied that they are giving consideration to the matter.

"Judging from the letters and telegrams, many of which list complete committees, citizen interest in helping provide a healthy environment in which children can grow is widespread. They are already actively participating in state planning. The committees that have been formed are for the most part broadly representative of people from every walk of life as well as the professions concerned with children."

In view of the rapidity of organization in the states, it has been necessary to undertake full-scale

ORGANIZATIONS WHOLE-HEARTEDLY RESPOND

Mr. Oscar R. Ewing, White House Conference chairman, this week announced plans for representatives of approximately 600 national organizations with programs for, and interests in children and youth, to meet on November 29 and 30, in the auditorium of the Federal Security Agency's north building in Washington, D. C. Specific plans for participation in Conference planning of all national professional and citizens' groups concerned with children and youth will be developed.

National health, welfare, education, religious, labor, civic, and other organizations have responded with enthusiasm to a letter addressed to them in September immediately after the President's call for the Midcentury Conference. Now to provide official Conference status for organizations having bona fide programs concerned with children and youth, an Advisory Council on Participation of National Organizations will be developed. Through this Council special knowledge, experience, and resources of national organizations will be made available to the Conference activities.

Valued and varied assistance to the work of the Conference will come as a result of the special contributions that professional and citizen organizations have to offer. Some will aid the current fact finding studies bearing on mental, emotional and spiritual well being of children and youth; some may conduct corollary studies of their own. Other organizations which have state and local constituents will work with the Conference's State and local Committees in holding discussion groups and developing community programs.

If the entire Midcentury Conference, in its effort better to equip children to survive disease and be masters of their destinies, produced no other results than to pool the pertinent knowledge and know-how of national organizations, and helped in the process of fusing national programs with community projects, these achievements alone would represent significant contributions.

The Advisory Council on Participation of National Organizations consists at present of five elected representatives of the National Committee: Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck and Donald Sullivan of Washington, D. C.; Rev. C. E. Krumbholz, New York City; Walter Reuther, Detroit, Mich.; and Mrs. Roy C. F. Weagly, Hagerstown, Md. The Council will be expanded according to the decisions reached at the meeting at the end of the month.

LET'S COUNT YOUTH IN

What could be more reasonable than youth participation in a conference on children and youth? But surprisingly this will be the first of the decennial White House Conferences on Children and Youth in which young people will take active part.

Young people will participate in the Conference work not as members of an "age group" marked "Exhibit A" but will share responsibility with adults in almost all phases of the planning. The five young adults on the National Citizens' Committee have been assigned places on the four National Advisory Councils.

An Advisory Council on Youth Participation has been authorized by the National Committee to establish channels for the contributions of youth of high school and out-of-school ages to the Midcentury Conference.

Sparkle and adventure to State and local programs will come through youth participation. Meetings and discussion groups, whereby the attitudes of young people toward home life, the church, the school, and community activities, are but an example.

Two major meetings in Washington, one last spring and the other this October, were preludes to present progress of policy and organization for youth participation in the Conference.

Seventeen national leaders representing the Boy Scouts of America, American Red Cross, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Education Association, American Youth Hostels and other voluntary organizations concerned with youth mapped out recommendations aligned with the specific objectives of the 1950 Conference attended the October meeting. Miss Miriam R. Ephraim, of the National Jewish Welfare Board presided.

Recommendations emphasized that young people should be included in Conference activities on the basis of their qualifications and the contributions they can make; not merely compartmentalized in youth committees as such. Also recommended: that methods be developed to obtain the opinions of a wide range of young people throughout the county on such matters as their place of living, employment opportunities, housing, schooling, and religious education.

Two of the four National Committee members appointed to the Advisory Council on Youth Participation are young people. They are: Charline Banks, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Ruth Schaffer, Columbus, Ohio. The other members are Pauline Newman, New York, N. Y., and Frances Bacon of Los Angeles, Calif. The Council, in process of development will include representatives of national youth member organizations and of national organizations serving young people.

TAX EXEMPT STATUS FOR WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE GIFTS

The Executive Committee of the White House Conference on October 22nd approved an arrangement worked out with the Child Welfare League of America whereby that organization has kindly agreed to act as the recipient of voluntary contributions for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth. A recent ruling from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue advises that gifts made to the Child Welfare League of America for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth would constitute allowable deductions by individual donors under section 23(o) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Because it is a nationwide citizen effort, primary financial support for the Midcentury White House Conference, as with previous White House Conferences, must come from voluntary sources. The 1950 White House Conference Fund requirements have been placed before a number of philanthropic foundations and individuals. Interest in

WHAT'S THIS ABOUT "FACT FINDING"?

Faced with the task of presenting, in a span of months, information that seems to have eluded most of us mortals over a half century of remarkable scientific and human enlightenment, the Technical Committee on Fact Finding brings together in one group nationally recognized leaders from the various disciplines.

Headed by Benjamin Youngdahl, dean of the George Warren School of Social Work, Washington University (St. Louis) this Committee will advise and aid the fact finding staff in its difficult assignment of:

Assembling scientific knowledge from psychology, psychiatry, physiology, cultural anthropology, sociology, etc., about healthy personality development - what enters into it; what facilitates or handicaps it. This material is to serve as a background for more practical studies. It is also proposed to examine (a) the American system of values as it affects children; (b) prevalent attitudes and practices in American life that controvert the American ideal; and (c) child-rearing practices in various cultural groups in the U. S.

Assembling a statistical description of the present economic and social conditions and services affecting children. . . .

Assessing ways in which present programs and services for children help or hinder the development of healthy personalities. . .

Obtaining examples of programs and practices that seem particularly effective in creating the kind of situation in which children feel respected, at ease, capable of using their best capacities, etc. . . .

Obtaining opinions about the minimum essentials in the professional training of persons who serve children.

In short, the Committee will help to consolidate information from the universities and from the fields of professional practice to show just

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

How can a State committee obtain help in developing its Conference activities?

Field services are of necessity limited by the extensive geographical coverage required and a small Conference staff. However consultation and advisory services are to be made available. Field offices are being established in San Francisco to serve the west coast and in Chicago to serve the midwestern States. The northeastern States and the southern States will be served from Conference headquarters in the District of Columbia, by the director of State and Local Action and the Assistant Director.

At this time it is advisable to address requests to the Director of State and Local Action at the Conference Headquarters so that staff visits may be efficiently planned.

How will information, such as that provided by the nationwide Study of Child Health Services conducted by the American Academy of Pediatrics, with the cooperation of the Public Health Service and the Children's Bureau, be used in the Conference?

This Study, like all surveys of services to children, will be of great help to the Fact Finding staff of the Conference. This staff, with the advice of the Technical Advisory Committee, is assembling pertinent data relating to the healthy personality development of children. A healthy personality means a sound mind in a sound body. It is, accordingly, very fortunate for the White House Conference that the Academy of Pediatrics' survey of services in the health field is available to its fact finders.

Will the Conference concern itself with the cultural factors affecting the lives of American children?

Yes. Concerned as it is with consideration of the factors in American life which can and should be contributing to the development of healthy, well-rounded personalities in children and young people, the Conference will look at the effects and contributions of music, art, children's museums, libraries, etc.

activities with the small executive staff. Mr. Glasser cited for instance that twenty states are being visited in thirty days by staff members. "Now", he said, "if we expect states and communities to develop real programs looking to the Conference in 1950 and following up the Conference over the coming decade, it is up to the National Committee and the staff to give the information and guidance required."

To help meet this growing demand for nationwide service, Mr. Glasser announced the appointment of Mr. Louis de Boer as Director of State and Local Action, and Mr. Paul McCormack as Consultant with field responsibilities for the mid-western States. Mr. de Boer comes to the White House Conference staff from his position as educational secretary of the Illinois State Mental Hygiene Society. Mr. McCormack's last position was Chief of Repatriation and Resettlement of Displaced Persons with the U. S. Army in Germany.

STATE CONFERENCE PROGRAMS ALREADY "GOING CONCERNS"

In order to bring together information and reports on State and local programs for children and youth and to provide for exchange of mutually helpful experience, an Advisory Council on State and Local Action is being formed. The National Executive Committee on October 22 voted that this Council should consist of 110 members: four from the National Committee and two each from the 48 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

State White House Conference Committees on Children and Youth are being asked to choose their own official representatives to the Council which will hold its first full scale meeting in Washington in December. With State and local committees forming rapidly, the December meeting promises to sparkle with good reports of community organization and of preconference action programs for children and youth already under way.

Members of the National Committee who have been appointed to serve on the National Advisory Council are: Rabbi Solomon Goldman and Mrs. John E. Hayes, Chicago, Ill.; Benjamin E. Mays, Atlanta, Ga.; Emma Puschner, Indianapolis, Ind.; and Herman Neusch, Amarillo, Tex.

State committees appointed or designated by the Governors at the President's request fall under four categories: existing State committees on children and youth such as the Florida Children's Commission; single existing state-wide group as the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers; committees of representative citizens; and committees of organizations. In each case membership attempts to be inclusive of children's interests throughout the State.

FOR EXAMPLE

An example of what a State citizen's committee should be and can do is highlighted in the work of the FLORIDA CHILDREN'S COMMISSION. Established by act of Legislature in May 1947 its membership, appointed by the Governor, consists of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction; the State Health Officer, Welfare Commissioner, Chairman of the Crippled Children's Commission and civic-minded men and women selected because of their broad interests and knowledge, their ability to make contributions to specialized fields, and their concern for children. The Governor likewise, by law, has appointed County committees numbering 9 or more members each.

Over the past two and a half years Florida's State and local committees have developed, through studies, information concerning the needs of its children and have submitted plans and proposals to meet the needs. A $50,000 appropriation was made for a two year period. Members serve without compensation.

Some of the results: A detailed study of juvenile courts; a booklet of questionnaires for the County studies and a report of findings; a state-wide conference resulting in plans for serving handicapped children; establishment of a clearing house for all groups planning legislation affecting children; beginnings of planning toward a State-wide study of child placement practices and an informational service on child welfare activities in the form of a News Bulletin.

IN OREGON, THE GOVERNOR'S COMMITTEE ON CHILDREN AND YOUTH, formed in 1948, has been designated by the Governor as the official State White House Conference Committee on Children and Youth. It has a salaried executive secretary. Study committees, including education, health, family life, juvenile delinquency, recreation, and youth employment are now at work. A committee on child welfare is to be appointed. The State Committee is financed by public and private funds.

THE CALIFORNIA YOUTH COMMITTEE, appointed by the Governor in 1945 as successor to the Youth in Wartime Committee, was recently enlarged by Governor Warren and officially designated as the cooperative group for the Midcentury Conference. A statewide two-day meeting this fall emphasized that action rather than discussion was the function of the Committee. Working subcommittees were appointed: Executive; White House Conference Planning; Public Information and Communication; Legislative; and ten committees on Special Problems of Children and Youth such as Mental Health, Health and Medical Care, Education, and Work Experience and Employment.

In Ohio, County committees have already been organized under the aegis of the OHIO COMMISSION ON CHILDREN AND YOUTH. Training sessions on the function and aims of the Ohio Commission have been held at several places throughout the State. The Commission itself held its first working conference for three days in September. Young people participate in the State and County programs. Two professional staff members service the Committee.

NEW HAMPSHIRE'S COMMITTEE FOR THE MIDCENTURY WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN AND YOUTH, recently designated by the Governor, is headed by a pediatrician who, as State Chairman for the American Academy of Pediatrics, directed its recent Study of Child Health Services in that State.

DISCUSSION MATERIALS FOR STATE COMMITTEES

A schedule of specific questions related to the theme of the Conference, for the use of State Committees in preparing activities and materials for local discussion groups, has been drawn up by the fact finding staff of the White House Conference.

The provocative queries deal with topics of interest to parents, teachers, clergymen, doctors, the legal profession and others in daily contact with children. They are, in part, designed to help search out

COMMUNICATIONS

Newspaper columnists have reported tremendous reader response to announcements of the Conference and its focus on the development of healthy personalities in children. National leaders in professional, business, civic and other fields, have taken occasion to telegraph and write congratulations to President Truman and Conference heads. Conference committees have responded enthusiastically to the first Progress Bulletin.

The function of Communications is to bring Conference news to the citizen and professional worker through regular news channels; keep all conference workers informed of progress; and more, - it must provide informative literature, and interpretive and discussion materials for Conference working groups.

To give effective direction to Communications planning and activities the National Committee has appointed Lyman Bryson chairman of the Technical Committee on Communications. It has appointed four members of the National Committee to serve with him: Raymond B. Allen, M.D., Seattle, Washington; Mrs. Jerome Evanson, Jamestown, N. D.; Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer, Washington, D. C.; and Mrs. Phyllis Jones Tilley, St. Augustine, Fla.

Approximately thirty other individuals, experts in various fields of media and the professions related to communications will constitute the full committee. Included will be specialists in interpretative techniques; individuals knowledgeable in use of materials and resources for ground discussions; and those who can make available special facilities such as libraries.

At its meeting on October 22, the Executive Committee authorized the Communications chairman, with the four appointed members from the National Committee and the staff, to appoint a full committee and to hold a meeting to prepare an over-all program of communications. Work is currently going forward in selection of committee personnel and a meeting is scheduled to be held in New York City early in December.

FEDERAL AGENCIES ARE HELPING TOO

Taking advantage of the important resources offered by Federal agencies to the Midcentury White House Conference program, the Executive Committee has set up an Advisory Council on Federal Government Participation.

The Council, many of whose members have served on the Federal Interdepartmental Committee on Children and Youth, provides for participation in Conference activities such as policy and program determination, fact finding, communications, and state and local action; and for cooperation in follow up programs.

Membership includes representatives of each department or agency concerned with children and youth, and heads of agency bureaus and divisions in a position to make the resources of their bureaus available over coming months for assistance in the preparatory work of the Conference. Four National Committee members have been appointed by the Conference Executive Committee to serve with the Council. They are: Harvie Branscomb, Nashville, Tenn.; and Flemmie P. Kittrell, G. Howland Shaw, and Donald F. Sullivan of Washington, D. C.

The agencies represented include: Department of Agriculture; Production and Marketing Administration; Department of Defense; Department of the Interior; Department of Justice; Department of Labor; Federal Security Agency; St. Elizabeth's Hospital; Housing and Home Finance Agency; Administrative Office of the U. S. Courts; Howard University; Selective Service System; Department of Commerce; and the Office of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

CONFERENCE PROGRAM TO BE PLANNED

Details for the actual program for the Conference during the week of December 3, 1950, are to receive preliminary consideration on December 9, 1949, at a meeting in Washington of the newly formed Program Committee.

Responsibility for the plans rests with the Committee on Conference Program which consists of members appointed from the National Committee.

A. J. Brumbaugh of Washington, D. C., is chairman. The Committee has the two-fold function of planning the actual content of the Conference week and of determining who shall receive invitations. In the 1940 White House Conference there were approximately 700 appointed members. In 1930 more than 2000 were invited to participate.

Serving with Mr. Brumbaugh are: James Carey and Mary Leeper,

MORE COMMENTS FROM NATIONAL LEADERS

Telegram to President Truman from W. Walter Williams, Chairman, Committee for Economic Development:

"NO RESPONSIBILITY TRANSCENDS THAT WHICH WE BEAR TO OUR COUNTRY'S 46 MILLION CHILDREN. WE CANNOT EXPECT TO LEAVE THEM A WORLD FREE OF PROBLEMS, BUT WE CAN AND MUST LEAVE THEM EMOTIONALLY, PHYSICALLY AND SPIRITUALLY ABLE TO MEET AND MASTER THOSE PROBLEMS. I CONGRATULATE YOU FOR CALLING THE MIDCENTURY WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN AND YOUTH TO FURTHER THIS PURPOSE. I AM CONFIDENT THAT ALL CITIZENS WILL FIND IN THE CONFERENCE, AS WELL AS IN THE ACTIVITIES WHICH WILL LAY THE GROUNDWORK FOR IT, A REAL OPPORTUNITY TO ASSURE MAXIMUM DEVELOPMENT OF FORWARD-LOOKING PROGRAMS WHICH WILL EQUIP OUR CHILDREN FOR THE YEARS AHEAD."

Mary McLeod Bethune, President of the National Council of Negro Women, Washington:

"Allow me to add my appreciation to that of many others you must be receiving for your decision to hold a Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth, and for your invitation to all citizens to help in making that conference the springboard to a great forward movement in behalf of all children.

"One of the great cornerstones of our democracy is our belief in the worth and dignity of every single human being. I count on this conference to help all of us translate that belief, more thoroughly and more consistently than ever before, into concrete services and opportunities for all children so that each one of them may grow up with respect for himself and with dedication to the service of his fellowmen."

ANNOUNCEMENT

The name of The American Parents Committee Education Fund, Inc., a non-profit, membership association incorporated in 1947 under the laws of the State of New York, has been changed to The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare, Inc. No changes have been made in its purposes as stated in its certificate of incorporation. The U.S. Bureau of Internal Revenue has issued a ruling that contributions to the support of the organization are deductible as charitable donations on income tax returns.

A RESTATEMENT OF THE AIMS AND ACTIVITIES

While there are a great many local and state organizations devoted to the welfare of children, amazing as it may seem, there is no national association or committee exclusively concerned with all child welfare problems. There are a number of specialized organizations, such as the National Child Labor Committee, various organizations working for better schools, and the Child Welfare League of America, which is an association of public and private institutions and agencies providing foster and day care and other direct services for children. But there is no other association with the broad program in the field of child welfare including aims and activities such as the following, which are those of our Committee:

(1) To digest the mass of current data on the conditions and needs of children throughout the United States and to inform the public about their conditions and needs.

(2) To research for needed information not now available (for example, there are now no national, state or city indexes on the extent of juvenile delinquency, which indexes would be most helpful in checking such delinquency).

(3) To aid and supplement other groups in stimulating local and state efforts to meet child welfare needs.

In general, we will try to convince the nation that children are its most precious asset and that every possible effort should be made to provide that our 46 million children should grow up to be healthy, educated and good citizens.

The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare will not take any position for or against legislation. However, through its affiliate, The American Parents Committee, the members of The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare will be supplied with digested, factual information on proposed federal legislation affecting children for whatever action, if any, its members may individually wish to take.

The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare will cooperate with all specialized agencies in the field.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE

(1) There will be no meetings to attend! Members are, however, expected to remain interested in and informed about the most pressing needs of children. The Committee will send its members in an every-other-month "Newsbulletin on the Needs of the Nation's Children", and a monthly newsletter, "Washington Report on Legislation for Children".

(2) It is hoped that members will encourage, whenever possible, constructive local and state efforts to meet the needs of children.

(3) (Optional) Members will be asked once or twice a year to write to their Congressmen and Senators expressing their personal support of one piece of important child welfare legislation which Congress is considering. There is, of course, no obligation to do this, if for any reason they do not favor the bill.

(4) Members are asked to send an annual contribution to support the work of the Committee, however, the amount of the contribution is left entirely up to each member.

RELATIONSHIPS WITH THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, Inc.

The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare and The American Parents Committee will work in close cooperation. They will share the expenses of a Washington, D. C. Office (as explained in the budget below). They have an inter-locking Board of Directors. The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare refers to The American Parents Committee as its legislative affiliate and The American Parents Committee refers to the American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare as its research and educational affiliate. The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare does research and public education work on the needs of children while the American Parents Committee does the necessary legislative work. The news bulletins of each Committee are sent not only to its own Directors and contributors, but also to the Directors and contributors of the other Committee. The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare takes no position on legislation and it is completely optional whether its Directors, members and contributors support The American Parents Committee's sponsored legislation individually.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The activities of the American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare are controlled by a Board of Directors that meets at least four times a year in New York City. On its Board are outstanding citizens concerned with the welfare of the nation's children and officials and executives of a number of the leading voluntary organizations concerned with the welfare of children. A number of the Directors (far less than a majority) are also members of the Board of Directors of The American Parents Committee.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

My apologies for being so delayed in answering your letter of October 25.

We are too poor and too few to do on our own a real fact-finding job about children in the South. The best suggestion we have is to take the reports that will have been made to the White House Conference on Children and Youth and sift from the Southern ones the material you want.

Provided the reports contain good material, the Council would be happy to take some part in, or even do all, the work of fitting together from them a report about children in the South. But we simply can't, without financing that isn't in sight, do any field research.

I will come to see you when next I can get to New York.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell
Executive Director

GSM;

Skeleton! Dont see how we could possibly do such a report, unless the reports (by states) coming out of the White House Conference would make such material readily accessible to us. Otherwise, the amount of research involved would be tremendous -- and probably not worth it, unless we could use the material too.

If the W. H. Conference reports are usable, why couldn't we prepare a Children's Issue of NEW SOUTH? It would help bring up-to-date at least parts of our health and education material, and would perhaps fill the bill for Mr. Hecht at the same time.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I know the Southern Regional Council has issued reports on education in the South and health conditions in the South, but I wonder whether it has ever published an over-all report on the conditions and problems of children in the Southern states? If you have published such a report, I wish you would send me a copy.

I am of the opinion that the citizens of the wealthier states of the Union should be informed, should take an interest, and should try to help improve the conditions of the children in the poorer states. When I say help, I don't mean giving charity, I mean that they should work for Federal Government action which would help right out the inequalities of social services that are provided to children.

The American Parents Committee has just formed an organization called The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare, Inc. with which it has an inter-locking Board of Directors. I am enclosing herewith a sheet explaining the objectives of the new organization and also a copy of two of its newsbulletins. It has occurred to me that we might get out a bulletin on the conditions and needs of children in the South. This bulletin should be two or three pages long. I wonder whether you would prepare the text of such a bulletin for us and we will say in the bulletin that we obtained the material from the Southern Regional Council. You will note in the bulletins that I enclose herewith, we have been supplied with the information by other organizations and we have given them due credit in each bulletin.

I look forward to hearing from you about this matter at your convenience. When you next come to New York, I certainly hope you will plan to have lunch with me.

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

WHY ANOTHER ORGANIZATION?

While there are a great many local and state organizations devoted to the welfare of children, amazing as it may seem, there is no national association or committee exclusively concerned with all child welfare problems. There are a number of specialized organizations, such as the National Child Labor Committee, various organizations working for better schools, and the Child Welfare League of America, which is an association of public and private institutions and agencies providing foster and day care and other direct services for children. But there is no other association with the broad program in the field of child welfare including aims and activities such as the following, which are those of The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare, Inc.

THE COMMITTEE'S AIMS

(1) To digest the mass of current data on the conditions and needs of children throughout the United States and to inform the public about their conditions and needs.

(2) To research for needed information not now available (for example, there are now no national, state or city indexes on the extent of juvenile delinquency, which indexes would be most helpful in checking such delinquency).

(3) To aid and supplement other groups in stimulating local and state efforts to meet child welfare needs.

In general, the ACC will try to convince the nation that children are its most precious asset and that every possible effort should be made to provide that our 46 million children should grow up to be healthy, educated and good citizens.

The ACC will not take any position for or against legislation. However, through its affiliate, The American Parents Committee, Inc., the members of the ACC will be supplied with digested, factual information on proposed federal legislation affecting children for whatever action, if any, its members may individually wish to take.

The ACC will cooperate with all specialized agencies in the field.

SOME SPECIFIC CURRENT ACTIVITIES

The ACC is deeply interested in strengthening the U. S. Children's Bureau. To this end, it is calling together, with the full knowledge of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, a number of outstanding leaders in the child welfare field to review the present status of the Children's Bureau, to make recommendations as to its future activities, and to suggest any other constructive steps that appear to be advisable.

The ACC publishes a "Newsbulletin on the Needs of the Nation's Children", which is sent not only to its own members, but also to a large list of key people and organizations whom it is hoped can be stimulated to great interest in meeting the needs of children.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The activities of the ACC are directed by a Board of Directors that meets at least twice a year in New York City, with its Executive Committee meeting as often as is necessary. On its board are outstanding citizens concerned with the welfare of the nation's children and officials and executives of a number of the leading voluntary organizations concerned with the welfare of children.

MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE

Persons throughout the United States who are known to be genuinely interested in the welfare of children are being invited to be members of the ACC.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE

(1) There will be no meetings to attend! Members are, however, expected to remain interested in and informed about the most pressing needs of children. The Committee will send its members its own "Newsbulletin on the Needs of Children", and a newsletter, "Washington Report on Legislation for Children", the latter being published by its affiliated organization, The American Parents Committee, Inc.

(2) It is hoped that members will encourage, whenever possible, constructive local and state efforts to meet the needs of children.

(3) (Optional) Members will be asked once or twice a year to write to their Congressmen and Senators expressing their personal support of one piece of important child welfare legislation which Congress is considering. There is, of course, no obligation to do this, if for any reason they do not favor the bill.

(4) Members are asked to send an annual contribution to support the work of the Committee, with the amount of the contribution left entirely up to each member.

THE SCHOOL CRISIS GROWS WORSE!

Schools throughout the nation have been shockingly over-crowded during recent years and now, to make a bad situation even worse, nearly a million more pupils have entered the elementary schools this fall than did last year. Here is a quick summary of the situation:

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE ENROLIMENTS FOR 1950-51 AS COMPARED WITH THOSE FOR 1949-50

Private commercial schools.....	300,000	300,000
Nurse training schools, (Not affiliated with colleges and universities)....	75,000	75,000
Total other schools.....	375,000	375,000
Grand Totals.....	32,903,000	32,125,000

NOTE: This tabulation consists of the estimates of the U.S. Office of Education. They include enrollments for the entire school or college year; they are not restricted to September enrollments alone.

School building needs are greater today than they ever have been in the nation's history. The acute shortage of school facilities is due to (1) the deferment of construction during World War II, (2) the shifting of population during and since the war, and (3) to the sharpe increase in the birth rate during and since the war. Hundreds of thousands of pupils will be taught in buildings that are unsanitary and unsafe. Many schools will run on a double and triple shift basis. In virtually all schools the classrooms will be over-crowded.

The U.S. Office of Education revealed that by 1957 there will have been a 10-year increase of more than 10,000,000 pupils in public, parochial, and private elementary and secondary schools throughout the United States. If one teacher teaches 25 children, this would mean a national need of 400,000 more teachers in 1957 than we had in 1947, it is pointed out.

It is estimated that 90,000 elementary school teachers will be needed this year over and above the number now teaching. The supply will come in part from the 36,000 students with some college preparation for elementary school teaching. On the other hand, the college supply of persons prepared for secondary school teaching will be 85,000, to fill an estimated need for 25,000 high school teachers in 1950-51.

ONE MILLION MIGRANT CHILDREN ARE DISINHERITED FROM U.S. BENEFITS

School, a decent home, good health -- all the things most American children take for granted -- seem strange and wonderful to the children of migrant families. These are the one million children who are dragged from one harvest to another along the East Coast or through the Middle West or up the West Coast. Helping their families eke out a living in the fields, they work long hours to provide fresh fruits and vegetables for the more fortunate American families.

Many migrant children have never been inside a school. A study by the U.S. Children's Bureau in Hidalgo County, Texas, showed that over 15 percent of the children of agricultural laborers had never gone to school. More than half of the children contacted in a study of Texas-Mexican migrant families working in Wisconsin during the summer of 1947 had gone no higher than the second grade. Migrant children are not even getting as much schooling as their parents did, one study of children working in strawberries in Arkansas and Kentucky showed.

The United States free public school systems do not include these children. Only one state, New Jersey, makes any effort to give them an education and New Jersey only operates one short-term school for migrant children during the summer. Elsewhere, financially strapped rural schools do not welcome additional temporary students. In some states children who are not residents are excluded or required to pay tuition to attend.

School attendance laws in most states apply only to resident children. Others have so many loopholes that they cannot be enforced. In some states a child employed in agriculture is legally excused from school. In others, children are required to attend only 120 days of the school term. In Louisiana, only 90 days a year attendance at school is required in towns of less than 10,000.

While other children are getting an education, the migrant child is stooping to pick strawberries or carrying heavy baskets of potatoes. Their small hands are needed in the fields to add to the families income. A U.S. Department of Agriculture study of migratory workers in San Joaquin Valley, California in 1948 found that the average annual wages earned by a migratory worker totaled approximately $1,200 a year but that with the wife and children working, a badly needed $600 more could be added to the budget.

The contents of this newsbulletin may be reprinted provided credit is given to The American Citizens Committee for Child Welfare, Inc. and a marked copy sent to us.

Unlike children in industry, children doing as injurious work in the fields are completely unprotected in 21 states. Fifteen more states allow children of any age to do agricultural work outside school hours. These 36 states, or three-fourths of the states, allow not just work on the family farm, but tedious, hard and often dangerous work on industrialized farms for children who are barely able to toddle around after their parents.

"It is better for the children to go to the fields to work than to stay at home because their homes are so poor", a packing shed foreman in Hidalgo County told the U.S. Children's Bureau. Most of the "homes" the migrants can find are poor. A vacated chicken coop or a leaky barn are often their only shelter. Last winter in Kern County, California, migrants were found living in the ditches along the main highway and behind sand dunes with only a tarpaulin for protection against the weather and with the newest baby in a grocery carton.

At present migrant families are excluded from all government housing programs. The old Farm Security Administration migrant centers are now either sold or leased for nominal fees, pending their liquidation by June 30, 1950, the deadline set by Congress. Many camps which are now being operated by farmers associations or local public housing authorities have increased rents by as much as $8 a week. All child care and health programs have been dropped.

Despite the much acclaimed advantages of a life in the open air, migrant families have a higher rate of illness than the rest of the population, the U.S. Public Health Service has found. Almost one-fourth of the children born alive in the families surveyed in Hidalgo County, Texas died before reaching 18, and 15 percent died under one year of age. One out of every six Texas-Mexican families studied by the University of Wisconsin had members needing medical care.

The health of migrant children is undermined by both poor living conditions and inadequate diets. The two children, aged 16 and 21 months in Hidalgo County, who took cow's milk only in their coffee, epitomize the nutrition problem. Or take the family in California whose mother said, "We haven't had a bite of meat for three weeks. At those prices we can't even eat to keep up our strength to earn any money."

With a higher rate of illness, the migrant family receives less medical attention than the rest of the population. Unable to lay aside money from their spasmodic earnings for emergencies, the migrant family cannot, in most cases, afford a doctor. Yet public health and medical services are not available to migrant children.

No state in the union provides a well-rounded health and welfare program for all its rural families, let alone the families of its migrant agricultural workers. Often the rural counties in which the migrant families are working do not have even prenatal or well-baby clinics. Even the cost of an accident on the job is paid by the migrant family, for in only 5 states are migrants covered by workmen's compensation law.

Other families in an emergency, such as sickness, can turn to the county for help. The migrant family, shut out by residence requirements for aid, must face emergencies alone on their meager wages. Residence requirements, which no migrant family can afford to stay home long enough to meet, exclude them also in almost every state from the Federal Programs for Aid to the Blind, Old Age Assistance and Aid to Dependent Children.

Migrant children are deprived of the benefits which most U. S. children receive almost as their birthright. But the loss to migrant children is not born by them alone. Children of other more fortunate American families also pay. All the children living in Kern County, California paid last year with the County's high infantile paralysis rates, with its infant diarrhea epidemic. Both were attributed by the Kern County Council of Social Agencies to insanitary housing for the migrant families who came to help in the fields. The high juvenile delinquency rate in California was blamed by witnesses before the State Crime Commission on the "lost generation" growing up in unsupervised labor camps. The cost of migrant children growing into uneducated citizens will tax heavily the democratic government for many generations to come.

The solution for the ills of migrant children is not one of setting up special programs to care for these one million children. The solution is one of including them in the nation's education, housing and welfare programs-not as a special underprivileged group but as future citizens of the United States. They, too, should have a birthright.

The data for this Newsbulletin was obtained from the National Citizens Council for Migrant Labor.

MINUTES OF THE SEVENTEENTH MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.

The seventeenth meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Parents Committee, Inc. was duly held on the 1st day of February, 1951 at 12:30 p.m. in a private room of the Uptown Club in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York pursuant to written notice thereof mailed to each Director.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman.

Those present: Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, Mrs. Gertrude F. Zimand, Mr. Leo Perlis, Miss Helen Hall, Mr. Maximillian Elser, Colonel Harold Riegelman, Mrs. George J. Hecht, Mrs. Clara Savage Littledale, Mrs. Arthur White, Mr. George W. Naumburg, Dr. Roma Gans, Mr. Lester Granger, Mr. Jonathan Bingham, Mrs. Luther Gulick, Mr. B. Alden Lillywhite, Mr. George J. Hecht, and Mrs. Jack B. Fahy, by invitation.

The minutes of the last meeting were approved as mailed out.

The Chairman presented the attached statement of the receipts and disbursements of the organization for the past six months. In view of the difficulty of raising the APC's budget there was a long discussion as to whether the APC should continue its activities especially because in the present defense economy, little new social legislation is likely to be passed. The members of the Board however felt that the gains made on behalf of children during the past several decades must be stoutly maintained. It was also pointed out that many emergency measures established patterns for necessary permanent legislation. It was therefore unanimously Resolved:

That in the present emergency, it is more important than ever to work for federal legislation on behalf of children particularly in order that adequate provision should be made for children in a defense economy. Particular stress should be placed upon the need for day care centers for the children of working mothers and federal aid for new school construction.

The Chairman submitted the following report on requests that had come into the Washington office during January, 1951:

	On proposed legislation	On speeches
I. The number of requests for information or help -
a. From Senators or their assistants, or clerks of Senate Committees	11
b. From Congressmen, or their assistants, or clerks of House Committees	13	1
c. From U.S. Government Departments	15
II. The number of requests for information on proposed legislation -
a. From organizations	25
b. From individuals	5

Mrs. Fahy, the APC's Executive Director, reported on the legislative work done in Washington since the last meeting. Although the formation of Committees has delayed legislative action, a number of our bills have already been introduced. Despite the twin-drives of economy and defense there appears considerable interest in our legislation.

The President requested only $32,999,200 for the grants administered by the Children's Bureau. Last year we secured the increase of these grants to $41,500,000 in an amendment to the Social Security Act. Therefore, on motion duly made and seconded, it was resolved that the APC should work for the full appropriation for the Children's Bureau of funds authorized by last year's amendment to Title V of the Social Security Act on behalf of Maternal and Child Health Services, Crippled Children and Child Welfare Services.

There was discussion of the Defense-Housing Bill on which hearings are now being held in both the House and the Senate. One title of this Bill provides for Community Facilities including School Construction and Day Care Centers. Therefore, on motion duly made and seconded, it was voted that the APC should support adequate provision for the needs of children in defense legislation.

Although the APC has already endorsed the Federal Aid to Medical Education Bill which includes the training of nurses, it was felt that support of a newly-introduced Bill pertaining solely to nurses education was in order. Therefore, on motion duly made and seconded, the APC endorsed the Bolton Bill providing federal aid for the education of nurses.

Members of the Board expressed concern about the lack of trained personnel to handle new defense needs of children. It was pointed out that there were no teachers available for new Day Care Centers and that the need for recreational directors for after school hours was acute. It was therefore resolved that the APC sponsor legislation on the recruiting and education of personnel to handle special services for children as they are affected by a defense economy.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned at 2:30 p.m.

Confidential Report to the members of the Board Of Directors of
THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.
made by Mrs. Jack B. Fahy, the Executive Director
on October 17, 1950

Despite the economy wave and the international situation, the APC made considerable progress for children in the second session of the 81st Congress. Tangible legislation passed was the increased authorization under the Social Security Revision Act for Maternal and Child Health Services from $11 million to $16.5; Crippled Children's Services from $7.5 million to $15; and Child Welfare Services from $3.5 million to $10. At least a start was also achieved on needed aid for School Construction including a survey on long-term need.

Less tangible but probably more important was the growth in the prestige and strength of the APC. This is vital for long-term achievement of children's legislation. What we had already accomplished by our work in the first session became obvious the first month of the second session.

An effort was made in the House to change the Rules under which legislation is brought to the floor for action. This reversal would have seriously handicapped all social legislation. The APC was hurriedly called by Congressman Bailey of W. Va. and asked to confer with the strategists opposing the change. Within the course of three days the APC lobbyists talked to more than 250 Congressmen. The move to change the Rules was defeated, and our work was rewarded by a luncheon with the White House advisors. Subsequently we have been in frequent consultation with the top Administration advisors on strategy for that part of the Administration program we support. From this spring-board we were able to approach the Bureau of the Budget with whom we have been in continuous touch in the hope of increasing the Children's Bureau appropriation. Our Board member, Mrs. Rosenman, attended our first conference with the Bureau.

We are pleased to report that 24 Senators, ranging from Southern Democrats to Northern Republicans, in addition to the Administration people, have called us for information and consultation, as well as 31 House members. A number of these call us frequently. In addition to these Members of Congress we should also mention the close working relations the APC has maintained with staff members not only of Senators and Congressmen but with the working staffs of Committees. These staff people are extremely useful in helping to get action on our program. For instance, a staff expert assigned to a sub-committee handling legislation in which we are interested can remind a busy Senator that he must call a meeting for action on the measure. We can also make suggestions to this staff member on the kind of a report we want written in order that the legislative history will safeguard our intent in the law.

Also, speaking generally, the APC has in this session greatly strengthened its mobilization powers. We have been able to secure the cooperation, in testifying, letter writing and calling upon Congress of labor groups, women's clubs, church organizations, farm, and veterans. We no longer have to explain who we are. It should be understood that when we talk of our success in the memorandum which follows, we extend appreciation to all of the cooperating organizations.

LEGISLATION:

1. The APC initiated and carried through the increases in Maternal and Child Health Services and Crippled Children's Services under the Social Security Revision Act. Our original success was due to personally convincing several key Senators. The final acceptance of these increases despite the economy wave was due to supplying Senators and Congressmen with detailed information on these programs in their home states. We secured most of it from writing to the State Directors of the programs. This material was not only convincing on their home state needs but was material that was useful to them for general background. This was evidenced by the thank-you letters we received.

Organization support was evidenced by the CIO statement that although centered on other provisions of the Act said, "Finally we endorse the recommendations on child welfare services which have been made by the APC."

A Senator told us that during the appropriation struggle for administrative funds (which we lost in conference) that a government official approached him stating that the APC lobbyist was on vacation but that the APC requested he get some action on these funds. He further reported that of course he immediately did so.

The revisions of the Social Security Act that were passed this session which increased by $13,000,000 the grants in aid to the states for maternal and child health and crippled children services were initiated by the American Parents Committee, and its enactment was largely due to our efforts and it is the biggest single achievement that the APC has accomplished in its history. We also helped in the passage of securing the increased grants of $6,500,000 for the child welfare grants, but for this we can only take partial credit.

2. School construction legislation was passed in the Senate during the first session. A House sub-committee toured the country during the recess between sessions studying the needs primarily in areas affected by emergency defense or military establishments. We tried to get local witnesses representing long-term needs at these hearings. These Congressmen were convinced of the emergency needs and convinced the entire House Education and Labor Committee. Due to the rush to adjourn negotiations were simultaneously being carried on for appropriations in the Senate. The House rejected the Bureau of the Budget's estimate for funds and insisted that the Senate request more. In turn Senator Humphrey demanded that the survey on long-term needs be included. The result was inclusion of the survey and more funds than the Bureau of the Budget requested. Yet these funds will only provide for 155 school districts whereas the Congressmen know that 500 to 600 districts desparately need help.

Inadequate as this Act is, its importance lies in the fact that it was introduced for the 1st time in the 81st Congress and its new concept of federal aid for school construction was passed in the same Congress. It is usually estimated that new legislation requires three sessions for enactment. Our success in sponsoring this act is due to the articulate, effective cooperation of the School Superintendents in the Emergency Districts led by our Board member, Mr. Oscar Rose, and the careful technical guidance provided by another Board member, Mr. Alden Lillywhite.

3. Children's Bureau Appropriations: The hearings both in the Senate and the House on the Children's Bureau Budget were far more friendly and sympathetic than in previous years, despite the fact that no increase was granted. This attitude was not only shown to our own witnesses, APC Board member Max Grant in the House, and Mr. Hecht in the Senate, but was evident for the representative of the Children's Bureau when they appeared. We were told that this was due to the continuous spade work of the APC. The Administration request was in itself inadequate. Even this the economy members of the House Appropriations Committee cut. The APC lined up 36 Congressmen to back up Congressman Bolling in a Floor fight to restore the cut. This plan was abandoned when the Sub-Committee majority and minority leaders could not restore any of the cut suffered by the Public Health

Cancer Institute. It was obvious that "economy" would win and all amendments to increase, including the Children's Bureau, were dropped. We won restoration of the cut in the Senate but despite continued activity on the House, we lost in conference.

4. School Lunch Appropriation: We held last year's $83½ Billion appropriation for the School Lunch program, but contrary to expectations, the Secretary of Agriculture was not authorized to pay transportation of surplus foods for this program. The House passed a Bill providing this authority but the Senate Agriculture Committee tabled it and announced no further meetings before the recess. Due to the activity of Church groups and supporters of CARE (also to be included in this authorization), and our personal lobbying in addition to 700 letters for action, the Committee not only met but reported the Bill favorably. The White House requested action. Senator Lucas agreed to bring it to the floor before adjournment. It was strangled by the anti-subversive bill filibuster. Although it was obvious that it would not get to the floor for a vote, the APC lobbyied the tired Senators throughout the night of the filibuster.

5. For the first six months of the session continuous efforts were made to get a Federal Aid to Education Bill out of the House Education and Labor Committee to the Floor for debate and a vote. In this we and the many other organizations were unsuccessful.. We maintain our ability to confer with representatives of all sides of this controversy.

6. There was little direct work on our sponsored School Health Bill. It was caught behind the Aid to Medical Education Bill in the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. We mainly harrassed by frequent inquiry as to the status of the latter. We did several times try to get a quorum present for action on the latter Bill in the hope that once it moved, School Health would be acted on.

7. The only health measure that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee did take action on was Local Public Health Units. This was reported favorably but failed to secure a Rule for floor action. We not only worked on this Bill but were used as the liason between the House by the main Senatorial sponsor, Senator Hill.

8. Second session activity on Child Research was confined to frequent conferences between Agency people, Senators, staff members, and social scientists. No action was taken by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

9. Late in the session the Aid to the Education of Physically Handicapped Children was introduced. Hearings were held in the Senate and the APC testified in favor of the Bill. No action was taken.

10. Reorganization Plan Number 27 to establish in the Cabinet a Department of Health, Education, and Welfare received concentrated and intensive attention. The APC acted as secretary of a clearing house of information on this plan for all interested organizations. The APC testified both in the House and the Senate. We saw innumerable Senators and Congressmen and were frequently consulted by Administration leaders who believed that the plan would be accepted despite our early estimate of defeat. After the defeat recognition was given of our realistic knowledge of the Hill.

The APC testified on legislation four times in the House and five in the Senate. Of these nine times only three statements were presented by Board members, including Mr. Hecht, the remainder by the staff. It is recommended that in the next session more Board members testify.

Miscellaneous: The APC gave the final testimony on the hearings on Low Income Families for the Committee on the Joint Economic Report. We were requested by the Staff Economist to appear at this time because they felt the effect of low incomes on children would be a good summation.

This testimony was particularly effective because we used to illustrate our statement photographs taken by Marion Palfi during a year's Rosenwald Fellowship to study by camera children in the United States. Mrs. White also used her photographs in her School Lunch testimony for us.

The APC also testified on the needs of migrant children before the President's Commission on Migrant Labor.

As part of the Children's Bureau's program we supported House Joint Resolution No. 334 that called for an increase in the U.S. contribution to the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood. This is a Pan-American program started in 1919. In 1946 its council revised the contribution scale and the U.S. assessment was raised from $2000 to $10,000 a year. Congress ignored this increase until this year which meant that small and poor countries such as Guatemala were contributing more than we were. Due to our efforts Congress not only appropriated $10,000 but the arrears we owed from 1946 on.

Our news release in January outlining our program for the second session received broad publicity. A photostatic copy of the New York Times story was sent to every Congressman and Senator. It was subsequently inserted in the Congressional Record. Good publicity was given to our testimony on the Children's Bureau Budget both in the House and in the Senate. Our School Construction testimony was also considered newsworthy.

At least once a month we prepared material on the request of Congressmen or Senators for speeches, both in Congress and out.

A small luncheon was given to award an APC medal for two Senators who had done most for children, Senators Thomas of Utah and Senator Aiken of Vermont. To this we invited a small group of representatives of cooperating organizations and Administration people. It was most helpful for additional cooperation and publicity.

The APC has participated in the planning for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth as a member of the National Organizations Advisory Committee. There have been a number of meetings at which the APC has consistently urged that discussion time be given during the Conference to implementation of what ever recommendations are made.

Our mailing list has increased from approximately 500 to 1,750. These are tabbed for special interests for quick appeals. Its usefulness was indicated in the last minute work on School Lunch when we sent out 700 letters.

PROPOSED APC LEGISLATIVE OBJECTIVES FOR THE 82nd CONGRESS

for the consideration of the Board of Directors

1. Appropriations for the full funds authorized under the Social Security Revision Act for Maternal and Child Health Services, Crippled Children's Services, and Child Welfare and also adequate appropriation for the U.S. Children's Bureau's administration of these grants.
2. A School Construction Bill providing for long-term needs. The Act passed this year is only for areas where the Federal Government owned most of the taxable property and its appropriation was insufficient to cover all of such areas.
3. An adequate appropriation for the U.S. Children's Bureau.
4. Adequate appropriation for the School Lunch Program with full recognition of who has to pay for the transportation of surplus foods.
5. A General Federal Aid to Education Bill.
6. A local Public Health Units Bill.
7. A School Health Bill if we decide that the increased Maternal and Child Health Services and the Local Public Health Units Bill will not meet this need.
8. Research in Child Life and Development. This can either be special legislation or worked out under the original authority of the U. S. Children's Bureau.
9. Federal Aid to Education of Physically Handicapped Children.
10. Cabinet status for the Federal Security Agency
11. Day Care Centers
12. Legislation affecting children of migrants.
13. Federal Aid for Medical Education

PLUS whatever additional legislation the APC's Board of Directors may from time to time vote to add to this list.

MINUTES OF THE TENTH MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.

The tenth meeting of the Board of Directors of The American Parents Committee, Inc. was duly held on the 20th day of June, 1949 at 4:30 p.m. at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York pursuant to written notice thereof mailed to each Director.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, Mr. Hecht.

The minutes of the last meeting were approved as mailed out.

Mr. Hecht announced that Mr. Lowell Iberg, Dr. Alfred J. Marrow and Professor Joseph Stone have accepted their recent election to the Board. On a motion duly made and seconded Mr. Joseph Savage of the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis was elected to the Board.

The Chairman presented a plan for the joint sponsorship and promotion by The American Parents Committee and Parents' Magazine of Children's Day, the third Sunday of October of each year. Children's Day would have two objectives: (1) It will be a fitting occasion for churches and civic and community gatherings to call attention to the basic educational, health, recreational and welfare needs of children and to discuss ways of meeting these needs. (2) It will be an appropriate opportunity for parents and others who love children to evidence their love in tangible ways. The President submitted an editorial to appear in the October issue of Parents' Magazine and showed the Children's Day poster which had been produced, reproductions of which will be sold to department stores, and chain stores. The Chairman stated that the publishers of Parents' Magazine had agreed to pay all the costs of printing and selling the posters and for the promotion of the day and that any profits that would result from the sale of posters would be turned over to the American Parents Committee.

On motion duly made and seconded it was Resolved that the Chairman was authorized to sign a contract with the publishers of Parents' Magazine embodying the above understanding.

On a motion duly made and seconded it was Resolved to organize a National Council on the Observance of Children's Day which would be a division of The American Parents Committee and he was authorized to appoint a Child Welfare Committee which would advise and cooperate in using the day for the stressing of educational, health and child welfare needs and a Trade Promotion Committee of department store and chain store and trade association executives to advise and cooperate in promoting the day through retail stores.

On motion duly made and seconded it was Resolved to ask Senators Young, Langley and Humphreys who proposed a Resolution in the U. S. Senate calling on the President to officially proclaim Children's Day on the second Saturday in June of each year, to change the date to the third Sunday in October when it would not conflict with Father's Day. Furthermore the fall, when schools were getting under way, seems to be a better time of the year for the observance of the day.

There being no further the meeting was adjourned.

Approved: George J. Hecht, Chairman

Clara S. Littledale, Secretary pro-tem

Editorial to appear in the October 1949 issue of PARENTS' MAGAZINE, which will have a paid circulation of more than 1,200,000 copies, going into homes in which there are about 2½ million children.

WHY CHILDREN'S DAY?

by George J. Hecht
Publisher of Parents' Magazine and Chairman, American Parents Committee

Millions of children have each year asked the reasonable question, "There's a Mother's Day and a Father's Day, why not a Children's Day?" At long last, on the third Sunday of October, this brand new Day will be observed in honor of the Nation's children. Sponsored by the American Parents Committee and by Parents' Magazine, it will call upon all who have children or who are concerned with the welfare and happiness of children to set this day apart as a time when the needs of our boys and girls and the love we feel for them can be expressed in ways that are constructive and far-reaching as well as warm and personal.

Children's Day, on October 16th, will be the fitting occasion for churches and civic and community gatherings all over the country to call attention to the basic needs of children and to discuss better ways of meeting these needs. Briefly, such needs are: the best possible health care for all children; good schools, well built and equipped and above all well staffed with qualified teachers; mental hygiene care for children who are developing serious difficulties; better recreational facilities, public and private; the teaching of better intercultural relations and better international understanding in our schools; more attention to helping children learn to live and work in groups and to get along well with people, since getting along and working with people is basic to the success of democracy.

But Children's Day will not stress the national needs of children alone. Children's Day will be an additional opportunity for parents everywhere to show their love for their children in tangible ways. Because we love our children it is good to have a day when we can give special expression to our love, to the joy we feel in having children. Childhood is meant to be joyous, so too is parenthood. Whatever we do for children is better done if we fully realize the happiness that children, cherished and well cared for, can bring to our lives and to the lives of all with whom they come in touch.

Remember the children you love on Children's Day. It is natural and right for us to want to give our children all that we can of the best things in life. Children are never spoiled by such giving if behind it is an understanding of their needs. This means, for instance, choosing toys best suited to the child's age and interests, toys that are well-made, play equipment which encourages the natural creativeness of children. It means giving our children needed apparel and other useful gifts, and as we are able, gifts of beauty and lasting value, thus guiding their tastes and stimulating their appreciation of fine things. Such giving, according to one's means, is a lasting joy to parents and children alike.

And so, because deeper concern and greater love for all children is one of our greatest needs today, we give you, Children's Day. Observe it importantly, joyously in the spirit of its 1949 slogan which is: "Children, the joy of today, the hope of tomorrow."

MINUTES OF THE NINTH MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.

The ninth meeting of the Board of Directors of THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC. was duly held on the 18th day of May, 1949 at 4:15 p.m. at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York pursuant to written notice thereof mailed to each Director.

Those present were: Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, Col. Harold Riegelman, Mr. Maximillian Elser, Mrs. George J. Hecht, and Mr. George J. Hecht.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, Mr. Hecht.

The minutes of the last meeting were approved.

Mr. Hecht reported on the following subjects:

(1) The effective and efficient Washington staff that the American Parents Committee now has.

(2) The National School Health Services Bill passed the Senate without a dissenting vote and has been introduced into the House by about fifteen Congressmen. A hearing before a House Sub-committee is expected shortly. This Bill was originally drafted by the American Parents Committee three years ago and we have been the principal sponsors. A large part of the time of the American Parents Committee staff has been working with the members of Congress about this Bill.

(3) The House of Representatives has voted $75 million for the National School Lunch Program for the governments next fiscal year and the Senate $87 million. The matter is now in conference committee between the two houses. The American Parents Committee testified for a bigger appropriation before committees.

(4) A Sub-committee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee held a two day hearing on the National Child Research Bill which was drafted by the American Parents Committee. The American Parents Committee staff arranged for all the testimony at the hearing which turned out to be very successful. Senator Murray, who presided, indicated early passage of the bill. The bill has been introduced into both houses and a hearing by a House Committee is expected shortly.

(5) The American Parents Committee bill on School Construction has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Humphreys, who is Chairman of the School Sub-committee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Mr. Hecht reported that Mrs. Berle, elected to the Board at the last meeting, had not accepted membership. A motion duly made is seconded and the following persons were elected to fill vacancies on the Board of Directors: Dr. Alfred J. Marrow, Research Director of the Harwood Manufacturing Company; Mrs. Alvin Thalhiemer of the Maryland Board of Education; Mrs. Margaret Lewisohn, President of the Public Education Association of New York City and Professor Joseph Stone of Vassar College.

The President asked the assistance in raising money for the organization and in getting more people on its Board who could devote time to the organizations activities.

There being no further business to come before the meeting, the meeting adjourned at 5:15 p.m.

The Chairman was authorized to recommend additional women vice-chairmen at the next meeting of the Board. Among the women suggested were: Dr. Mary Fisher Langmuir, Mrs. Beardsley Ruml, Mrs. Marshall Field III and Mrs. Mildred McEvoy Horton.

Approval was given to the establishment of the National Child Welfare Fund of the American Parents Committee, Inc. which Fund would be used to finance the APC's work for federal legislation to secure better schools and more adequate health and welfare services for the Nation's 46 million children, many of whom are in serious need.

The Chairman announced that he had received a contribution of $5,000 from The Parents' Institute, Inc. establishing a special fund to finance the preparation and dissemination of essential, authentic information and to finance the expenses of experts to give their views to Congress -- or its established appropriate committees - to further the passage of the National Child Research Bill.

The Chairman reported on his money-raising efforts for the organization and asked the members of the Board to lend every possible assistance. Mr. Hecht stated that $2,500 had been received from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc., $500 from Mrs. Adele R. Levy and some smaller amounts from other people whom he had personally contacted.

The Chairman reported the establishment of a newsletter, WASHINGTON REPORT ON LEGISLATION FOR CHILDREN, with the first issue in January, 1949 and stated that he had received paid subscriptions at $2 a year from approximately fifty persons of the most important organizations in the country, a list of which was read during the meeting.

MINUTES OF THE FOURTH MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS ("EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE") OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.

The fourth meeting of the Board of Directors of THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE INC., was duly held at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, on the 15th day of December, 1947, at 4:15 PM, pursuant to written notice thereof mailed to each director.

Those present were Messrs. Baumburg, Lowenstein, Hecht, Mrs. Littledale and by invitation, Mr. Arthur C. Fatt, Vice President of the Grey Advertising Agency, Inc. of New York City.

The minutes of the last meeting of the Board of Directors were approved.

On motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried the following additional member of the Board of Directors ("Executive Committee") was elected:

ARTHUR C. FATT

On motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried the following additional officers were elected:

Vice-Chairman Walt DISNEY, Motion Picture Producer
" " " " " ROBERT L. JOHNSON, Pres. Temple University

The Chairman reported that a proposal had been made to transfer the health activities of the U. S. Children's Bureau to the U. S. Public Health Service. In his opinion this would be most unfortunate and would disintegrate the Children's Bureau's operation. He felt that the Children's Bureau was doing a splendid and very useful job and that no part of its present functions should be taken from it. On motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried it was RESOLVED that the Chairman should write Mr. Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, and take whatever steps he felt necessary to oppose the transfer of the health activities of the U. S. Children's Bureau to the U.S. Public Health Service.

The Chairman reported that the appropriation for the U. S. Children's Bureau for the Government's fiscal year ending July 31st, 1948, was only $431,000, not counting the grants made to the states under Title V of the Social Security Act and for the liquidating EMIC (Emergency Maternity and Infant Care) Program for the wives of men in military or naval service and certain funds appropriated to administer these grants-in-aid.

Of the $431,000 only a small amount was allocated for child life research. The Chairman pointed out that millions of dollars were spent by the Government for military and naval research; for cancer and other medical research, and in research on the diseases of farm animals and that a negligible amount was being appropriated for research on child life, child health, child welfare and juvenile delinquency. On motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried it was

RESOLVED that the Chairman be authorized to appear before the House of Representatives' Appropriations Committee in support of a request for an increased appropriation for the U.S. Children's Bureau and particularly for increased appropriations for child life and child welfare research and to take whatever other steps he felt desirable to achieve this goal.

There being no further business to come before the meeting, upon motion duly made, seconded and unanimously carried, the meeting was adjourned at 5:00 PM.

The Chairman reported that Mrs. Dorothy W. Thomson, a trained newspaper and contact person had been working for the APC in Washington for some months at a salary of $110 a week, and it was decided that her employment should be continued and that she would have the title of Washington Director of the organization.

The Chairman submitted a number of mimeographed bulletins which he had prepared. These included (1) A Statement of Fundamental Belief of the officers and committee members of the APC. Dear Mr. Hecht:

Apologies for being slow in answering your letter of June 3.

I do not happen to know of any citizens groups who are studying the problems you raise. I get the bulletin from the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, and they show some activity in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Texas, but I don't know at all whether they interest themselves in the problem of federal aid.

My own opinion is that the action of the Supreme Court, when it comes, on the segregation cases is going to make necessary a very substantial program of federal aid to school building. When the time comes, I should suppose that Southern Senators and Congressmen would put up such a demand for federal aid that they would get it. The more so, as Eisenhower in the campaign, to my mind, foreshadowed some such appropriation.

We are busying ourselves just now to get started local discussion groups on the issues bound to arise from the Supreme Court decision, and of course, out of them will come some citizen pressure for federal aid.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I am of the opinion that the southern states are in a particularly vulnerable position because of the decrease in federal grants-in-aid in the health, education and welfare fields. I presume you are fully aware of this and I would be interested to know as to whether any studies or plans are being made to gather data to combat the trend.

As you probably know, there is a bill in Congress to authorize a Commission to study all the federal aid programs and to make recommendations. It is fully possible that this Commission will come up with recommendations, suggesting that federal aid programs such as 1) aid for school lunches, 2) crippled childrens' services, 3) child welfare services, 4) maternal and child health services, be eliminated or substantially reduced. With the elimination of federal aid the poorer states and communities will not be able to offer childrens' services anywhere comparable to those in the wealthier states.

It would therefore seem to me that in the southern states either citizens groups or organizations should start studies on the value to them of the various federal aid programs and what would happen to their work if the federal aid was eliminated.

I would like to hear from you whether any states have started such studies and if so would you give me the names and addresses of organizations that are making them. Is your organization doing anything in this connection? I would like very much to get your views on this matter.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

THE CRITICAL SITUATION OF THE

and what you can do to help get the U. S. to continue its support of this, the most universally acclaimed of all United Nations activities

The United States has not contributed nor even appropriated any money to support the 1953 activities of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. Unless the United States continues to support this, the most universally acclaimed of all United Nations activities, UNICEF will dwindle and undoubtedly collapse.

Unlike many international activities for which the United States puts out all or the predominant part of the money, the U. S. has supplied less than one-third of the total that UNICEF has spent during the seven years of its existence, and 61 other nations have made governmental contributions to it, many of them year after year.

$9,814,000 was authorized at the last session of Congress of the United States for UNICEF's 1953 activities, but the money still needs to be appropriated. This will come up for Congressional vote in May, June or July. The Congress of the United States has adopted the policy of limiting its contribution to one-third of the total cost of UNICEF activities. In other words the other countries must contribute $2 for every dollar that the U. S. gives. The other countries of the world have already paid in or appropriated as their share of the international fund and the required matching money, more than $20,000,000 to justify the 1953 contribution of the U. S. Our contribution of $9,814,000 is not only a moral obligation, but on its appropriation the continuance of UNICEF's important work principally depends.

During its seven years of operation the UNICEF has directly aided more than 60 million children in more than 72 countries. In 1953 it aims to reach over 25 million children and mothers. This vital work must go on!

UNICEF is the greatest child welfare effort of all time. Immediately after the last World War, UNICEF concentrated on the mass feeding of destitute children in the war-torn countries of Europe. Recently UNICEF has launched long-range fundamental child welfare projects in the under-developed countries of Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Latin America. These projects include campaigns against malaria, yaws, and tuberculosis among children, setting up maternal and child welfare centers, and schools for training midwives.

A letter from you to your Congressman will help to get this UNICEF appropriation passed. Write to your Congressman, c/o the House of Representatives Office Building, Washington, D. C. Tell your Congressman that you believe in the work of UNICEF and urge him to vote for continuing adequate support for it. If you need to refresh your memory on who is your Congressman, call up your local newspaper, local library or county clerk. If you are willing to write two more letters, please write also to your Senators, c/o the Senate Office Building. We are counting on you to write!

TESTIMONY FOR AN ADEQUATE APPROPRIATION FOR THE U. S. CHILDREN'S BUREAU

before a Sub-committee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, May 25, 1953

By GEORGE J. HECHT
Chairman, American Parents Committee, Inc. and Publisher, Parents' Magazine

Our purpose this morning is to urge you to approve adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau. Mrs. Ada Barnett Stough, the Executive Director of the American Parents Committee, Inc.,was here to hear the testimony of both Mrs. Hobby and Dr. Eliot before your Committee so I do not want to take your time in repeating facts and figures which you have had from these official sources. My purpose is: first to bring to you the opinion of a group of parents and tax payers on the importance of services for children, and second to share with you some data I have on what a cut in Children's Bureau grants-in-aid will do to childrens' services in various states.

As tax payers, members of the American Parents Committee are interested in economy in government, but as parents we have ideas about what is true economy and what becomes a "penny wise and pound foolish" policy. As the President said so well in his speech to the nation Tuesday night, "We live not in an instant of danger but in an age of danger". To meet such danger takes human resources as well as material resources. What will it profit us to spend billions for ships and planes and guns and ammunition if we neglect the health and welfare of today's children who will be the citizens and the defenders of the nation a few years hence. The money we spend on children now is the soundest possible investment for the future, whether that future brings the peace we hope for, or the war we are trying so hard to prevent.

I heard the Chief of the Children's Bureau discuss with Senator Thye the increasing number of children in the country. She presented the facts about the number of crippled children who are receiving no treatment whatsoever, and the high infant death rate in certain areas of the country. Senator Thye discussed with her the unrelieved and untreated social and emotional tensions among children which are resulting in increased juvenile delinquency.

The Children's Bureau is the one agency of government charged by law with special responsibility for children. Administering the grants-in-aid set up by the Social Security Act is only one of its legal responsibilities. Under the Act of 1912 it is also supposed to help parents and citizens with facts about children which it is to gather from investigations, also it must advise workers and agencies serving children on methods and standards of child care. Social research as it relates to children is woefully behind, the Bureau has not carried on the research it should have been doing.

We submit that the Children's Bureau has never been given the funds to carry out properly the responsibilities with which Congress has charged it. I am sure there have been reasons - which need not be considered now.

What I would like to discuss is the present, the job to be done if we are to build the human resources needed for the future, and whether or not we are willing to make the necessary investment to that end.

Since 1947 the staff of the Children's Bureau has been steadily shrinking. In 1947 it had funds for 339 positions, in 1953 it had money for 234. This year the Bureau of the Budget approved a request for six additional positions, three to help service states in the New England area, and three more to work with State agencies and others who are studying child welfare and child health. The revised budget submitted by Mrs. Hobby cut out those six additional positions. Now the action by the House Appropriations Committee would cut the staff down to 225 positions. This means that more and more requests from the states for consultation, for special services they need with their particular problems or programs must go unanswered.

Now just a word about the grants-in-aid which help the states to carry out their maternal and child health and crippled children's programs and their work in the child welfare field. The amount authorized by Congress in 1950 was $40 million. This year's budget request as revised by the new Administration called for only $30,600,000 and now the House Committee would cut that to $30 million. Furthermore the House Committee deleted the language about the carry-over funds which are still standing to the credit of a few states which would have assured a more equitable distribution of whatever is finally voted for 1954.

As I figure it, if the House cuts are allowed to stand, and it looks as if they will, it means the services to children in the states in 1954 will be cut about 8% over what was available in 1953. In answer to our request, I have had letters from a fairly large number of states giving me examples of what such cuts would mean.

Child Welfare Services

Child welfare services translated in the language most of us understand is helping individual children over some of the difficult emotional and social hurdles that threaten to wreck their lives. Helping to keep children in their own homes, placing homeless children under proper foster care, aiding neglected and abused children are services the money you appropriate helps to finance. They are the services that can prevent juvenile delinquency, and help to develop normal citizens instead of candidates for jails or mental institutions. In working with troubled children it is just as important to have competent, professionally trained people as it is to have licensed doctors to treat crippled children. But there is a shortage of trained child welfare workers. For that reason some of the funds under the Child Welfare grants are spent on stipends and scholarships for professional training.

CALIFORNIA

A letter from Miss Lucile Kennedy, chief of the Division of Child Welfare of California stresses the points I have just made and then goes on to say that only 19 of California's 56 counties have any professionally trained staff for child welfare. One of several examples she gives is of Tommy, who was a healthy boy, an "A" student, and winner of an American Legion Award as the outstanding boy in his school. Then at the age of 10, both his parents died and he was placed in an institution. As time went on, he lost interest in school and developed many physical ailments. Four years ago, Miss Kennedy says the doctor who examined him at the clinic said he could find nothing wrong with Tommy physically but felt that the boy would continue to deteriorate if he remained in an institution. Yet because there is no staff in that county to take on Tommy's case and find a home which will adopt him or give him foster care, Tommy is still in the institution.

NEW MEXICO writes that it has child welfare service in only 10 of its 32 counties. Several of the counties have very serious child welfare problems, particularly in those areas where air bases have been reactivated. New Mexico's share of money spent for child welfare services is more than five times that of the federal share.

Crippled Children's Services

NEW MEXICO has not been able to get state funds for work with crippled children beyond what is needed to match federal funds. If there is a cut in funds, New Mexico would be able to continue its existing basic medical care for the number of children now under treatment, but the extra care and service needed by many crippled children would be cut out. New Mexico had hoped to begin some services for needy children with cerebral palsy, convulsive disorders, rheumatic fever and congenital heart disease, but if federal funds should be cut, none of these services can be offered.

Under funds now available IOWA is able to operate 34 mobile general clinics for crippled children and three or four cerebral palsy clinics each year. The demand is for twice that many. In operating the general clinics it became evident that the crippling ailments of many children were apparently a result of diet deficiencies. So money was allocated for a part-time nutritionist on the staff of the State Services for Crippled Children. She attends the mobile clinics and interviews parents of children referred to her by the doctors. Through this work the nutritionist is able to work with the child's mother to try to show her how to plan and prepare better balanced meals even with low cost foods.

The Iowa director says that if the grant for work with crippled children should be cut, the clinics now in operation would go back to a skeleton staff where such cases as those described would be seen only by physicians too busy to probe into the cause of the ailment, much less to do anything to help remedy the causes.

Maternal and Child Health Work

In WEST VIRGINIA there are 3,000 premature babies born each year. Dr. Helen Fraser, director of the division of Maternal and Child Welfare for that state says she is aware that the ideal solution would be to establish centers throughout the state where these babies might be cared for. Since that is not possible with the funds available, a Premature Nursery has been set up in Charleston which can take care of about 100 babies a year. This Nursery serves as a training center for the nurses from other hospitals of the state. Through it the hospitals are stimulated and helped to set up facilities for care of premature babies in their own area. There is a need for another such Nursery in the northern part of the state where it will be more accessible to nurses in that area. However, if there is a cut in budget another Nursery would be impossible and the activities of the one in Charleston will be curtailed.

At this point it seems appropriate to point out that providing the hospital facilities for the premature baby is only the beginning. The cost of such care is so high that it becomes prohibitive for many families. Dr. Edward Davens of the MARYLAND State Health Department sent us a copy of a letter he received from a desperate veteran of the Pacific Campaign of World War II asking if there was some way he could get help in meeting such costs. Their premature baby would have to be in the hospital for 3 months, and would have to have oxygen for two of those months. The father says, quote "We are willing to do everything to save our baby's life, yet the hospital bill is going entirely out of our reach. I make approximately $32.00 a week. Last week the hospital bill was $93.12. You can understand our financial status. My wife and I confided in Dr. M. She advised us to write to you to see if there was any way we can get financial help from the state" end of quote. Along with this letter is the carbon of a reply informing the veteran that there is nothing the Maryland Health Department can do since the relatively small amounts budgeted for hospital care under the maternal and child health program is greatly overdrawn, - they have failed to obtain a deficiency appropriation from the state legislature and there are no additional funds available from the Children's Bureau. How the father of that premature baby paid a three month hospital bill of over $1100 - with a total income of $384 in that time, is an unanswered question.

The American Parents Committee hopes that in the new Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Children's Bureau will be given a status in keeping with the responsibilities it has under law. We believe that if it is placed where it can bring the interest and concern for the child into all the deliberations of the Department, it can produce for the nation rich dividends in the form of healthier, happier, more productive citizens.

What happens in our nation tomorrow will depend in great part on what happens to our children today. We hope that Members of the Senate will take a very serious look at this Budget request, that you will not concur in the action which the House seems about to take and that you will grant to the Bureau and to the states enough funds to keep up the services which millions of children so desperately need.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Before too long the American Parents Committee should present its views on present grant-in-aid programs for children to the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations headed by Dr. Clarence Manion. Unfortunately there was too little time to discuss this at the last Board meeting, but Mrs. Stough and I would like to have the benefit of your thinking on the subject.

We have in the past supported, defended, and worked actively for all grants-in-aid which help provide needed services for children. Certainly you will all want to continue that policy. However, I think we all recognize that there is merit in the statement by President Eisenhower to the effect that the present system is "a product of more than a century and a half of piecemeal and often haphazard growth" -- and that there is often "duplication and waste." Nothing ... even the present system of grants-in-aid ... is so perfect it cannot be improved upon.

It is improvement, not dissolution which we want, is it not? Maybe we won't get improvement if we do not present some constructive views to the Manion Commission. How to remodel the present grants-in-aid to meet more effectively today's needs for children is a big question. But, I do think we have a responsibility to come up with some specific suggestions.

You have had an opportunity to deal with some of the present programs. Will you take time to send us some of the ways you think the programs you know best might be improved.

> Are there ways they might be consolidated to make for smoother administration on the state and local level?
> Is there any common denominator of policy or philosophy which could be applied to all grants? For instance, some now require matching, some do not. Some formulas make for more aid to poorer states, others do not, etc.
> Should there be more supervision by Federal Government, more rigid standards, or should there be less?
> Should formulas be rewritten to provide greater stimulation for states to assume more and more responsibility for the program?

See reverse side for the APC's Officers, Board of Directors, and National Council

Are there any programs for which you think local governments can now assume responsibility? Assuming of course, tax sources are returned to them.

The above are only a few of the questions on which I would like the benefit of your experience. I hope you will be so kind as to help develop some suggestions which we may pass on to the Manion Commission.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

You wrote me September 9th about studies of financial abilities of Southern states to meet their various health and welfare needs without Federal aid.

One of the "trailies" to the Ashmore Report is being edited by Professor Truman Pierce, at George Peabody College in Nashville. The volume is to be called By-Racial Aspects of Education in the South. It is a detailed job with statistics on the schools. I should not be surprised but what his work would be quite helpful to you. Write him directly and he will be glad to correspond with you I am sure.

Lewis Jones, of the Rural Life Council at Tuskegee Institute, is doing a study on the expenditure patterns of low-income families in the South, with particular emphasis on expenditures on health. It is being done for the Health Information Foundation. Write to him and see if he can help you. I know he would want to if he could.

That is all I know of.

I agree with your view and thinking that in the long run the job the South has to do can only be done with Federal aid.

Refer to Ashmore report statistics on Southern educational expenditures. The more detailed volume containing statistics on schools will be edited by Truman Pierce (Bi-Racial Aspects of Education in the South). He might write Truman Pierce at George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn. for inform. a. Harold says it will be some time before the study will be published.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I would like to know whether any authoritative study has recently been made on the financial ability of the Southern states to meet their essential health, education, and welfare needs without Federal aid.

If I remember correctly, you got out a publication a good many years ago on this subject, and in writing the enclosed pamphlet I used a lot of facts from your booklet. I am, as you know, a very strong believer in the need for Federal aid as the only feasible means of more nearly equalizing the health, education, and welfare facilities throughout the United States. If you have some new facts on the situation I would like to get them in order to bring my pamphlet on why Federal aid is vital up to date.

Ashmore report
Accept yours

If you haven't any up to date data on this, I wonder whether your organization would be interested in selecting some outstanding research organization with a national reputation to make an impartial, authoritative study on the financial ability of the Southern states to meet their essential health, education, and welfare needs.

To my way of thinking such a study would be very helpful. In arguing for adequate Federal aid appropriations for the programs that affect children we are constantly confronted with the argument that the poorer states are well able to meet these needs on their own. If we had some new facts and figures, it would help us refute these arguments.

I look forward to hearing from you on this matter.

Why FEDERAL AID IS VITAL to meet the Educational, Health, and Welfare Needs of AMERICAN CHILDREN and why it's a long-run economy

By GEORGE J. HECHT
Chairman, The American Parents Committee,
Publisher of "Parents' Magazine" and "School Management"

Published by the
AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE, INC.
52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.
Washington, D. C. Office: 132 Third St. S.E.

THERE are in the United States approximately 46 million children up to 17 years of age. Millions of these children are getting a raw deal!

Seventy-five percent of American school children need dental care; ten million children have defective vision. Three million will be hard of hearing if neglected. Half a million children have orthopedic and plastic defects. 175,000 have active tuberculosis.

While the death rate of mothers and babies has been reduced sharply during the past years, still, twelve babies in the United States die every hour and about half of these deaths are preventable. In 40% of our counties there are no hospitals. In areas where 40 million people live there are no full-time health services.

School health services are negligible except in the wealthier cities and States. Four out of every ten young American men were rejected for military service during World War II because of mental or physical defects. Many of these defects could have been corrected during the early years of their lives. We usually think only of children in the war-torn areas as being underfed. Actually, malnutrition is widespread among American children.

Almost two million boys and girls between 14 and 17 years of age are engaged in child labor; twice as many as were employed before the war. And the most forgotten children of all are the several hundred thousand children of migrant farm families who do not receive public schooling or health services because they are not considered as residents of any locality inasmuch as they are continually migrating from one community to another to keep pace with the harvesting of crops.

Four million children of school age are not going to school at all either because there are no schools or because school attendance laws are laxly enforced. Many schools are already so overcrowded that they have to run on double shifts and even triple shifts. Many schools are fire-traps. There are still about 100,000 one-room wooden schoolhouses in America where one teacher teaches children of all ages.

The needs of the Nation's children are so gigantic that they cannot anywhere near be met by private philanthropy. Only by the cooperative effort of Federal, State and local governments can the needs of children be met. We certainly do not ask for Federal and State action to do anything for children that individual families and communities can possibly do for themselves.

Many people and some organizations believe that meeting the needs of children is solely the responsibility of local and State governments. "Why federal aid to meet the needs of children?" is a question that needs a straightforward answer.

Why Federal Aid is Vital

The main reason for federal aid to meet the needs of children is that the United States simply can't afford to have children grow up as illiterates and in poor health. When the States don't do, for one reason or the other, other vitally important work that needs to be done, the Federal Government steps in and helps. There would hardly be any forests today in the United States if we depended on the State governments to provide forest-fire protection. Virtually all money to control forest fires is given to the States by the Federal Government. The Federal Government votes to the States several hundred million dollars every year to help build roads. It provides millions to help fight venereal disease throughout the Nation. Congress each year appropriates many times as much money to the Agriculture Departments of each State to do health and research work on cattle and crops as it appropriates for similar work for children. It would seem that Uncle Sam is more interested in cattle and in forests than in children!

The education and health of children are a national problem in which local communities, the States and the Federal Government must cooperate. There is, as you know, a tremendous amount of interstate migration. Nearly half the people in the United States live in different States than those in which they were born and in which they grew up. New York State, for example, can't do anything without the aid of the Federal Government, about the fact that millions of its present and future residents were born and brought up in States where they may not have been taught to read and write, and where physical and health defects which developed during their childhood went uncorrected, only to make them public charges in hospitals and mental institutions in their adult years. If for no other reason than interstate migration, every State should be deeply concerned about the lack of education and health care given children born in other States.

In many of the poorer States there isn't wealth enough that can be taxed to provide adequate health and welfare services for children. In many of these poorer States, the tax rate is higher than the tax rate in the wealthy States. But because incomes in the poorer States are much lower, the tax yield, even with a high tax rate, does not provide sufficient money to pay for decent school and health services. If some of the Southern States used all the money that they raised in taxes for education alone, they couldn't raise the level of educational expenditures per child in their States to the average for the entire United States.

Another reason why federal aid to help reduce the inequalities in education and health services among the States is so vital is that there are more than fifty percent more children per 1000 adults in some of the poorer States than in some of the wealthier States. The rich States get richer, and the poorer States get children! In the poorer States the education and health job is proportionately bigger because there are proportionately more children, and there are relatively fewer adults to pay taxes, and less per capita income that can be taxed. And so the Federal Government must help the poorer States to meet the needs of children, as it is now helping the States to fight forest fires, to fight venereal disease, to aid the farmers with their crops and cattle, and to help build roads.

The Federal Government has recently passed legislation to help the States in building hospitals. Why shouldn't it also help the States in building schools?

Federal grants-in-aid for health and welfare purposes have in the past stimulated, and can be expected to continue to stimulate and to increase state appropriations for these purposes. This is what has happened, for example, in the Federal grants-in-aid for maternity and child health work. Before the Federal grants-in-aid were made for these purposes almost half of the States appropriated either nothing or less than $10,000 a year for these purposes. But stimulated by the money received from the Federal Government which required State matching, ten years later the States have appropriated $4,800,000 of their own and local money for these purposes — almost as much as the Federal grants then available. Many of the States now appropriate much more than the minimum Federal matching requirements for these vital services.

A child can't help the State he is born in! Yet millions of children born in poorer States are being cheated out of a decent education and the health services which they require, through the accident of their place of birth.

We already have considerable federal aid to meet certain of the needs of children. Many years ago the Sheppard-Towner Act provided grants to the States for maternity and child health work. Now this is incorporated in the Social Security Act which makes grants for such work, as well as for crippled children and child welfare. But the money appropriated for these purposes is inadequate to meet the need. We already have federal aid to the States to maintain a National School Lunch Program which is needed to combat malnutrition among school children. But only one-third of the children of school age benefit by this program.

We already have considerable federal aid to education. The land-grant colleges have for more than one hundred years been receiving financial aid from the Federal Government and a large part of all home economics and vocational education is paid for by the Federal Government. Frankly, I can't understand all the furore against federal aid for elementary and secondary education on the ground that it will lead to federal control of education. I have never heard any complaints about federal control of our land-grant colleges, nor of the home economics and vocational education that is so largely supported by the Federal Government.

It's a long-run economy

Many conservative business men say that the Federal Government is spending too much, and should not add expenditures even on behalf of children. The answer to that is that Federal expenditures on behalf of children are the best investment that the Government can make! Actually this type of spending is a long-range economy. The U. S. Chamber of Commerce and other business groups have repeatedly declared that good business depends on an educated citizenry. The United States just cannot afford to let an increasing number of its children grow up to be illiterate. It cannot afford to let four out of every ten young men grow up to be unfit for military service. It is infinitely cheaper to correct health defects in the early years of life than to put billions of dollars into hospitals to care for these persons when they are grown.

One out of every twenty Americans is, has been or will be, as conditions are now, a patient in a mental hospital. It is infinitely cheaper to prevent and cure mental and nervous diseases during childhood than to pay the staggering cost of maintaining mental hospitals to care for these children when they're grown. There are already more patients in the mental institutions of America than there are patients in the hospitals caring for the physically sick. In New York State, in spite of the inadequate care and treatment of the mentally ill—which Governor Thomas E. Dewey himself called "disgraceful" — one-third of that State's total operating budget is earmarked for its psychiatric institutions. Similar proportions of the tax dollar go into mental hospital operation in other States. Think of it — one-third of the budget of many of our States is devoted to hospitals serving the mentally ill. And many of these mental illnesses could have been prevented or cured during the school years at relatively little expense. Isn't it wise economy to spend money to treat mental illnesses in childhood?

One of the largest expenses of the Federal, State and local governments is the maintenance of jails. It would be good business on the part of Government to help provide the mental hygiene clinics and adequate recreational facilities which would go a long way to prevent the increasing juvenile delinquency which often develops into adult crime.

The total cost of all requested Federal Government appropriations for children is infinitesimal compared to Government costs such as those for the Army and Navy and for the European Recovery Program — and even far less than the Government spends on the United States Department of Agriculture.

I am not suggesting that anywhere near all the cost of meeting the needs of children should be borne by the Federal Government. It should be a cooperative job between local communities, the States and the Federal Government.

While it is vitally important to press for federal legislation on behalf of children, it is equally important for local parents groups and community organizations to work for adequate local support for school and health and child welfare services. New schools can't be built and adequate salaries paid to teachers unless local governments vote for them. If local legislators are to act, they should receive increased evidence that their constituents are concerned about getting better and more schools and better health services. They must learn that the taxpayers are willing to pay the necessary taxes to support the educational and health services that children need. In every city and town there must be a mobilization of support to meet the needs of children!

The members of Congress hear plenty from the business interests concerning legislation. Farmers, labor and the veterans are extremely vocal in making known to the members of Congress the legislation that they want. But the voices of children cannot be heard. Organizations need to speak up on behalf of the Nation's children! There needs to be a rallying of the social forces of America.

Members of Congress are very busy people. But they are extremely sensitive to public interest and to public opinion. If they get evidence that many national organizations and local groups in their districts, and particularly their own constituents are concerned about federal legislation affecting children, they will act.

Now is the time for all parents who love their own children and who are concerned about the welfare of the Nation's children to rally in a crusade for children which will result in better schools and more adequate child health services.

Children are our Nation's most precious and promising asset; our only national resource that can assure our future as a free people. They must not be neglected!

MEMO TO: Dr. George S. Mitchell

You will be interested to read on the reverse side of this letterhead of the many important and key persons who have joined our Board of Directors and National Council. We are very happy about this and feel that they will be most helpful in our legislative efforts for children.

As you know, our special 1955 legislative objective is more adequate appropriations for crippled children. The U.S. Program for Crippled Children and what the APC believes Congress and the states should do about it are explained in the enclosed pamphlet. I hope you will find time to read it. And more particularly, I hope you will be able to get any organizations with which you are connected and, if possible, other organizations in your state, to take an active interest in helping our efforts for more adequate appropriations for crippled children. We will be glad to send you or anyone you designate additional copies of this pamphlet.

Please write us in what ways you think you can help us. We will communicate with you at a later date telling you when we would like you to write to your Senators and Congressmen on this subject. It is too early to do so now.

I am also enclosing a printed leaflet on all our 1955 legislative goals. Additional copies of this will gladly be furnished to you on request.

We are counting on the help of members of our Board of Directors and National Council in achieving our 1955 legislative goals for children.

As you know, membership on the Board of Directors and National Council of the APC does not entail an obligation to contribute. I have always taken on my own shoulders the responsibility of raising the APC budget. It is, however, a very difficult job. I shall greatly appreciate any contributions that members of our Board of Directors or National Council will send us. Or if you know of any foundations or individuals who you think might be a source of financial help, won't you please send me their names and address and I shall write to them.

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

Memo To: Dr. George S. Mitchell

I am writing to ask whether you, as a member of the Board of Directors of the American Parents Committee, would send a telegram to President Eisenhower in the next day or two urging that the School Construction Program that he will recommend in his special message on February 15 will be a big and bold program with sufficient aid to the states to meet the great need.

There is talk around Washington that what President Eisenhower will recommend is a relatively small loan program to the states. I feel that there should be a very large program of outright grants to the states -- a program somewhat comparable to the Federal dollars that Eisenhower proposes for road building.

I am sending you herewith a carbon of the telegram that I sent. Naturally, you will not use the same wording. I would appreciate it very much if you would send me a copy of any telegram you send.

Many, many thanks to you.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE J. HECHT

President Dwight D. Eisenhower
The White House
Washington, D.C.

The gratitude of parents everywhere is due you for full recognition of the shortage of classrooms for the education of their children. We hope your program will be broad of vision and of sufficient magnitude to meet the known need. Only a large bold local-State-Federal plan can alleviate this national emergency. Surely the share of Federal dollars for education of the nation's children should be comparable to the Federal dollars proposed for roads.

MAR 30 1955

Attention of: Dr. George S. Mitchell

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE APC BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND NATIONAL COUNCIL:

Legislative matters of concern to the American Parents Committee are moving regrettably slowly in the Congress. I hope you will have time to read your copy of the APC newsletter, "Washington Report," which you should receive soon. It gives you a general picture of the legislative situation. In addition, I would like to give you some background information of a more confidential nature and a few suggestions as to what you could do, if you would, to help. It would be helpful if you would write to your Senators and your Congressman about these matters.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

This legislation is being held up for two reasons--first, the difficulty (mentioned in our "Washington Report") of compromising the points of view of those who want straight Federal aid and those who believe only in the approach recommended in the Administration Bill. However, progress is being made and it seems certain that some compromise Bill can be written.

The second difficulty (not mentioned in the Washington Report) is more serious and may mean the defeat of any legislation. An attempt is being made to tack on to any Bill an amendment which would deny funds to any state in which separate schools for different races are maintained by law. This move stems from two sources: First, from the very sincere and well-meaning motivation of the organizations and persons who have always opposed discrimination and have worked hard to end it; second, from organizations and persons who have heretofore shown no interest in the equality of educational opportunity for children of minority races, but who are so opposed to any Federal aid for school construction that they will latch on to any device to defeat it.

This is an unfortunate situation. Those who hope that such an amendment will not arise point out that there is no such provision now in any of the Federal statutes authorizing grants for school lunch, vocational education, or other grant programs. They reason that since the Supreme Court has not handed down its implementing decrees, it would be inconsistent with Federal policy and inadvisable at this time for Congress to legislate on a pending judicial issue on which the Supreme Court is moving with caution and deliberation. If such an amendment were passed, "apparently states and local districts would receive no Federal funds for school construction until all cases now pending before the Supreme Court and all cases subsequently arising from the Court's decisions and decrees had been adjudicated. In effect, the U. S. Commissioner of Education would become an agent of the Supreme Court. This runs contrary to the normal method of enforcement of judicial decrees." (Quotes from NEA testimony before Senate Committee.)

Facing the situation realistically, it is apparent that a Bill with such an amendment will never pass this Congress. I have written my own two Senators asking them to work for a bill with adequate Federal aid, which will contain some of the best features of the Administration Bill which might help states with their own school financing, and one which does not contain an anti-segregation amendment. I hope each of you will write your own ideas to your representatives in Congress.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

The Bills described in the Washington Report form the basis for a good program of help to states to deal with the problem. You may not agree with all the provisions, but I hope you will agree that we need hearings to express our opinions on the Bills and to get some attention for them in the press. So I hope many of you will write to your Congressmen asking for copies of the Bills and inquiring when hearings are going to be held.

APPROPRIATIONS

The Appropriations Bill for the Health, Education, and Welfare Department was passed in the House on March 21. The amount approved for the three grant-in-aid programs of the Children's Bureau was $30 million, the same as last year. No additional amount was allowed for the Crippled Children's Program, probably because no such increase was asked for in the President's budget. However, a total of $750,000 in new money was appropriated for research to determine the cause of mental retardation in children. $500,000 of the amount went to the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, and $250,000 to the National Mental Health Institute. This new amount was put in almost entirely because of the newly awakened interest of Mr. Fogarty (Chairman of the Committee) in the problems of caring for mentally retarded children and his conviction that little is being done for them under existing programs. Mr. Fogarty talked with representatives of the APC about his contemplated action. We told him a certain amount could be done under the Crippled Children's Program if it had sufficient funds. Mr. Fogarty believed, however, that the first step was to find the cause of mental retardation.

The House did not approve the full $196,500 increase requested by the Children's Bureau under Salaries and Expenses, to expand its activities in the field of juvenile delinquency, although it did allow a $40,000 increase over the amount budgeted for juvenile delinquency work in 1955. The APC would like to see the full amount appropriated and will work to have the Senate increase the total salary and expense item of the Bureau to $1,796,500, as requested by the President. Those who wish to register their voice in favor of more money for juvenile delinquency work and for crippled children should write to their Senators.

The School Lunch Appropriation is still under consideration.

If we want some of these Bills for children to move, we must begin prodding--and at once! I hope we can count on you to do just that with your own representatives in Congress.

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

APR 25 1955

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Mr. Hecht and I are beginning to be somewhat hopeful of getting the appropriation for the Crippled Children's Program raised in the Senate. Hearings of the Committee, on which your Senator Russell is a member, begin April 25. His interest will be an important factor in the decision.

We are hoping you will be able to get over to your Senator your interest in this problem. A letter or telegram is better than no communication at all. The most effective action, however, (short of a personal visit) is to get statements of need and some resolutions of groups to him with the request that he submit them to the Committee to be made a part of the record of the Hearing.

I cannot over-emphasize how much each Senator listens for the voice of the people from his own state. It is the most effective means he has for evaluating the requests that pour in from everywhere. I hope your Senator will hear from you and several other people willing to speak for crippled children who cannot speak for themselves.

Sincerely,

Ada B. Stough

Current Situation Regarding

FEDERAL APPROPRIATIONS for THE U.S. CRIPPLED CHILDREN'S PROGRAM

The amount authorized by law for the grant-in-aid program for Crippled Children administered by the Children's Bureau is $15 million. That amount has never been appropriated. The budget for 1954 and 1955 allowed only $10,800,000 or $4,200,000 short of the authorization.

MORE MONEY IS NEEDED to bring to children the benefit of the amazing advances made by medical research in knowledge and techniques for treating crippled children.

TOO FEW CHILDREN ARE BEING HELPED BY

- the new drugs for control of epileptic seizures
- the latest electronic devices for the hard of hearing
- knowledge of how artificial limbs may be made for children
- new surgical knowledge for children with heart trouble
- new techniques for treating cleft palate

The full $15 million appropriation by the Federal government would bring out more state money and increase services to Crippled Children.

The President's Budget, unfortunately, did not recommend an increase, and the 1956 Appropriations Bill, which passed the House March 21, included only $10,800,000 for the Crippled Children's Program. There is a possibility that the amount can be raised in the Senate if the members of the Senate Appropriations Committee can be acquainted with the need.

Special messages should go to the following Senators who are members of the Subcommittee which will soon begin consideration of the budget for Health, Education, and Welfare:-

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE APC NATIONAL COUNCIL

I am sending you herewith proposals for our 1956 legislative program. These proposals will be discussed and acted upon by our Board of Directors at a meeting on November 15.

Prior to that time, however, I would like to receive the comment of the members of our National Council on this proposed legislative program. Won't you please write me your comment, which I will present to the Board of Directors for their consideration.

Hof. 10/20/55

I am also enclosing a booklet entitled "Now Is The Time!" which is published by the National Education Association and which describes the School Contruction Bill which we have supported in the past and which I recommend that we continue to work for in 1956.

As a member of our National Council, you have no obligation whatsoever to attend any APC meetings, but if you are going to be in New York City on November 15, we would be delighted to have you attend the meeting as a guest. The meeting will take place at luncheon at 12:30 in a private room at the Uptown Club, 60 East 42nd Street, New York, N. Y. Please notify me in advance if you are coming.

The APC had a considerable measure of success during the last session of Congress. Our campaign on behalf of the U. S. Program for Crippled Children resulted in an increase of 38% in the Federal appropriations. This will enable the states to expand their existing programs so they can serve crippled children who have had to wait for treatment and can offer newer types of preventive and curative services. You will be interested, I am sure, in the enclosed reprint of a feature that the Associated Press syndicated to newspapers throughout the United States, which tells of this achievement.

Although the Administration recommended a big cut in the National School Lunch Program, the APC, with the aid of a number of other organizations, persuaded Congress to appropriate the same amount as the previous year for the National School Lunch Program, namely, $83,236,197.

I look forward to receiving your comments on our proposed 1956 legislative program.

Cordially yours,

George J. Hecht

Washington Letter

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—The little Michigan girl with blonde curls and a missing arm, and the shy boy with untreated epilepsy in West Virginia probably know nothing about the wheels that turn on Capitol Hill to get legislation to help them overcome their handicaps.

But they will appreciate the benefits that come to them through passage of a bill appropriating money for the Health, Education and Welfare Department.

It was the result of a quiet but dramatic campaign of many people who decided to lobby for the crippled children who could not lobby for themselves.

The effort was led by a small organization called the American Parents Committee, headed by publisher George J. Hecht. Last summer, Hecht assigned his assistant, Mrs. Ada Barnett Stough, to find out about what is being done for crippled children. She found that children are handicapped by many conditions ranging from cerebral palsy to deafness.

The results of her study were published in a pamphlet, "The U.S. Program for Crippled Children." The pamphlet carried true stories of handicapped children who were made normal through clinics in their communities. Contrasted with these stories are the statistics about the many children who are not receiving treatment because their parents cannot afford private treatment and the Crippled Children's Program in their states lack funds and personnel to offer it to them in public clinics.

Last May Hecht, Mrs. Stough and others told a Senate Committee that the amazing advances in medicine are not reaching thousands of children who need them.

The new heart surgery is not available to children in many sections, the new electronic devices for testing and electronic hearing aids are available in only a few states: practically no artificial limbs are being made for children, and the wonderful new drugs for treating epilepsy are not reaching enough children.

The senators listened. They acted. The President signed the bill. The little girl in Michigan should get an artificial arm, the boy in West Virginia new drugs to control his epileptic seizures. And services to all children with handicaps should move ahead faster.

PROPOSED 1956 LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

SPECIAL 1956 OBJECTIVES

IMPROVED HEALTH SERVICES FOR SCHOOL-AGE CHILDREN - The number of young men rejected by the Selective Service for military duty because of physical and mental defects is in excess of 50%! The APC believes that this is a shocking condition and that in the National interest something should be done about this as promptly as possible. An estimated 8 million children need eye care, 1/3 million have hearing defects, more than a million have orthopedic or plastic handicaps and thousands have crippling heart conditions or active tuberculosis. The APC believes that the cheapest and best way to detect and correct the conditions which make for poor health in American youth is through more and better health services for school-age children. This means more effective screening examinations in schools to discover incipient physical defects and mental ailments, better follow-up with parents to get defects corrected, and increased community resources to provide the needed health and clinical services.

The APC will work to get the Congress to raise the appropriation for the Maternal and Child Health grant-in-aid administered by the Children's Bureau from the present amount of less than $12 million to the $16,500,000 authorized by law, with the hope that the increased funds will stimulate states to determine through demonstrations and special projects how health services to school-age children may be improved. The APC will support any other legislative efforts to improve such services.

TREATMENT AND CONTROL OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY - Juvenile delinquency is a steadily mounting problem which impedes the development of our youth and saps the strength of our nation. While control and treatment of the problem must necessarily take place in the local community, its proportions have outgrown the facilities and resources of most localities. States and communities need expert guidance, specialized facilities, and professionally trained personnel. The problem is a national one and the leadership of the Federal government is needed to stimulate and help each state to make a coordinated effort toward its solution. The APC will:

1. Work for more adequate appropriations for the small Division of Juvenile Delinquency in the Children's Bureau so that a minimum of expert assistance can be made available to help the states on such matters as training schools, police and probation, and other related questions.

2. Support legislation for a grant-in-aid program to provide assistance to and cooperation with states in strengthening and improving state and local programs for the diminution, control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

CONTINUING OBJECTIVES

FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION - The number of classrooms needed for the adequate education of the country's children is estimated at over 300,000. It is known that several million children are attending schools in double or triple sessions, many of them with their desks in garages, church basements, or firetrap buildings. In addition, many schools must be built to accommodate the increasing numbers of children reaching school age in a few years. States are making valiant efforts to meet the problem but the need is still great particularly in certain areas.

The APC believes that equalization of educational opportunity is a responsibility of the Federal government. The Federal government has for years helped the states to maintain colleges and to build highways and hospitals. Federal aid for the construction of public schools, administered through the state agencies for education, avoids any threat of Federal control. It will free state and local money for teachers' salaries and other educational costs. The APC will work for enabling legislation and appropriations adequate to help states to meet the need. It believes in a variable matching formula giving the most aid to states with the lowest per capita income per school age child.

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CHILDREN'S BUREAU AND ITS PROGRAMS

CRIPPLED CHILDREN - Through the efforts of the APC and other groups last year the Congress increased the 1956 appropriation for the Crippled Children's grant-in-aid program by 38%, up to the full $15 million authorized by law. States are now making plans to provide the necessary matching funds and to increase their efforts to rehabilitate handicapped children. The APC will urge the Congress again to appropriate the full $15 million.

CHILD WELFARE - The APC will support an increase in the appropriation for the Child Welfare grant-in-aid to help states to improve their foster care of neglected and orphaned children.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU ADMINISTRATION - The Bureau is the one agency of government charged with matters pertaining to child life and the health and welfare of children. The APC believes that funds are needed to maintain a strong Bureau which can keep ever alert to the over-all needs of children.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MENTALLY RETARDED CHILDREN - The increasing number of mentally-retarded children constitutes a problem receiving too little attention. Last year the Congress appropriated a small amount of money for research into the cause of mental retardation and to determine better methods of training and education. The APC will support future appropriations which seem needed.

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM - More than 10 million school children may now buy a nutritious lunch at reasonable cost, aided by the Federal donations of surplus foods, and by Federal and state appropriations. The proportion of the cash funds put up by the states and local communities is over five times that provided by the Federal government and continues to increase. Sufficient Federal funds continue to be needed so that millions of children will not be undernourished and the country will have a desirable outlet for its surplus commodities.

U. S. CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS CHILDREN'S FUND (UNICEF)- UNICEF helps maintain fundamental child welfare projects in the underdeveloped countries of the world. Its fight against malaria, tuberculosis, yaws and other diseases is a great builder of international good will. Its work is supported by 62 countries, and the U. S. must contribute its proportionate share of the cost.

OTHER POSSIBLE ACTION

The APC will be alert to legislative proposals affecting children and may at a later date take action to support or oppose specific bills. Subjects of special concern are:

1. Amendments to the Social Security Act affecting children.

2. Bills providing for research related to the health, education and welfare of children.

COOPERATION WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The APC is the only organization concerned exclusively with legislation for children, which has a full-time paid staff in Washington. Consequently, it is able to collect and supply information to other groups and to encourage them to record their views on specific bills. The APC welcomes such opportunities and hopes to expand these activities.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I have a pretty hard time raising the budget of the American Parents Committee.

I would be very happy if each member of our Board of Directors and National Council would send us some contribution, even if it is only a small token contribution of $5 as further evidence of their interest. I know that some members of the Board can give only a little, while others can and do give us quite substantial sums.

I think the American Parents Committee accomplishes relatively more for children per dollar spent than any other organization. For example:

1. We secured in the last session of Congress an increase of 38% in the Federal appropriation for the U. S. Program for Crippled Children, bringing the appropriation to the full $15 million authorized by law.

2. We led a successful effort to get a renewal of the full appropriation of $83,236,197 for the National School Lunch Program, in spite of a determined effort that was made to cut it by $15 million.

3. Plus a lot of other activities which have been reported to you in our newsletter, WASHINGTON REPORT ON LEGISLATION FOR CHILDREN.

I assure you that whatever you send, whether it is large or small, will be helpful and will spur us on to increased efforts. A reply envelope that needs no stamp is enclosed for your conveneince.

1956 LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF

THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

The following was adopted unanimously by the American Parents Committee Board of Directors at its meeting on November 15, 1955.

SPECIAL 1956 OBJECTIVES

IMPROVED HEALTH SERVICES FOR SCHOOL-AGE CHILDREN - The number of young men rejected by the Selective Service for military duty because of physical and mental defects is in excess of 50%! At least 15% of these young men had defects that might have been remedied or prevented during their school years. An estimated 8 million children need eye care, 1/3 million have hearing defects, more than a million have orthopedic or plastic handicaps and thousands have crippling heart conditions or active tuberculosis. The APC believes that the cheapest and best way to detect and correct the conditions which make for poor health in American youth is through more and better health services for school-age children. This means more effective screening examinations in schools to discover incipient physical and mental defects, better follow-up with parents to get defects corrected, and increased community resources to provide the needed health and clinical services. APPROPRIATIONS FOR MENTALLY RETARDED CHILDREN - The large number of mentally-retarded children constitutes a problem receiving too little attention. Last year the Congress appropriated a small amount of money for research into the cause of mental retardation and to determine better methods of training and education. The APC will support future appropriations which seem needed.

TREATMENT AND CONTROL OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY - Juvenile delinquency is a steadily mounting problem which impedes the development of our youth and saps the strength of our nation. 2. Support legislation for a grant-in-aid program to provide assistance to and cooperation with states in strengthening and improving state and local programs for the diminution, control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

CONTINUING OBJECTIVES

FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION - The number of classrooms needed for the adequate education of the country's children is estimated at over 300,000. It is known that several million children are attending schools in double or triple sessions, many of them with their desks in garages, chuch basements, or fire-trap buildings. It believes in a variable matching formula giving the most aid to states with the lowest per capita income per school age child.

THE U. S. CHILDREN'S BUREAU - The Bureau is the agency of government specifically charged with matters pertaining to child life and the health and welfare of children. The APC believes that funds are needed to maintain a strong Bureau which can keep ever alert to the over-all needs of children.

CRIPPLED CHILDREN - Through the efforts of the APC and other groups last year the Congress increased the 1956 appropriation for the Crippled Children's grant-in-aid program by 38%, up to the full $15 million authorized by law. States are now making plans to provide the necessary matching funds and to increase their efforts to rehabilitate handicapped children. The APC will urge the Congress again to appropriate the full $15 million.

CHILD WELFARE - The APC will support an increase in the appropriation for the Child Welfare grant-in-aid to help states to strengthen a broadly conceived child welfare program including foster care of neglected and orphaned children.

AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN - The present limitations on payments for dependent children in which the Federal Government will share, have not realistically been increased with the rising cost of living. The APC supports liberalization of such payments for Aid to Dependent Children. The APC further believes that the lack of casework services seriously impairs the effectiveness of the program and therefore it will urge that provision be made for appropriate casework services for maintaining sound family living.

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM - More than 10 million school children may now buy a nutritious lunch at reasonable cost, aided by the Federal donations of surplus foods, and by Federal and state appropriations. The proportion of the cash funds put up by the states and local communities is over five times that provided by the Federal government and continues to increase. Sufficient Federal funds continue to be needed so that millions of children will not be undernourished and the country will have a desirable outlet for its surplus commodities.

Its fight against maleria, tuberculosis, yaws and other diseases is a great builder of international good will. Its work is supported by 62 countries, and the U. S. must contribute its proportionate share of the cost.

Attention of: Dr. George S. Mitchell

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE APC BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND NATIONAL COUNCIL:

There will be a luncheon meeting of the American Parents Committee Board of Directors on Wednesday, March 14 at 12:30 at the Uptown Club, 60 East 42 Street, New York, N. Y.

Members of the APC National Council, if they are in New York on that day, are invited to attend.

The meeting is being held to discuss:

1. Child Health and Welfare Amendments of 1956 (S-3297). The bill embodying these would change the present provision of the Social Security Act which limits the grants-in-aid for Child Welfare Services, to the financing of work in rural areas and areas of special need. Many people have long felt that this limitation hampers the states in developing services throughout the states so that they may be available to children who need them regardless of where they live within the state. The bill also provides for other changes which will be explained and discussed at the meeting. The APC position on this bill should be determined.

2. The Powell Amendment to the School Construction Bill. This would prohibit the granting of Federal funds to states which do not comply with the Supreme Court anti-segregation decision. The APC should take a position on this.

3. 1957 legislative objectives. It is none too early to discuss our tentative legislative objectives for next year. Considerable advance research must be done by Mrs. Stough before we can work effectively on any new legislation. Mrs. Stough has time to do this while Congress is not in session.

We have only two meetings of our Board of Directors each year, and I therefore hope you will make every effort to come. Please advise me whether to reserve a luncheon place for you. Best regards!

GEORGE J. HECHT, Chairman

FLASH! I just received the encouraging news that as a result of our efforts and those of the Nat'l Ass'n for Retarded Children, the House Appropriations Subcommittee is recommending a $4 million increase in Federal aid for Maternal and Child Health, half to be used for mentally retarded children, and presumably the other half for better health services for school-age children.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Since you are a member of the National Council of the American Parents Committee we are wondering if you would be willing to help get action on Senate Bill 3297 which was endorsed at our last Board meeting and which is described on page 3 of the attached Washington Report.

The Bill is now being considered by the Senate Finance Committee of which your Senator Walter F. George is a member. If the Senators on that Committee are convinced that people want these child health and welfare amendments, they will include this Bill as a part of the over-all Social Security Bill which they will report to the Senate.

It would help greatly if you would wire Senator George, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C. asking him to work to get the Finance Committee to approve S.3297 and to report it to the Senate as a part of H.R.7225 amending the Social Security Act.

Time is important. The next session of the Committee is on Tuesday, May 1st. I hope you will want to help and can get a telegram to your Senator before that date.

March 1956 Issue No. 39

WHAT CONGRESS HAS DONE SO FAR FOR CHILDREN

Business of the 84th Congress seems to be moving along at a fairly rapid rate and a few moves on legislation for children can be recorded.

APPROPRIATIONS

The House passed the appropriation Bill for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare on March 5. The best news about the part of the Bill which relates to children was the increase of the Maternal and Child Health grant-in-aid from the $11,927,700 requested in the budget to $16,000,000. The APC and several other organizations were working for this increase in the Committee and testified to the great need. They were therefore gratified by the language of the report which read:

> "The Committee has increased the budget request for Maternal and Child Health Services, to $16,000,000. There has been no substantial increase in the amount of funds for Maternal and Child Health Services for several years. The amount allowed by the Committee will still fall slightly short of the 1951 appropriation on the basis of the amount per child, due to the much more rapid increase in the child population in the U.S. than in this appropriation. It is the desire of the Committee that approximately half of the increase provided be spent on the very important and much neglected problem of mentally retarded children".

Other funds appropriated for mentally retarded children included $675,000 for research in the field of education for the retarded, $750,000 for continued research by the National Institutes of Health on the medical aspects of the problem, and $80,000 in the salaries and expense item of the Children's Bureau for work with the states and communities.

Other good news is that the House appropriated the full $15 million for the Crippled Children's program, and raised the Child Welfare grant to $8,361,000, an increase of $1,132,100 from last year.

THE BAD NEWS Unfortunately the House did not allow $100,000 of the amount requested in the President's Budget for Salaries and Expenses of the Children's Bureau. About $90,000 of the amount is needed, according to testimony given by the Bureau, for additional staff workers for the small, new Division on Juvenile Delinquency. The additional staff would enable the Division better to answer the calls it has from state and local agencies for help in community planning for the control of juvenile delinquency, juvenile courts and probation, police services, training school and detention care and training of juvenile delinquency workers. The additional amount of the $100,000 cut, is needed for two additional regional specialist to help states which are expanding their foster care program.

The House voted only part of the funds requested by the Office of Education for a 10-point program of cooperative research in education. A total increase of approximately $3 million was asked but only $1,450,000 was voted by the House. Of that amount the House Committee specified that $675,000 was to be spent for research on educational problems of the mentally retarded, and the remaining amount for the problems of research which the Office of Education deems most pressing.

OTHER APPROPRIATIONS The House did not allow the $60,200 asked by the Bureau of Labor Standards for a Survey on Youth Employment (See Washington Report issue No. 38). It did, however, increase the funds for the National Institutes of Health, where much medical research for children is done, by $9 million. The funds for vocational education were also increased by more than $2½ million.

NOTE - The appropriation Bill now goes to the Senate Subcommittee on DHEW Appropriations headed by Senator Lister Hill of Alabama. Those interested in seeing the Bill changed should communicate with their own Senators, and with Senator Hill.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

The Kelley Bill HR 7535 (See issue No. 38) has been bottled up for many weeks in the House Rules Committee. The failure of that Committee to send the Bill to the floor of the House for consideration is attributed to several influences. One of the most potent is the threat of Congressman Adam Powell, of N.Y. to introduce an amendment to the Bill which would prohibit Federal funds for school construction from going to school districts where no beginning has been made toward integration of the races.

Several organizations and many prominent individuals have expressed regret that the important school construction legislation is being obstructed by an amendment which will not bring integration of schools any nearer but will likely defeat the school construction legislation. The implication of the proposed amendment is expressed in the following resolution passed by the American Association of School Administrators, meeting in Atlantic City, Feb. 22, 1956.

> "We deplore the attempts to defeat pending school construction legislation through the addition of extraneous amendments in the name of equality of civil rights. We therefore are against any proposed amendment which not only would imperil the pending school construction legislation but also would jeopardize the continuance of current federal programs such as assistance to schools in federally affected area, the school lunch program and vocational education."

Note-If Congress hears a clear demand from the public for a school construction Bill --such a Bill is expected to be passed. Each individual can help by letting his Congressman know that he expects action.

SCHOOL LUNCH

The APC and several other groups testified before the House Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations asking that adequate appropriations be made for the School Lunch Program. There is some hope that an increase in the budget may be voted but the Report will not be forthcoming for several weeks.

OTHER BILLS

SERVICE DEPENDENTS The House on March 2 passed a Bill HR 9429 designed to provide care for the children and other dependents of servicemen. The program includes a Government-paid health insurance plan under which dependents of servicemen would have a choice of medical and hospital care at civilian facilities, or, if available, at military medical facilities. If care is provided at a military facility the patients would be charged with subsistence and in a civilian hospital they would have to pay the first $25 of hospital costs.

This Bill, long sought by the Defense Department, is expected to provide medical care for more than a million dependents of servicemen for whom no medical care whatsoever is now provided. The Bill has not yet been considered in the Senate.

CHILD HEALTH & WELFARE The Senate Finance Committee has before it a Bill S 3297 which would amend and improve the Child Welfare grant-in-aid provision of the Social Security Act. A summary of its provisions follows.

Child-Welfare Grant-in-Aid

Raises Amount - The present law authorizes $10 million (this total amount has never been appropriated). The proposed amendments would raise the authorization to $12 million for the fiscal year 1958 - and to $15 million for each fiscal year thereafter.

The present law does not require matching. The amendments provide matching under an equalization formula which allows larger grants to poorer states. It also provides that states which cannot use all of its grant shall turn it back for reallotment to other states which can use the funds.

Rural Areas The present law specifies that Federal funds shall be used for child welfare work only in "rural areas and areas of special need." This has limited the usefulness of the grant and prevented the states from developing a balanced, well-rounded child welfare plan. Furthermore, the needs of children for welfare services have become greater in the urban centers than in rural areas and the combined resources of voluntary and public welfare agencies have proved inadequate to meet them.

Foster Care & Runaway Children The Bill makes explicit the authority to use Federal funds for the extension and improvement of foster care. It also raises to 18 years the age limit of runaway children who may be returned to their homes under the grant programs.

Special Project Grants for Child Welfare, Crippled Children - and Maternal & Child Health Program

The Bill contains a new provision which would authorize up to 15 percent of the Child Welfare funds to be earmarked for special projects of regional or national significance. There are also provisions which continue to earmark the 12½ percent of grants for maternal and child health and crippled children now reserved for special projects. The Bill would permit making the special project grants of all three programs available to public and non-profit institutions of higher learning and research as well as to the State agencies administering the plan.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE — This is a Bill to improve the Public Assistance program provided for in the Social Security Act. S 3139 is now before the Senate Finance Committee. It provides for matching for medical assistance to public assistance recipients, allowing an average of $3 a month for each dependent child. It broadens the list of relatives with whom a child can live and still be eligible for ADC payments, and permits the payment of aid to disabled children. There are several other important amendments to parts of the Public Assistance Act other than those relating to dependent children.

SICKENESS SURVEY — A one day hearing has been completed by the Senate Subcommittee on Labor and Public Welfare on S 3076 providing for a periodic National Sickness Survey to discover the extent of illness, disability and related conditions. The last similar survey was made 20 years ago as a WPA project. Since then figures on various illnesses have necessarily been only estimates.

TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE BOARD AND COUNCIL

Dear Dr. Mitchell

The critical question of Federal Aid for School Construction has a chance of coming to the floor of the House for a vote soon -- providing its supporters are willing to give it one more strong push.

The leadership of the House promises that the Kelley Bill (H.R. 7535) now pending in the Rules Committee will be brought to the floor in June. If there is enough support for parts of the Administration Bill, they could be put in as amendments to the Kelley Bill. The important thing is to get the Bill before the House for debate and vote. The enclosed NEA News carries additional information.

The long delay has caused mail to Congressmen to slacken and some of them interpret this as a waning of public interest in the measure. I am sure each of you is aware of how important it is to get aid to states for classrooms voted this session, and will be willing to do your bit to push it. It will help if you will call, write, or wire your own Congressman immediately.

Address him - House Office Building
Washington 25, D. C.

Tell him - You are looking to him to help push through satisfactory legislation providing Federal Aid for School Construction.
If you believe the Kelley Bill should be passed without extraneous amendments, tell him so.

If it is convenient, we would like to have a copy of the communication you send.

Sincerely yours,

George J. Hecht

Kelley Bill Faces Showdown

Leaders of both parties in Congress, after more than four months of maneuvering, appear ready to move toward a House vote on federal aid for school construction.

All signs point toward a decision early in June—and time now becomes a critical factor in the fate of the Kelley Bill (HR7535) which is still pending before the Rules Committee.

NEA Legislative Commission Meets

"Now is the time for an all-out effort in the states to help bring the Kelley Bill to the floor for a vote," NEA Legislative Commission Chairman Evelyn A. Casey commented May 9 after an emergency meeting of the commission in Washington.

Some 25 state leaders joined the commission in a special conference, followed by a series of personal interviews with key Congressmen. "On the basis of all the information we have received, we expect action in the House by early June," Miss Casey said.

Reliable surveys of House members show that in recent weeks support for the Powell amendment has decreased steadily. The threat of a so-called anti-segregation amendment has been one of the primary obstacles to House action on the Kelley Bill.

Surveys Show Improvement

On May 3, Representative Adam C. Powell (D-N. Y.) wrote to all House members. He implied a threat to "expose" those who voted against his amendment. The result has been a further weakening of his position, reflected in part in news columns and editorials (see inside).

The potential danger of the Powell amendment still looms large for many members of the House. Fortunately there are good, compelling reasons for opposing it, and Congressmen should be thoroly familiarized with them.

Parties Weigh Their Moves

Both parties in Congress have become increasingly aware that the school aid bill could be either a juicy election year plum or a sour grape.

Since January 1956, federal aid for school construction has been proclaimed as a priority legislative goal for both parties. Both want credit for enacting it. Neither wants blame for its defeat.

A favorable vote for the Kelley Bill in the House will require bipartisan support such as that demonstrated by the Education and Labor Committee in voting 21-9 to get the bill ready for House action. Bipartisan action by the Rules Committee is needed to send HR7535 to the floor.

President Urges Speed

At his May 4 press conference, President Eisenhower said this about the pending legislation:

"The earlier we can get that bill, the earlier we can get to work, and we need the schools, so I would like to do it . . . I am for speed."

The Gallup Poll

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., March 21 By a margin of almost 2-to-1, voters who have been following the proposals in Congress to authorize Federal aid for school construction say they would like to see the bill passed even though some money is given to Southern states where racial segregation is practiced.

Gallup

In a nationwide survey by the Institute, 61 per cent say they favor the bill designed to eliminate the classroom shortage, while 32 per cent say they are opposed if any money goes to states resisting the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling.

Many Congressional leaders think that Federal money should not go to states where segregation is practiced and Rep. Adam C. Powell Jr. (D-N.Y.) has announced his intention to introduce an amendment along that line to any legislation which is submitted.

To determine where public opinion stands, the Institute assigned its reporting staff to query an accurate cross-section of voters from Maine to California and from Washington to Florida.

Each person was first asked if he had been following the school aid proposals now before Congress. Six out of every 10 voters said they had.

Those familiar with the proposals were then asked:

"Would you like to see the bill passed if some money is given to communities in the South where white and Negro children are segregated—that is, kept apart?"

Yes, would	61%
No, would not	32
No opinion	7

An Institute survey reported in January found 67 per cent of the public in favor of granting Federal aid to build new public schools even though it would mean higher taxes, while 24 per cent were opposed and 9 per cent expressed no opinion.

HOPE FOR SCHOOL AID?

ONE of the first pupils to report at the opening of the present session of Congress last January was the bill providing federal aid for school construction. Ever since, the measure has been sitting in the legislative corner, wearing a political dunce cap and faced with the threat of still being there long after class is out.

The big cause of delay has been a threatened amendment by Rep. Adam Powell of New York which would deny aid to districts that do not make a start toward desegregation. Now, however, there is some indication that the dunce cap will be removed. Speaker Sam Rayburn says the Kelley bill should be cleared by the rules committee in a few weeks and that enough support has been mustered to defeat the Powell amendment.

The National Education association thinks two factors account for the cooling off on the Powell amendment. One is the submission of a civil rights program not pegged on school aid. The other is the administration position that enforcement of the desegregation decision is a matter for the courts and not for legislative conjecture.

Powell School Clause By Roscoe Drummond

Friends of Construction Endanger Bill

All the votes needed to pass the bill, if it can be acted upon by itself, are clearly visible in both the House and Senate.

Neither party wishes to go before the voters this fall as being to blame for putting our public school system further in jeopardy.

A NUMBER of the Democratic and Republican liberals who instinctively favor the Powell amendment are, I believe, persuadable—persuadable by a public opinion which shows that it wants Federal aid to school construction the only way it can be enacted—without the Powell amendment. The alternative is no aid, fewer schools, no Powell amendment—you can't attach a rider to a dead horse—nothing.

School Aid Comes First

Segregation is taking its place in the national campaign, but leaders of both parties have taken a gratifying stand that aid for schools ought to be supported on a broad and bipartisan basis.

President Eisenhower has advised against injecting an "extraneous" issue as a threat to the whole school program and Mr. Adlai Stevenson has also taken his stand against such a procedure. In Miami last week, Senator Kefauver declared that, in his opinion, children should not be penalized by having federal aid cut off for any reason.

COLLIER'S
March 2, 1956

First, the Schools

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S emergency school-building program is far too urgent to permit its being sidetracked or sabotaged by anti-segregation riders attached to authorization or appropriation bills.

The President's program was accompanied by his stated belief that provision of educational facilities is basically a local responsibility. But the states alone cannot meet the urgent needs of 1960. For every 71 pupils in the nation's schools in 1945 there are 100 today, and there will be 120 in 1960. In 1945, 6,000 classrooms were built in America; in 1955 that number was multiplied tenfold. But to meet the needs of 1960 an additional 500,000 units must be available. Labor and material shortages of two wars plus a population boom launched by bumper crops of postwar babies have created problems far beyond the capacities of the states.

The provision of adequate educational facilities is a primary obligation upon America at any time. Today it is more than an obligation—it is a practical necessity, a function of survival. . . .

It is unwise to confuse the matter at hand with segregation, an issue already decided by the U.S. Supreme Court. The segregation problem must and will be solved—but the solution can be found only in part in law; the passage of time and the onset of enlightenment must do the rest. How shall the light be provided, unless the basic facilities for enlightenment—public schools—are made available?

The School Emergency

by Ernest K. Lindley

THE plights of the public-school system were clearly set forth once gain last week in the report to the esident from the Committee for the hite House Conference on Educa- n. The conclusions of this Presi- ntial committee are sharper in some pects than those of the White se conference held un- its auspices late last They make it unmis- ly plain that we are onted with a national ency, that it is deep- and that it can be overcome only by a great, concerted effort.

was appointed d as conserva- as "stacked" education. Yet members con- that federal aid to school construction in all states is necessary on a temporary emergency basis. Two specifically urge Federal aid for general school operations, and the dimensions of the emergency, as described in the report, suggest that this is likely to be needed to meet the goals set forth.

The President has recommended a start on Federal aid to school construction. A majority, perhaps a large majority, of the Senate and House favor it. But legislation is blocked by the issue of school desegreg Many Northern members in both ties support, or at least don't vote against, the Powell amendme withhold aid from school distr which have not complied with Supreme Court decisions on sch desegregation. At the same time, opponents of Federal aid principle plus the opponen of the Powell amendme have the strength to preva by vote or filibuster.

Neither of the leading contestants for the Democratic Presidential nomination, Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver, has endorsed the Powell amendment. Stevenson has come out strongly against it.

The President also has indicated his opposition to the Powell amendment. His view that enforcement of desegregation should be handled separately from the legislation for aid to school construction is, I think, sound. By order of the Supreme Court, enforcement of its desegregation decision is in the hands of the Federal courts. For the present, at least, it should be left there.

As a practical matter, the possibility of breaking the legislative deadlock and launching a Federally aided school-construction program at this session depends primarily on the President's willingness and capability to exert leadership over his own party in Congress. Some Republicans are irrevocably wedded to the Powell amendment. Others are against Federal aid. But many will follow the President if he asks them to and explains why to the American people in more than a perfunctory way.

THE national shortage of educational facilities and teachers is critical. The Federal contribution which now has wide support in principle is in the form of aid to school construction. It is a reasonable guess that a large majority of citizens want this Federal aid and want it as soon as possible. It should not be delayed by controversy over collateral problems, no matter how important. Compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision will not be promoted by the defeat of school-aid legislation.

Library Services Bill Passes House by Solid Majority

A different federal aid bill—supported by the American Library Association and by the National Education Association—passed the House last week by a substantial bipartisan vote. The rural library services bill, HR2840, was approved by voice vote on May 8. Favorable Senate action is expected shortly.

"This House enactment shows that bipartisan support, encouraged by nationwide backing from national organizations and individuals, can assure the success of federal education legislation," reports J. L. McCaskill, executive secretary of the NEA Legislative Commission.

In some ways the library bill closely resembles the Kelley Bill: 1) it calls for matching, 2) it protects state control and provides a state plan for distribution of funds, and 3) it distributes federal money to all states.

House Passes Highway Bill

The swift passage by the House of a $50 billion federal-aid-to-highways bill last month showed three important things to supporters of the $1.6 billion Kelley Bill:

1. Rep. Powell made no move to attach his so-called anti-segregation amendment.
2. Members voted decisively to retain in the bill the Davis-Bacon minimum wage clause like the one in HR7535.
3. Members did not hestiate to approve the principle of large federal grants to be matched by states and localities, i.e., federal-state sharing of cost and responsibility, as provided in Kelley Bill.

You are one of 100,000 NEA leaders receiving this special issue of the NEA News. Will you write your Congressman in support of the Kelley Bill? If you have already written him, will you ask one of your colleagues to write? One letter written for each copy of the News will bring an average of more than 200 letters to each member of Congress over the next three weeks. The cause of good school buildings is at the tip of your pen.

How To Help HR7535:

1. Your Congressman needs to get letters and telegrams every day until the issue is decided.
2. This mail should stress support of Kelley Bill without extraneous amendments.
3. Individuals, associations, and groups should write brief factual letters and send similar telegrams.

Who Supports the Kelley Bill?

Second Draft of Proposed

1957 LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

A M E R I C A N P A R E N T S C O M M I T T E E

SPECIAL 1957 OBJECTIVES

LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING GRANTS-IN-AID TO STATES FOR THE DIMINUTION, TREATMENT AND CONTROL OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

Juvenile delinquency continues to be a serious problem which impedes the development of youth and saps the strength of the nation. Control and treatment of the problem must, of course, rest in the local community, but it is evident that its proportions have outgrown the facilities and resources of most localities. A bill passed the Senate in 1956 providing grants to states to help them provide expert guidance to communities and to set up statewide programs. The bill also carried authorization for Federal funds to provide training for needed personnel, and for special projects and demonstrations. The APC will work for similar legislation in the 85th Congress.

INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CHILD WELFARE GRANT-IN-AID PROGRAM.

The 84th Congress raised the authorization for this program from $10 million to $12 million. The amount appropriated for fiscal year 1957, however, was only $8,361,000. The states need increased financial help to carry on needed foster care for homeless and neglected children, better work in adoption, and for the many other problems that affect the welfare of children.

INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE U.S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION. Increased funds are needed for two reasons:

(1) More money is needed for the operation of the Office so that it may carry on experimental projects and programs and may provide the needed consultants to help state and local schools to develop the potentials of exceptional children.

(2) More money is needed for educational research. We spend over $2 billion a year on research connected with our national security, $185 million for medical research and $100 million on agricultural research. Yet, less than $2 million was appropriated last year for cooperative research in the Office of Education.

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATIONS FOR CHILDREN'S SERVICES

The Children's Bureau and Its Grant-in-aid Program. The APC, with the cooperation of other groups, succeeded in getting the 84th Congress to increase the appropriation for both the Crippled Children's and the Maternal and Child Health grant-in-aid programs. The former was raised to $15 million which is the maximum authorized, and the latter to $16 million which is just one-half million short of the authorization. The APC will be vigilant to retain these amounts in the appropriations of the 85th Congress. The APC will support adequate appropriations for the administration of the Children's Bureau because it believes there is need to continue to strengthen the one Bureau of government whose function is to keep alert to the over-all needs of children.

The National School Lunch Program. The APC will work to retain the $100 million appropriated in 1956 and will support increases if there is evidence of need. This program contributes to the nutrition of more than 10 million school children and provides a desirable outlet for the nation's surplus food.

United States Contributions to UNICEF. UNICEF helps many countries of the world to develop fundamental child health projects in areas where they are desperately needed. Its help to those underdeveloped countries in fighting yaws, tuberculosis, and other diseases in children contributes much to international good will.

FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

It is estimated that by 1960 there will be a shortage of approximately one-half million classrooms in the country. To build these classrooms will take approximately $17½ billion. States are making great efforts to meet the problem but the backlog of need seems too great for the financial resources of many states and localities. In the meantime thousands of children are going to school in double sessions or in basements, garages, or firetrap buildings. Crowded and makeshift classrooms are not conducive to the maximum intellectual development of the country's youth. Children must have the classrooms needed for their proper education. The Federal Government collects three-fourths of the country's tax money; it should share in the expense of meeting the country's emergency shortage of classrooms. The APC deplores the defeat of the school construction bills in the 84th Congress and believes that the future of the country demands adequate school construction legislation in 1957.

LONG TERM OBJECTIVES

LEGISLATION TO HELP DEVELOP THE INTELLECTUAL RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY THROUGH IMPROVED EDUCATION OF THE NATION'S YOUTH.

The United States is facing a shortage of brainpower in almost all fields of endeavor. The development and expansion of our country has apparently outdistanced our ever-improving processes of educating the manpower demanded by such growth. We are graduating each year only about half the engineers and scientists our country needs. We are short of doctors, research specialists, and woefully short of teachers. Remedial action must be taken soon if our country is to continue to move forward. The APC believes that the situation must be met on many fronts and that the Federal Government has a definite responsibility. Federal Aid for School Construction is one field in which the APC will continue to work. Other legislation which it considers essential and which will be one of its long range goals is:

A Federal Scholarship Program to Help Needy, Gifted High School Graduates to Enter College. Of the top third of our high school graduates in intellectual ability only about one-third go on to get college degrees. It is estimated that one-third of these gifted boys and girls have no desire to go to college and the other one-third of the promising youth cannot afford today's cost of a college education. This is a pitiful waste of needed brain power. The amount of scholarship money in the country is not known. Estimates range from $30 million to $50 million, most of which comes from institutions of higher learning which could well use the money to operate and expand their own facilities. It is estimated that some 100,000 college and university scholarships are needed. They will not be forthcoming in the immediate future from private sources. Unless we wish to stand by and see the brain power of the country wash away like topsoil, the Federal Government must provide scholarships on a competive basis for the most brilliant students who could not otherwise afford to go to college.

OTHER POSSIBLE ACTION

The APC will be alert to legislative proposals in the following fields and may at a later date take action to support or oppose specific bills.

1. Bills providing for research directly relating to the health and welfare of children.

2. Federal Housing legislation that may affect children in low-income families.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

I talked with Harold Fleming about keeping up a link between SRC and the American Parents Committee. He thinks that for a while just after he takes over he had best be on that one job solely. But if you should care to write him again about a year from now I should think he would be disposed to reconsider.

RECEIVED NOV 26 1956

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

I have your letter of November 19th in which you resign from the National Council of the American Parents Committee. I know there is nothing else for me to do but accept your resignation and I want to thank you for your help to us over the years.

May I wish you personally a happy, healthy life in Scotland.

We would very much like to have a continuing association with the Southern Regional Council whose work we think is so useful. Would you tell me who is your successor and when he takes office. If he is already working in your office, would you tell him about the American Parents Committee and ask him whether he will serve in your stead. If you will write me concerning this I will write him a formal letter of invitation.

I am enclosing herewith our Legislative Program for 1957.

November 1956 Issue No. 43

1957 LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF

THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

The following was adopted unanimously by the American Parents Committee Board of Directors at its meeting on November 14, 1956.

SPECIAL 1957 OBJECTIVES

LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING GRANTS-IN-AID TO STATES FOR THE DIMINUTION, TREATMENT AND CONTROL OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

Juvenile delinquency continues to be a serious problem which impedes the development of youth and saps the strength of the nation. Control and treatment of the problem must, of course, rest in the local community, but it is evident that its proportions have outgrown the facilities and resources of most localities. A bill passed the Senate in 1956 providing grants to states to help them provide expert guidance to communities and to set up statewide programs. The bill also carried authorization for Federal funds to provide training for needed personnel, and for special projects and demonstrations. The APC will work for similar legislation in the 85th Congress.

INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CHILD WELFARE GRANT-IN-AID PROGRAM.

The 84th Congress raised the authorization for this program from $10 million to $12 million. The amount appropriated for fiscal year 1957, however, was only $8,361,000. The states need increased financial help to carry on needed foster care for homeless and neglected children, better work in adoption, and for the many other problems that affect the welfare of children. The APC will work for appropriation of the full $12 million authorized.

INCREASED APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE U.S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION. Increased funds are needed for two reasons:

(1) More money is needed for the operation of the Office so that it may carry on experimental projects and programs and may provide the needed consultants to help state and local schools to develop the potentials of exceptional children. The APC is especially concerned about education of the gifted child, the children of migrant workers, and children who are mentally retarded.

(2) More money is needed for educational research. We spend over $2 billion a year on research connected with our national security, $185 million for medical research and $100 million on agricultural research. Yet, less than $2 million was appropriated last year for cooperative research in the Office of Education.

CONTINUING OBJECTIVES

ADEQUATE APPROPRIATIONS FOR CHILDREN'S SERVICES

The Children's Bureau and Its Grant-in-aid Program. The APC, with the cooperation of other groups, succeeded in getting the 84th Congress to increase the appropriation for both the Crippled Children's and the Maternal and Child Health grant-in-aid programs. The former was raised to $15 million which is the maximum authorized, and the latter to $16 million which is just one-half million short of the authorization. The APC will be vigilant to retain these amounts in the appropriations of the 85th Congress. The APC will support adequate appropriations for the administration of the Children's Bureau because it believes there is need to continue to strengthen the one Bureau of government whose function is to keep alert to the over-all needs of children.

The National School Lunch Program. The APC will work to retain the $100 million appropriated in 1956 and will support increases if there is evidence of need. This program contributes to the nutrition of more than 10 million school children and provides a desirable outlet for the nation's surplus food.

United States Contributions to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). UNICEF helps many countries of the world to develop fundamental child health projects in areas where they are desperately needed. Its help to those underdeveloped countries in fighting yaws, tuberculosis, and other diseases in children contributes much to international good will.

LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE GRANTS-IN-AID PROGRAMS OF THE CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The 84th Congress failed to pass amendments to the Social Security Act which would have provided a more balanced, well-rounded child welfare program and which would have improved the formula for distributing grants for maternal and child health and crippled children. The APC will be alert to such amendments in the 85th Congress and will support those which will improve the programs.

FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

It is estimated that by 1960 there will be a shortage of approximately one-half million classrooms in the country. To build these classrooms will take approximately $17\frac{1}{2}$ billion. States are making great efforts to meet the problem but the backlog of need seems too great for the financial resources of many states and localities. In the meantime thousands of children are going to school in double sessions or in basements, garages, or firetrap buildings. Crowded and makeshift classrooms are not conducive to the maximum intellectual development of the country's youth. Children must have the classrooms needed for their proper education. The Federal Government collects three-fourths of the country's tax money; it should share in the expense of meeting the country's emergency shortage of classrooms. The APC deplores the defeat of the school construction bill in the 84th Congress and believes that the future of the country demands adequate school construction legislation in 1957.

LONG TERM OBJECTIVES

LEGISLATION TO HELP DEVELOP THE INTELLECTUAL RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY THROUGH IMPROVED EDUCATION OF THE NATION'S YOUTH.

The United States is facing a shortage of brainpower in almost all fields of endeavor. The development and expansion of our country has apparently outdistanced our ever-improving processes of educating the manpower demanded by such growth. We are graduating each year only about half the engineers and scientists our country needs. We are short of doctors, research specialists, and woefully short of teachers. Remedial action must be taken soon if our country is to continue to move forward. The APC believes that the situation must be met on many fronts and that the Federal Government has a definite responsibility. Federal Aid for School Construction is one field in which the APC will continue to work. Other legislation which it consideres essential and which will be one of its long range goals is:

A Federal Scholarship Program to Help Needy, Gifted High School Graduates to Enter College. 1. Bills providing for research directly relating to the health and welfare of children.

2. Federal Housing legislation that may affect children in low-income families.

COOPERATION WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The APC is the only organization concerned exclusively with legislation for children, which has a full-time paid staff in Washington. Consequently, it is able to collect and supply information to other groups and to encourage them to record their views on specific bills. The APC welcomes such opportunities and hopes to expand these activities.

Dear Mr. Hecht:

Thank you for your letter of June 14th and the kind invitation it conveys. I know of George Mitchell's interest in the American Parents Committee, of course, and have read your Washington report for a long time.

Therefore, it is with genuine regret that I must decline membership on your National Council. Since George left, we have not only undertaken the impossible task of filling the gap he left but are also seeking to re-organize and expand the activities of the Southern Regional Council. The demands posed by these developments and the Southern situation generally are so great that I have pledged myself not to accept any further responsibilities, however worthy and modest in their claims.

I am honored by your invitation to serve and am deeply sorry that I cannot conscientiously accept.

With good wishes,

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Mr. Fleming:

When George Mitchell left the Southern Regional Council last year, I hoped that you would be willing to replace him as a member of the National Council of the American Parents Committee. He told us, however, that at the time, you preferred not to take on any outside activities.

Now that you are well established in your new position, I hope you feel ready and willing to join our National Council. There are no meetings to attend, although if you should happen to be in New York on the one or two occasions a year when the Board of Directors meets, you would be more than welcome to come. Nor is there any obligation to contribute financially to the organization.

The only thing we ask of our National Council members is that if they agree with the APC position on proposed legislation, that they write to members of Congress on occasion when we request it to express their views on legislation affecting children.

As a member of our National Council, you would be invited to express an opinion on the proposed annual legislative objectives, which opinion will be presented to the Board of Directors before it adopts the legislative objectives each year. I am enclosing a copy of our 1957 objectives, as well as several recent copies of the WASHINGTON REPORT ON LEGISLATION FOR CHILDREN, which we send regularly to all members to keep them informed.

I would be delighted to receive your acceptance, and I look forward to hearing from you soon.

February 1957 Issue No. 45

The 85th Congress is about a month old. It has completed its organization, heard several messages from the President, received the requested Budget for fiscal 1958, and opened up its yawning legislative hopper to several thousand Bills. The important question of the relation of the United States to the Middle East took the spotlight and it may be some time before domestic legislation comes up for serious consideration. Two of the subjects on the legislative program of this organization were on the President's "must" list when he conferred with the Republican leaders of Congress on New Year's Day. They were (1) Federal Aid for School Construction and (2) Federal grants to states to help them cope with the problem of juvenile delinquency.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION BILLS PILE UP

H.R. #1, the first Bill to be introduced in the House, was by Augustine B. Kelley, (Dem.) of Pa. providing Federal assistance to states and local communities for school construction. It is almost identical with the so-called Kelley Bill which was defeated on the floor of the House last July (see Washington Report No. 38). Many other school construction bills have also been introduced, and are reposing in the House Committee on Education and Labor.

The President sent his proposal for emergency legislation to overcome the shortage of classrooms to the Congress on January 28. He urged Congress to act quickly on his proposal which contained the following provisions:

1. A total of $1.3 billion would be authorized for Federal grants to the states at the rate of $325 million annually for 4 years, to assist in the construction of public schools in financially needy school districts.

2. A total of $750 million would be authorized over a 4-year period for the Federal purchase of bonds which local school districts have sought unsuccessfully to market at reasonable rates of interest.

3. Federal advances would be authorized to assist states to support bonds issued by state school-financing agencies to finance school construction. A request for $20 million for this purpose is in the President's Budget for 1958.

4. A total of $20 million over a 4-year period would be available to the states to help them develop programs for financing and building needed classrooms.

The President specifically asked that the school construction legislation be enacted on its own merits, uncomplicated by provisions dealing with the complex problems of the integration of schools.

Although both political parties in Congress seem committed to legislation to alleviate the classroom shortage, the passage of a school construction bill is by no means assured. It will take lots of vocal support from parents all over the country to get such legislation. HAVE YOU WRITTEN YOUR OWN CONGRESSMAN?

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY LEGISLATION GETS STARTED

Several Juvenile Delinquency Bills have been introduced. Two in the Senate: S.431 by Senators Kefauver, Hennings, and Langer, and S.867 by Senator Humphrey of Minnesota; and five in the House by Congressmen Green of Oregon, Bennett of Florida, Roosevelt of California, Teller of New York, and Perkins of Kentucky, (H.R.652, H.R.1053, H.R.2495, H.R.3112 and H.R.3859). All of these bills are identical with the Lehman Subcommittee Bill (S.4267) which passed the Senate last July but which got no attention in the House. Briefly, its provisions are:

1. Grants to the states to strengthen and improve programs. First year $5 million; second year, $7,500,000; third year $10 million. Succeeding years as Congress may determine.

2. Grants for Training Personnel. These are available to the states and to approved non-profit institutions of higher learning. The amount set in the bill for the first year was $5 million. For each of the following seven years such sums as Congress may determine.

3. Grants for Special Projects. $1 million for first year. Later as Congress may determine.

The President's proposal on Juvenile Delinquency has not yet been sent to the Congress. Mr. Folsom, Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, has publicly reiterated the need for legislation which will help the states in the diminution, treatment, and control of a problem which impedes the development of youth and saps the strength of the nation.

The President's Budget Message has this to say: "The Congress is urged to enact a new program of grants to the States to help fight juvenile delinquency." The first step citizens can take is to urge their Congressmen to press for hearings in the House Committee on Education and Labor.

OTHER BILLS

There have been many different Bills introduced to provide either Federal scholarships or loans to students in higher education, and several to provide credit against the individual income tax for amounts paid as tuition in institutes of higher learning. No hearings have been scheduled, nor are there likely to be any unless considerable support is registered with Members of Congress.

PRESIDENT REQUESTS FUNDS TO RUN PROGRAMS

The President's annual Budget Message to the Congress was accompanied by a document weighing some 12 pounds which contains detailed dollar-and-cent itemizations of the estimated costs of running the Government during the coming fiscal year. It reveals the Administration's ideas about what new programs should be voted and what they should cost, as well as its estimates on the cost of current programs. The Budget requests for programs in which the American Parents Committe is especially interested are as follows:-

PROGRAM	FISCAL 1957	FISCAL 1958
SCHOOL LUNCH	$ 100,000,000	$ 100,000,000
CHILDREN'S BUREAU
Salaries and expenses	1,822,000	2,154,000*
Maternal and Child Health	16,000,000	16,500,000
Child Welfare	8,361,000	10,000,000
Crippled Children	15,000,000	15,000,000
OFFICE OF EDUCATION
Salaries and Expenses	5,000,000	7,500,000

Note:

* The largest increases in this item are $97,520 additional for research in child life and over $16,000 additional for the Division of Juvenile Delinquency.

 This is $2 million short of the $12 million authorized for this purpose in the last Congress. The APC is working to get the appropriation increased to the full $12 million authorized.

 $1.3 million of this increase is for research on pressing educational problems.

In addition to the above, the new Budget contains a request for $451 million to be the cost of the School Construction Program asked by the President.

HOUSE TO VOTE SOON ON FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION BILL

The shift of a few votes may pass the Bill!

In the summer of 1956 the Federal Aid for School Construction Bill failed to pass the House of Representatives by a few votes. The shift of a few Congressmen would have passed the bill. Somewhat the same situation prevails today.

H.R.#1- the new School Construction Bill is now expected to reach the floor of the House for debate and vote very soon. Some work on your part could produce one of the few extra votes needed to pass it.

This Bill provides grants to the states of $1½ billion to aid them in the construction of their schools. It stipulates that there should be no Federal control of what is taught. It also provides loans to the schools that cannot sell school bonds except at extremely high interest rates.

This year's Bill has strong support from both parties. President Eisenhower strongly advocates the passage of the Bill. Governor Stevenson in his campaign and the Democratic platform endorsed Federal Aid for School Construction. The White House Conference on Education voted 2 to 1 in favor of Federal Aid to School Construction. The passage of H.R.#1 is endorsed by the National Education Association, the AFL-CIO, and some 50 other national voluntary agencies concerned with the education of children. Naturally the American Parents Committee is vigorous in the support of this Bill. The U. S. Chamber of Commerce has been working in opposition, and many letters have come to Congressmen against the Bill. Congressmen say they need more evidence of public support of it. Now is the time to write! A few letters at this time may help pass it.

Please write your own Congressman and any other Congressman that you know. Their address is c/o House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

We suggest that you ask your Congressman two things:-

(1) To vote for the Federal Aid for School Construction Bill, (H.R.#1).

(2) To vote against any anti-segregation amendment which might be offered to the Bill. Such an amendment will not further needed integration in the schools, which is a matter for court action. President Eisenhower, the National Education Association, and the AFL-CIO share this view. If this Bill is passed it will help children of all races, but an anti-segregation amendment could mean its defeat!

If for any reason you don't wish to discuss point #2 in your letter to your Congressman, nevertheless please write urging the passage of the Bill.

Please do it now while you are thinking about it. A letter, - a telegram, - or even a post card from you may help get it passed. And kindly let us know if you do it.

Will you kindly mail us the attached "Report Card" so that we may know that you have done this. It needs no stamp.

SCHOOL LUNCH NEED SET AT $100,000,000

New Yorker Urges That Goal in Capital Strategy Parley Looking to Next Budget

By BESS FURMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21 — Dr. Harold W. McCormick of the New York City Board of Education, urged a $100,000,000 school lunch program today for the next Federal fiscal year. He spoke at a conference called in order to get a seven-month start on meeting the next annual school lunch crisis.

Dr. McCormick was one of a dozen speakers called here by the new American Parents Committee, of which George J. Hecht, publisher of Parents Magazine, is chairman, to make suggestions on strategy to about forty national organizations which favor school lunches.

The speakers told how the temporary school lunch program, first a relief measure, later a war measure, managed to squeak through Congress year after year, winning grass-roots strength until it was at last made permanent—only to be almost negated by the House Appropriations Committee, backed by the House Rules Committee. The program, cut from $75,000,000 to $65,000,000, was saved by strong Senate backing.

Warning to States Cited

Speakers referred to the notice served on the states by the Senate-House conference committee when the last school lunch appropriation was passed, that unless they appropriated matching sums further Federal funds would be withheld. Only six Legislatures are meeting next year. The big bulk of the support comes from communities, not states, and such a policy would kill the program, the speakers emphasized.

Mrs. Ella McNaughton of the American Home Economics Association pointed out that this year the Federal Government was giving $65,000,000 and that local funds totaled $163,000,000, of which $127,000,000 came from sale of lunches to school children whose parents could afford to pay for them $25,000,000 came from gifts in cash and in kind, and only $11,000,000 in actual legislative appropriations.

Senator George D. Aiken, Republican, of Vermont, said that only the State of Utah could have qualified under the formula the House set.

Mrs. McNaughton urged that the groups strive: (1) to encourage local communities to contribute much more than they did last year, and (2) to "convince Congress that the warning issued by the conferees on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill on the school-lunch program should not prevail as the policy of Congress."

10 Million Deletion Recalled

Mrs. J. L. Taylor of the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation said that this year's $10,000,000 appropriation for school lunch equipment had been deleted by the House Appropriations Committee by writing legislation into an appropriations bill.

This step not only could have been objected to by any member on a point of order except that the Rules Committee had ruled out that procedure, she said, adding that the same strategy could be used to rule out the matching of Federal funds with local community funds. She suggested that citizens interested in keeping the school lunch program write to the Rules Committee.

Norris E. Dodd, Under-Secretary of Agriculture, said that the department had sent copies of the conferee's report to all states, adding: "It is squarely up to the states to see that funds are available." He said that only 6,000,000 of the 29,000,000 children of public school age got hot lunches.

Representative Clarence Cannon, Democrat, of Missouri, who led last year's fight in the House to save the program, said:

"The campaign must be carried to the men on Capitol Hill. They are not impressed by what they hear in Washington. They are unmoved by briefs. When they hear from home, that is the one thing that counts. Make the people at home articulate."

Walter Mason of the American Federation of Labor said this country had lent to England the money with which to carry on a $300,000,000 school-lunch program and that Congress ought to face up to the problem of our own children's nutrition. Kermit Eby of the CIO urged a strong election-year campaign for the appropriation.

FUND-RAISING SUGGESTIONS
For Local APC Chapters
APC Affiliates and Other Parents Groups

To raise money you must have a truly deserving cause. Your desire to create a safer, happier, fuller life for the children of your community is one that will appeal to parents, because their children will benefit; and to others because children represent the community's investment in the future.

How to Begin. The first step is to put on paper a cleancut statement of your purpose. Your statement should explain (1) why you feel your organization is necessary; (2) how you propose to do the job; and (3) who will be in charge. (4) Include a budget.

Don't be afraid to set your goal high! Be sure to announce the amount you intend to raise. If your goal is too low you may not get any substantial gifts. Match your goal to your need, even if you see little hope of meeting it. You may do better than you think you will at first. There are many different ways to make money. Suggested here are a few. Choose those that you think will be most successful in your community.

Don't expect to get money from non-members of your group unless your group members themselves give as much as they can afford.

Appoint a Membership Committee and a Finance Committee. Get energetic, enthusiastic people on these committees. Put your wealthiest and best connected members on your Finance Committee. These committees should be given both responsibility and freedom to act, but the officers of your group should not shirk their obligation to help in raising money and increasing your membership. Usually the chairman of the group and the committee chairman must do most of the work. But try to get as many men as possible to be active.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

Annual Dues of Membership and Social Gathering Admissions. Set your annual dues so as to produce the maximum possible revenue. But don't keep members out by setting the dues too high! You want as many members as possible! If dues are $2, $3, $5 or more, offer the privilege of paying them in semi-annual or quarterly installments. Remember you can charge extra for social gatherings or meetings at which refreshments are served. 25¢ and 50¢ admissions are easy to collect and it's surprising how much extra revenue they bring in.

Increase Your Membership! One of the easiest and best ways to raise money is to enroll more members who will pay dues and help you with your activities. While your membership committee should be active the year round in getting new members, we suggest that you have a special annual drive for new members. Select a month or a fortnight in which to concentrate your membership campaign. Get as many people working as possible.

Publicity is a Great Help! Newspaper and radio publicity is a great help in encouraging and rewarding the activity of your own members, in enrolling new members, and in getting contributions from others. Appoint a Publicity Committee. Include on it someone from a newspaper, a writer, an advertising man and someone who has time to visit the local newspaper editors and program directors of local radio studios. There are several books on how to get publicity. A good example is "How to Interpret Social Welfare", by Helen Cody Baker and Margaret Routzahn. Others are listed in the Social Work Yearbook which you will probably find in your library. Several pamphlets on special phases of the subject have been published by the National Publicity Council for Health and Welfare Services, Inc., 130 East 22nd Street, New York 10, N. Y.

Publicity Via Schools. Go to see the principals of the schools in your neighborhood; if yours is a large community, see the superintendent of schools. Ask whether mimeographed bulletins or announcements of your meetings may be given to all pupils to be brought home to their parents. And ask them to post announcements on all school bulletin boards. Perhaps you can get art teachers to have art students produce posters for you for use on school bulletin boards and in store windows.

If you cannot raise all the money you need for your projects from within your own group, there are many ways of obtaining money from others, as well as getting some of your members to give additional support.

The Best Way to Raise Money is to Ask People for Money! Don't be afraid to ask. You are not asking for yourself. You are seeking support for a worthy cause. Remember nothing is as contagious as enthusiasm. Unless you are enthusiastic about the cause yourself, your co-workers will not be enthusiastic. And your co-workers will have to be enthusiastic to persuade your prospective contributors to give. Therefore, at all times when you are talking about your projects evidence the maximum of enthusiasm and emphasize to your co-workers that they must do so, too.

Ask a Small Number of Wealthy People for Substantial Contributions. Put your story in printed or mimeographed form. You'll doubtless have to leave something with a good proportion of your prospects. They'll want to think it over. Your presentation should cover at least the four parts enumerated above. Make a list of prospects. Try to get them together at a meeting, or go to them. If you try to get them to a meeting, have a wealthy, influential person call it for his or her home or office. Many of your best prospects will not come to a meeting; they should be visited. It is important to select with great care the people who will make the personal solicitations for money. It's more impressive if two people make the solicitation than if one person goes alone. If you plan a meeting, have an interesting speaker to present the need. The appeal for funds should be made then and there--appeals made on subsequent days by means of letters are rarely successful.

Call Together at a Large Meeting People of Varying Income Levels. Arrange a luncheon, dinner or meeting at a suitable location. Check with the community social calendar to prevent conflicts with other events which might "steal" your crowd. Get a few well-known speakers whom people will want to hear. Get out your invitations well in advance. Invitations should bear the names of an impressive list of prominent sponsors. Use the telephone, especially during the last few days before the event, to persuade people to come, dividing the names of those who are to be called among your committee. Work hard on advance publicity for the event. Get your group to agree to take tables and to bring friends. Make a direct appeal for funds at the meeting. Have pledge cards. Do not rely on mail follow-up appeals. Get your pledges while you have your people together and while they are enthusiastic. Spot people in the audience who have agreed to contribute and have them respond with their pledges to get the ball rolling.

Direct Mail to Large Lists of People. In some cases letters of appeal to large lists of people do not bring back the cost of postage and printed matter. So don't send out letters to large lists without first making small tests of the effectiveness of such mailings. Your list of prospects may not be a good one. Some letters of appeal are more effective than others. Various letters should be tested on small, typical portions of various lists to see what results they produce compared to the cost of mailing. Nearly everybody thinks he can write a good letter of appeal -- but it is more difficult than it appears. Get a direct-mail expert to assist you. Look him up in your Classified Telephone Directory under "Advertising - Direct Mail", or "Letter Services." Remember most people get lots of letters. To get itself read and to cause the writing of a check, a letter of appeal must (1) be neat and attractive in appearance; (2) must have an attention-attracting fresh substance; (3) must be interesting; (4) must ask for individual action; (5) must be hand signed -- if possible with the name of a person of prestige in the community. There must be enclosed a folder describing the project, a contribution blank, and a return envelope. Use only first class postage as little attention is paid to third class mail.

Tag Days. Consult the Chief of Police as to whether these are permitted. If they are, it is essential to have advance newspaper and radio publicity. Have plenty of attractive women at good locations selling tags.

Hats or "Collection Cans" at Meetings. Ask for contributions at every suitable occasion. The "collection can" method is often used to defray costs of meeting plans and refreshments. There should be no compulsion to give.

Door Prizes. One proven method is to sell numbered tickets for 25¢ or less as people enter. You can buy duplicate numbered tickets.(hat-check tickets) At the end of the meeting have all the duplicates of the numbers sold put in a hat and draw one for a prize. But be sure to choose a prize which will leave you a substantial amount for your organization's treasury. Prizes will often be donated by members or friends, or offered at wholesale prices by local merchants.

Parties and Other Social Affairs. Dances, cocktail parties, picnics, clambakes, musicals are all good ways to raise money. Expenses must be kept down and ticket sales up. Assign definite members to the responsibility of securing the place, the music, (canned or live), tickets, decorations, publicity, and, most important of all, the selling of the tickets. Sell tickets in advance. All monies received and spent should go through the treasurer. Get as many people working on selling tickets as possible.

Bazaars and Rummage Sales. Have a campaign for contributions of articles of clothing, ornaments, books, etc. Everyone has certain things around the house that they are not going to use and which they will be glad to give to you for a bazaar or a rummage sale. Perhaps you may wish to give the sale an unusual name such as "Grandma's Attic Sale." Select a place, well-located, for the sale and get advance publicity for it. Have everything that you propose to sell marked and priced by a committee.

Raffles. Try to get one or more prizes donated by a local merchant. Give them ample publicity in return for their donations. Postal regulations prohibit the sale or delivery of raffle tickets by mail, and in some states all raffles are illegal. Obtain approval from your local police officials for raffles.

Sale of Blood to Local Blood Banks. For information on the sale of blood to local blood banks by persons who will turn the proceeds over to your organization, get in touch with your local Red Cross Chapter or hospitals. They usually are ready to pay for each blood donation. People got used to giving blood during the war and realize that it is painless and harmless. In every community there is a definite need for blood donations.

Theatre Benefits. Arrange with your local motion picture theater manager or the sponsor of a play or sport event to take over all or part of one performance. Your group should receive at least 25% of the proceeds from the tickets sold by your members. Avoid committing your group to a guarantee of the number of tickets you will sell.

Souvenir Programs. In connection with your annual meeting, dance, convention, or theatre party, arrange for a special program book. Appoint a committee to sell advertisements to local merchants. Many local merchants are glad to advertise or present their "greetings" and thus get the goodwill or appreciation of members of the organization.

Bingo Games and Bridge Parties. Such affairs are extremely popular. Be sure, however, that there is no law in your community against bingo games. Have some experienced person in charge of running the affair. On bingo games the general admission charge should be fairly low, with admission including a certain number of cards. Additional cards for games should be sold at 10¢ or 25¢ each. Have a suitable prize for each card or give the winners money prizes (which are the most popular). Be sure, however, that there is plenty of profit in it for your organization. For bridge parties charge $1.00 or more for the privilege of playing. Make inquiry locally as to whether you must add an amusement tax to the admission price, even though it is for charity. Be sure to get plenty of advance publicity for such bingo and card parties. Get as many people as possible out selling tickets to them.

Magazine Subscriptions. Magazine publishers will pay your organization liberal commissions for the sale of subscriptions. Sell subscriptions to Parents' Magazine and other Parents' Institute publications: Calling All Girls (teen-age girls), Varsity Magazine (for high school and college men), Polly Pigtails (for girls 8 years to 10 years), True Comics; Jack Armstrong, Calling All Kids. (The last three are superior type comics.) Subscription blanks will be furnished free, imprinted with the name and address of your group. Write to the Group Service Bureau, Parents' Institute, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N. Y. Many of the other leading magazine companies also make attractive commission arrangements for local groups. Write to School Division of the Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia, Pa.; to the Crowell-Collier Company, 250 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.; to Reader's Digest, Pleasantville, N. Y.; to the McCall Company, Dayton, Ohio; and to Time, Inc., 540 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago 1, Illinois.

Conduct a Lecture Series or Institute. If you can get a suitable hall free or at low cost and if qualified, interesting speakers can be secured without remuneration, perhaps you can arrange a Lecture Series or Institute and sell tickets to yield a substantial profit. The most interesting subjects are Child Rearing, Family Problems and National Affairs. For a series of from 4 to 10 lectures a charge of from $5 to $10 may be asked. It is vital to get all your members to sell tickets energetically to their friends and neighbors and, of course, to buy them themselves.

Promotion Is Important. No matter what specific activity you may choose, good planning, wide publicity, strong promotion, and smooth, efficient conduct of the affair are all essential. Use every publicity media. Get advance publicity out in time to fire the enthusiasm of your workers. Keep it rolling to soften prospects for their approach. Use it to keep workers and others informed of your progress. "Sell" your editors and radio program managers on the value of your project and they will help you. You can earn their cooperation by remembering that "Names are news."

SUGGESTED COMMUNITY ACTIVITIES
For APC Chapters and APC Affiliates and for Other Clubs and Parent Groups

There is so much that needs to be done for children -- locally and nationally -- that it's hard to know where to begin!

This booklet suggests a great variety of useful activities from which local APC Chapters and Affiliates and other local groups of parents can choose one or more which they wish to undertake. The choice depends on (1) the needs of the community (2) the size and financial resources of the group and (3) the quality of leadership available. The latter is the most important. There is hardly any limit to the activities that even one good leader can organize and direct. One energetic leader can seek out and encourage other leaders and can build up the size and strength and resources of the group. To get things going there is required one able, genuinely public-spirited person, with sufficient time to do the job, and enthusiasm. If a person isn't enthusiastic himself he can't make others enthusiastic. There is nothing as contagious as enthusiasm!

The activities suggested in this booklet are practical. Thet are being carried out successfully all over the country. YOU can succeed with them too!

Most problems relating to children have to be solved locally. While local APC Chapters and Affiliates will, it is hoped, cooperate with the national APC organization in working out its program of federal legislation on behalf of children, nevertheless your first obligation is to do whatever is possible to improve the conditions of children in your own neighborhood; in the school which your children attend, in the playgrounds and in the homes of your community. Charity and child welfare begin -- but do not end -- in your own home town!

FIRST: Consider all the suggested activities in this booklet and make a list of other activities that you think are needed or that other members of your group have suggested. Then decide which activity will be of the most immediate benefit to your community giving due consideration to your group's capacity to carry it out successfully. A discussion of the relative need for the various activities and the practicality of your group undertaking one or more of them will ensure a lively, interesting meeting.

SECOND: Don't definitely decide to undertake any activity until a thorough study of the project is made. Make a careful estimate of how much the activity will cost. Where is the necessary money to come from? Read the booklet published by the APC entitled "Fund-Raising Suggestions for APC Chapters and APC Affiliates". Make sure your group has the strength and facilities to do the job. Don't try to do too many things at one time, but do each job well. Concentrate on something that you think you can achieve. Remember - that nothing succeeds like success!

THIRD: Whenever you see things that are wrong, adopt the positive constructive approach. Make practical suggestions for the improvement of conditions. Criticism creates ill will. Protests should be made only as a last resort and should always be accompanied with positive recommendations.

FOURTH: Special committees should be appointed to carry out the activities decided upon. Divide the work so as to get as many people as possible interested and participating. Place responsibility on the committees but encourage the assistance of your whole membership. Use your activities as a means of recruiting new members.

* * * * * * * *

Here is a check list of suggested activities for APC Chapters, APC Affiliates and other groups or clubs of parents and public-spirited citizens which the APC recommends for your group's consideration and ultimate choice.

Better Salaries for Teachers: 350,000 out of 850,000 teachers have left teaching since 1941 in addition to the normal turnover. There's a particularly alarming loss of men teachers. 109,000 teachers today are "sub-standard" holding only emergency teaching permits because they have not the necessary qualifications. 70,000 teaching positions are vacant. Fewer college students are entering teaching than before the war. This is largely because teachers' salaries, far too low even before the war, are still less attractive now. They have lagged behind the increases of wages and salaries in other fields. The steadily mounting cost of living has cancelled even recently granted increases in teachers' salaries in some communities. "How Parents Groups can Work to Up Teachers' Salaries" is told in an article with that title by Dr. Frank W. Hubbard of the National Education Association which has been reprinted from Parents' Magazine by the American Parents Committee, 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York 17, N.Y. Send 10¢ stamps or coins to cover the cost of the reprint, the postage and handling.

Better Schools: Many schools are antiquated, inadequate and some are even unsafe. Textbooks are out-of-date and dirty. Many schools are shockingly over-crowded. Furthermore, the sharp increase in the birth-rate just before, during and since the war means that within a relatively few years there will be a great increase in the number of children who will need schooling. The schools of today are not big enough, nor adequately staffed and equipped to accomodate this influx of "war Babies". A most helpful article entitled "A Check List for Parents on Rating Schools" by N. L. Engelhardt, Associate Superintendent of Schools of New York City, has appeared in Parents' Magazine. "The Atlantic Magazine" and the General Federation of Women's Clubs recently offered a prize in a contest for the best articles "The Schools I Want and How to Get Them". The American Parents Committee, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N. Y. has reprinted the two prize-winning articles from the "Atlantic" and the "Parents' Magazine" article, and these will be mailed to anyone sending 10¢ in stamps or coin to cover the cost of the reprints, the postage and handling. They are full of ideas that will help you to work for better schools in your community.

Motion Picture Machines for Schools: Why not use in our schools the successful methods of teaching that were developed by our Army and Navy during the past war? By means of sound motion pictures and slide films our Armed Forces Training Programs found that learning time could be shortened between 35% and 55% with a corresponding increase in the length of time the material was remembered. Every school should have access to teaching films and a sound motion picture projector and a slide film projector. The use of teaching films is actually an economy. Children learn faster and remember more. In many schools there are not funds enough to buy motion picture or slide film equipment nor to rent films. Local parents groups might raise money to donate such useful equipment to the schools in their community. The money can be raised by means of a drive or a dance or in other ways suggested in the pamphlet, "Fund-Raising Suggestions for Parents Groups", published by the American Parents Committee.

Better Lunchroom Facilities: Often school authorities need the volunteer service of a number of mothers to help in the school lunchroom. Your group may be able to render this service. In some cases better kitchen or lunch room equipment is needed. Perhaps your group could donate it.

Your Schools May Need Teachers' Aides: Many communities are helping to meet the teacher shortage by means of volunteer teachers' aides. Women in the community are giving one or two hours a day to the work which consists of clerical assistance of all kinds, such as keeping records, recording grades, collecting and counting lunchroom money, assisting with children on trips and excursions, helping with supplies and materials, assisting in the school library and in the lunchroom. Members of the community who serve in this way will develop a greater appreciation of what the schools are doing, their problems and achievements and needs.

Child Guidance Clinics: Frequently parents and school authorities are unable to cope with behavior problems presented by children. Every community needs a mental hygiene clinic (often called a child guidance clinic) to which parents, children and others who need guidance concerning children may go for counsel. It is, of course, vital that such clinics be in charge of trained, competent persons. The National Committee for Mental Hygiene Inc., 1790 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y. publishes a pamphlet list of nearly 100 pamphlets that can be obtained for a small charge dealing with mental hygiene problems and ways to handle them. One of these pamphlets, entitled, "The Organization and Function of the Child Guidance Clinic" may be obtained for 25¢. There are many other pamphlets listed.

Better Intercultural Relations: Prejudice against foreigners, against Jews, Catholics and people of different color is having increasingly serious and disastrous effects in many communities. There are many things that can be done to promote better intercultural relations and understanding. A list of pamphlets on this subject will be sent free on request by the Bureau of Intercultural Education, 109 W. 57th Street, New York 19, N. Y.

Parent Education: Most mothers and fathers want to be better parents and will profit greatly from the study and discussion of child rearing problems and methods. Parents' Magazine, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N.Y. will send you free on request study programs based on articles in this magazine on preschool children and study programs devoted to the problems of the school child.

A Clothing Exchange: Children outgrow at an astonishing rate their clothing, including shoes and rubbers, also skates and other play equipment. In many schools, through the help of parents groups, clothing exchanges have been set up.

Scholarships and Loan Funds: In every community there are promising students who need financial assistance. A group can make such aid possible.

Vocational Counseling: It is a most distressing fact that many boys and girls have no idea how they are going to earn their living after they get out of school; they don't know what they want to do and are not preparing themselves for any field of work. A vocational guidance bureau can be extremely useful. It should provide reading matter concerning the opportunities and qualifications needed in various fields of work. Perhaps aptitude tests can be provided and vocational guidance be given by a qualified person. For assistance in such matters write to the Vocational Guidance for Juniors, 95 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y. and to the National Vocational Guidance Association, 82 Beaver Street, New York, N. Y.

Sport and Social Activities for Young Folks: In many communities all it takes to get a good recreation program started is the initiative of an enthusiastic parents groups. Basketball, baseball, tennis competitions, dances and parties for young folks are not hard to organize. If there is a lack of such sport and social activities in your town, why not consider taking the initiative, remembering always to get the young people themselves to take an active part in planning and carrying out such projects?

Better Recreational Facilities for Your Community: Many communities need better recreational facilities for children and particularly teen-agers. Does your neighborhood or school need a playground -- or a better playground with more equipment for young children and provisions for sports of all kinds? Does the playground need a supervisor and a play-leader? Volunteers frequently can help. There is much that local parents groups can do to help. The National Recreation Association, 315 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y. publishes a large number of booklets to help community groups in working for better recreation facilities. A catalogue of all their booklets will gladly be sent free on request. Some of their most useful booklets and their prices are as follows: "Know Your Community" a guide to make it easy to serve your community's recreation need -- 25¢; "Organized Recreation in a Small Community" - 10¢; "Rural Recreation" - 75¢; "What Can We Do In Our Town", the organization and promotion of a leisure time program for a town or small city - 15¢; "Planning a Community Recreation Building" - 25¢; "88 Successful Play Activities" - 60¢.

Teen-Age Centers: In many communities the teenagers are the "Forgotten People". Much juvenile delinquency results from the lack of attractive and decent recreational facilities for young people. The National Recreation Association, 315 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y. publishes a number of pamphlets which will be helpful to parent groups in doing something about this matter. Among these are: "Got A Date Tonight?" -- the experiences of a number of cities in providing youth recreation programs - 15¢; "Suggestions for Youth Recreation Programs" - 10¢; "Teen Age Centers: - 10¢; "Teen Trouble" - 10¢; "Youth Out-of-Doors" - 10¢. The Nehi Corporation, Columbus, Georgia, who are the bottlers of Royal Crown Cola, publish a very helpful booklet, "How to Organize A Teen Age Night Club", which tells exactly how to proceed and which contains a fine bibliography of books on recreational activities. This booklet will be sent free on request.

Doing Something About Juvenile Delinquency: If delinquency is making a black mark against your community there are many other things that can be done in addition to those referred to above. An excellent pamphlet on this subject. "The Whole Town's Talking" may be obtained for 10¢ from the Youth Division of the National Social Welfare Assembly, 134 East 56th Street, New York 22, N.Y.

Stimulating Youth Activities: Youth can be encouraged to participate in neighborhood affairs and build a program of post-school education for themselves. A helpful pamphlet entitled "Youth United for A Better Home Town" can be obtained for 20¢ from the Youth Division of the National Social Welfare Assembly, 134 East 56th Street, New York, N.Y.

Child Care Centers and Play Schools: Many working mothers must have a place to leave their young children not yet in school or older children after school hours, or all day during the Summer. Children of non-working mothers often need better recreational opportunity under good supervision. Advice on organizing nurseries and play school groups may be obtained from the Child Welfare League of America, 130 E. 22nd Street, New York, N. Y. and the Play Schools Associations, Inc., 119 W. 57th Street, New York, N. Y.

Juvenile Offenders: To help young people released from penal institutions to secure employment and to make readjustments is something that may be needed in your community. The Osborne Association, 114 E. 30th Street, New York 16, N. Y. publishes many books and pamphlets with helpful information on this subject.

Children in Jails: Surprising as it may seem many children who are orphaned or deserted are placed in jails because many communities have no other place to house them. Does this happen in your community? The American Prison Association, 135 E. 15th Street, New York 3, N.Y. can give helpful counsel if you have such a local problem.

Dental Hygiene: Three-quarters of all American school children have dental defects. A great many parents do not have enough money to pay for dental service and free dental services throughout the United States for those who are unable to pay is shockingly insufficient. A dental clinic for children in your town may be needed. The dentists in your community may be willing to volunteer part-time service or a full-time dentist may be employed.

Health & Welfare Planning: A group of public-spirited parents can render splendid service meeting the health and welfare problems of their communities if they make a determined and intelligent effort to do so. A helpful pamphlet entitled, "Health and Welfare Planning in Small Communities" may be obtained for 25¢ from Community Chests & Councils, Inc., 155 E. 44th St., New York 17, N.Y.

Better Local Government: Communities prosper as a result of an informed and interested citizenry. The National League of Women Voters, 726 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C. issues a number of helpful pamphlets: "Is Politics Your Job?" - 10¢; "Election Handbook" - 10¢; "Know Your Town's Future" - 25¢; "Know Your Country" - 25¢; "Local Tax Study" - 6¢. Parents groups can be active in working for the installation of voting machines, the elimination of poll taxes, the removal of all Jim Crow practices at elections, intelligent redistricting, getting out the vote, etc. The National Muncipal League, 299 Broadway, New York, N.Y. and the National Civil Service League, 65 W 44th Street, New York, N.Y. publish pamphlets which are helpful to those concerned with better local government.

Fire Prevention: The loss of homes from needless and preventable fires runs into the hundreds of millions of dollars. During an average year fires take in the U.S. 10,000 lives, burn 40,000 persons, destroy 350,000 homes, 2,600 schools, 2,700 churches, and burn forest lands equal to an area the size of Kentucky. Information on how to conduct a Fire Prevention Drive, may be obtained from the National Board of Fire Underwriters, 85 John Street, New York, N. Y.

Make Your Town Safe: A large percentage of traffic accidents and home accidents occur to children. School safety is a must. Local parent groups can put on a community, school and home safety campaign. A helpful booklet entitled, "Make Your Town Safe" deals with all these problems and can be obtained for 20¢ from the Public Affairs Committee, 22 E. 38th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

Community Fund Raising: Your local organization as a group or as individual members should be encouraged to assist your local Community Chest, the Red Cross, and other welfare agencies in their annual campaigns for funds.

Planned Parenthood: Many married couples want children and are not able to have them. Others wish counsel on child spacing. A Planned Parenthood Clinic in your community may be extremely useful. The Planned Parenthood Federation of America Inc. 501 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y. stands ready to give counsel and assistance.

Marriage Counseling Service: Both young people about to marry and married couples who are having difficulty frequently need to talk their problems over with a qualified counselor. A marriage counseling service in your community might become established and become self-sustaining. Information on how to establish a marriage counseling service can be obtained from the Institute of Family Relations, 5287 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 27, California, American Association of Marriage Counselors, 563 Park Ave., New York City 21, N.Y., and the National Council on Family Living, 1126 E. 59th St., Chicago 37, Ill.

Jobs for Disabled Veterans and Other Handicapped Persons: Many business firms can be persuaded to employ disabled veterans and other handicapped persons if they are approached personally. This is not only a patriotic and public service but it is also good business. Many employers have observed that as a group these veterans and handicapped persons have equal or better production records, with less absenteeism, fewer accidents, and less labor turnover than able-bodied employees. Furthermore, the U. S. Veterans Administration provides on-the-job training for veterans and frequently supplements their salaries if they cannot earn the prevailing wage. Get in touch with the nearest office of the U.S. Veterans Administration and find out whether the employment of disabled veterans is a problem in your community. If it is, form a committee to canvass personally the big employers of labor, urging them to employ a number of disabled veterans and handicapped persons. The Veterans Administration maintains files of the classifications of disabled veterans seeking employment.

Rehabilitation of Handicapped Persons: Physically handicapped children can often be saved from lives of uselessness and frustration if their communities provide them adequate help. Special job training, provision of crutches, artificial limbs, etc., or establishment of an employment agency may be all that is needed to turn a family and community burden into a self-respecting citizen. The National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, 11 South La Salle St., Chicago, Ill., can put you in touch with communities that have gone a long way toward solving these problems.

Adult Education Classes: In many communities, men and women are finding new interests and getting a lot more fun out of living, besides making friends, by attending adult education groups. In some communities, everything from social dancing to courses in sociology and economics are offered adults. A community meeting will launch the idea and from the audience you will get suggestions of what the grownups in your town or city are interested to learn. The adult classes meet in a school building and teachers, health workers, various professional people and others will make up the teaching staff. For help in getting such a project organized, get in touch with the American Association for Adult Education, 60 E. 42nd St., New York, N. Y.

Establish a Pinch-Hit Mothers Service: When a mother is ill at home, or hospitalized, there is often need for a homemaker to come in and take over. Many communities have established a helpful service guidance in 24 states. You can take steps to initiate this service in your community. For help in doing so, ask for booklet on Supervised Homemaker Service from the U.S. Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency, Washington, D. C.

Baby Sitters Bureau: Many parents need someone to stay with their children when they wish to go out. And there are doubtless in your community many mothers and young people who would like to earn extra money by rendering such service. Establishing a Baby Sitters Bureau is a useful activity and can be made to be more than self-supporting. The Bureau can properly retain from 10% to 20% of the fees charged for service. The Bureau should recommend only sitters who are reliable. The U. S. Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency, Washington, D. C. will on request send a pamphlet which will be helpful although not specifically on the subject.

Does Your Hospital Need Nurses' Aides? Practically every hospital in the country is understaffed. One way to supplement the nursing care in your community and to bring the hospitals much-needed help is for a group to stimulate interest in volunteer work as nurses' aides. Many women can give two or three hours a day to such rewarding work and high school girls can also make a valuable contribution.

Have You an Efficient County Nursing Service? If you want more Better-Baby Clinics, better prenatal and postnatal care for mothers, follow-up care for tubercular cases, visiting nurse service, constructive health education, and many other needed health services, why not work to secure a strong, vigorous County Nursing Service? Ask your State Health Department for help in organizing to secure the health services you want and need.

Movies Suitable for Children: A number of parents associations have worked with theatre managers to bring good movies to their communities. In some towns arrangements have been made for special performances; in others theatre managers have given special promotions to movies which receive high ratings in the Parents' Magazine movie reviews. Parents' Magazine subscriptions are $2.50 a year. Special group rates are available. Address: 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N.Y.

Library Service for Children: Does your community have an attractive library, reading room, good books in good condition, and a librarian who takes a genuine interest in children? The right kind of library facilities can contribute in many ways to the mental and spiritual development of the child. For advice in planning improvement of your library write the American Library Association, 520 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Musical Opportunities: Many children, young people, and grownups as well, who are not interested in solo instrument performance become ardent members of a community orchestra or chorus. In almost every community there is a musician who would become an enthusiastic director of music activities if he were given a little help with organization. Write the National Association of Music Merchants, Inc., 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago 4, Illinois, for suggestions and reference material. Music education and enjoyment for every child is another rewarding project. A state which has done outstanding work in this respect is North Carolina. For help and suggestions, address North Carolina Symphony Society, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Conduct an Institute on Marriage and Family Living: Parents are interested in hearing discussions of the various problems of marriage, delinquency, divorce, child rearing and other marriage and family living problems. A pamphlet of "How to Conduct an Institute" of this kind is available for 10¢ from the National Council on Family Relations, 1126 E. 59th Street, Chicago 37, Illinois.

Help for War-Torn Lands: Many local groups are sending books, food and dollars overseas. A handbook listing 174 organizations through which such donations may be made is published by the Commission for International Educational Reconstruction, 744 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington, D.C. In sending food packages to Europe, the best agency is "Care" which is the Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe Inc., 50 Broad Street New York 4, N. Y. This organization is a non-profit organization and has branches throughout the country.

Taking An Active Interest in City, State & Federal Legislation Affecting Children: The education, health and welfare of children is very largely dependent on governmental appropriations and action. Such matters should not be left exclusively to legislators, government officials and politicians. Parents groups can be extremely influential. Legislators are impressed by the interest of the public in educational, health and welfare matters. Groups can send speakers to appear at public hearings on city budgets and on proposed legislation. Groups can keep in touch with proposed local legislation through a careful reading of the newspapers. In many states non-partisan organizations issue a bulletin on welfare legislation. To keep abreast with proposed federal legislation concerning education, health, housing and child welfare there is an excellent impartial weekly bulletin issued by the Social Legislation Information Service, Inc., 930 F Street, N.W., Washington 4, D.C.

Current Affairs Discussions: If your group wishes to discuss national, international and social problems, several magazines will provide discussion outlines. Among them are Newsweek, 152 West 42 St., New York 18, N. Y. and the Reader's Digest, Pleasantville, N. Y.

AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

Incorporated as a public-service, non-profit, membership association working for better conditions for children locally & nationally.

52 VANDERBILT AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LOCAL CHAPTER OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

Mothers and fathers like to talk over their child rearing problems with other parents who have similar experiences. They like to study and discuss the best methods of child rearing. They are interested in bettering the school to which their children go, and in bettering the neighborhood in which their children are growing up; and they realize that they cannot do this job alone.

For results, parents need to join forces. Furthermore , they get satisfaction, help, comfort, and pleasure from membership in an organization.

One parent with ability and enthusiasm can do much to build an organization. You can do it! You can quickly enlist the assistance of others if you are enthusiastic yourself. Nothing is as contagious as enthusiasm.

1. Write in for Organizational Helps: Write to the American Parents Committee, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N.Y. and ask for the following pamphlets that are available to you without charge: "The Objectives and Organization of the APC," "Community Activities for APC Chapters," "Fund-Raising Suggestions for APC Chapters," "The American Parents Committee Bulletin for Those Taking an Active Interest in Federal Legislation Affecting the Welfare of the Nation's Children."

2. Get a Small Group of Parents Together as a Nucleus: Try to get six or ten people together as a nucleus. Have them meet in your own home or in your club or in the school building. Tell them what you have in mind. Invite them to be your organization committee. Try to get someone on this organization committee who is connected with a local newspaper or radio station or who has had some previous writing or organization experience. Suggest various activities for your group. These can be taken from the APC pamphlet on "Suggested Community Activities."

PAGINATION INCORRECT

3. Select a Name: Your local organization can have any name it wishes. It is the preference of the APC, however, that the name of your town, neighborhood, district, church, school, YWCA or club, followed by the words, "Parents Committee" be used. It is believed that a name such as the "Bronxville Parents Committee" or the "Yorkville District Parents Committee" or the "Smithtown School Parents Committee" is the most suitable type of name that can be selected.

4. Call a Big Organization Meeting. (a) Decide on your meeting place. You can usually get space in either a school, YMCA, Union Hall, Club or Church.

(b) Get a Good and Prominent Speaker. Get a good and prominent speaker for the meeting and put his name in the announcement. Ask the superintendent of schools or a school principal to talk on school problems; the commissioner of health to talk on child health; the chief of police or a judge to talk on juvenile delinquency.

(c) Prepare Your Program With Great Care. Some member of your Organization Committee should act as chairman. The introductory remarks should be brief. They should state that the object of this meeting is to discuss the organization of a chapter of the American Parents Committee, which is working for the better conditions of children locally and nationally. In the introductory remarks it should be said that the objectives of the American Parents Committee and the new local chapter being organized will be explained after the main speaker. Do not permit your main speaker to talk for more than 20 minutes. Then, have the presiding officer or someone else on the organization committee explain that the national objective of the American Parents Committee is to work for federal legislation on behalf of children. Present the main point in the pamphlet on the objectives and importance of the American Parents Committee and tell of some of the legislation for which the APC is working. At this point, the chairman or someone else on the Organization Committee should describe the activities which are being considered for the local APC Chapter. Explain that the Board of Directors of the Chapter will definitely decide which activities will be undertaken. Ask the other members of the Organization Committee to present their views and ideas and invite discussion from the floor. Finally, the chairman should ask for nominations for an Organization and Planning Committee which will go into the matter further and report at the next meeting. Doubtless it could be arranged in advance that most of those who took the initiative in starting the chapter would be nominated to this Organization Committee.

(d) Get Out Annoucements for the Meeting. These can be mimeographed. The principal of your school may give copies to all the children in the school and ask them to bring them home. Also mail them to people you think should be especially interested. YMCA's, church groups, etc. will often help with such mailings.

(e) Advance Publicity. Give your newspaper editors an advance story. Perhaps you can have the meeting announced in advance over your local radio station. Get all the members of the organizational committee to ask their personal friends. Remind the newspapers of the meeting so they can send reporters or arrange to get a story from a member of the Organization Committee.

(f) Registration. Ask everyone who comes to the meeting to write his name and address on a 3" by 5" card as he enters. Have a number of people at the door with cards and pencils to get a complete registration of those present.

5. Hold a Meeting of the Organization and Planning Committee. At this meeting definite plans for the organization should be formulated. The slate of officers should be nominated as well as a Board of Directors. Make plans at this committee meeting for a second general meeting at which the Organization and Planning Committee can make their report and present their nominations for the Board of Directors.

6. Sample Constitution and By-laws. On the past few pages of this folder there is a sample constitution and by-laws. These are merely by way of suggestion. They, of course, may be changed as your local group sees fit.

7. Hold a Second Large Meeting. In planning for this meeting follow the same pattern as suggested for the first meeting. Secure one prominent speaker as a drawing card. Have the chairman of the Organization and Planning Committee present the Committee's report. After inviting discussion on the report ask for a resolution approving the recommendations (as amended, if changes have been suggested.) Then the nominations for officers and Board of Directors of the organization should be presented. Put this to vote.

8. Apply to the APC for an Official Charter for Your Chapter. Attached is an application blank that should be filled out and mailed in.

9. Dues. The Board of Directors should determine the annual dues that are to be paid by members. The ammount of the annual dues should depend on the wealth of the prospective members. While the dues should be high enough to provide the maximum annual revenue, nevertheless, they should not be high enough to keep out any considerable portion of those who wish to join. The important thing is to get a large membership. If dues are set as high as $2, $3, or $5 or more, offer the privilege of paying them in semi-annual, quarterly or monthly installments. Remember, if the annual dues are low, you can charge extra for social gatherings at which refreshments are served. 25¢ or 50¢ admissions are easy to collect for social gatherings.

Of the annual dues collected it is expected that 20 per cent will be sent in to the National Office of the APC, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N.Y. The National Office must, in order to exist, obtain substantial revenue from its local chapters and, of course, the National Office will render its local chapters considerable service in return for the 20 per cent of the chapter dues. A bulletin to keep your members informed on federal legislation will be sent regularly, as well as the various service bulletins of the APC.

10. Enroll as Many Fathers as Possible. Many parents organizations are made up largely of women. Fathers are parents, too. Encourage mothers and fathers to come together to your meetings. Get fathers to speak at meetings. Be sure to appoint them on committees.

11. Spread the Work. Don't let just a few people do all the work. Divide the responsibility among many members. If possible, have everyone on some committee. By placing responsibility on people you stimulate their interest.

12. Get as Much Publicity as Possible. Appoint a Publicity Committee. If possible, get people with newspaper, radio and advertising experience on the committee. Publicity in your local newspaper will not only help you get new members but will also stimulate the interest of those who have already enrolled. Publicity will help you attain your goals.

13. Send Out Frequent Mimeographed Bulletins. Your members must be kept informed if they are to be kept interested and working. The use of mimeograph machines can easily be obtained from schools, YMCA's, churches, union offices. Whenever you have any news, prepare a letter or bulletin for your members. If your chapter is associated with a church or union, it may be possible to work out ways to distribute your bulletin without having to pay postage.

14. Nothing Succeeds Like Success. Try to make your first objective one that you can accomplish with reasonable speed. If you can show results, your own members will become more interested, and you will find it easier to get new members.

15. If You Need Money. Ask for the bulletin on "Fund-Raising Suggestions" issued by the American Parents Committee, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York 17, N.Y. It contains specific suggestions and procedures.

16. No Local Chapter May Use the Name of the American Parents Committee Without Permission. All local activities must be conducted under the name of the local chapter. The name of the American Parents Committee may be used only in taking a position on federal legislation which has been authorized by the APC's Executive Committee. Violation of this rule, or any other action against the interests and program of the American Parents Committee, can result at any time in revocation of the charter of the chapter.

Working for Better Conditions for Children - Locally and Nationally

THE OBJECTIVES AND ORGANIZATION, ETC. OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE (APC)

Shocking conditions for the correction of which the APC is working: Millions of American children are being neglected! Two million U.S. school-age children do not attend school at all, either because there are no schools to go to or because of laxly enforced school laws. Thousands of schools are unbelievably overcrowded, lack proper equipment, and do not even have enough textbooks. 109,000 teachers are "sub-standard" holding only emergency teaching permits. Seventy-five percent of American children need dental care; 10,000,000 children have defects in vision; 1,000,000 have hearing defects; 500,000 have orthopedic and plastic defects. Child labor laws are not being enforced! Juvenile delinquency is on the increase! Such shocking conditions should not be permitted to continue!

The need for more equitable distribution of educational, child health and child welfare services: Federal laws and federal grants-in-aid are needed to help correct some of the great injustices being done to children particularly in the poorer states. Some states have twice as many children per 1000 population as other states have. The people of the richest state have five times as much income per child as people of the poorest state. Relatively, the largest number of children are in the poorer states where there isn't wealth enough that can be taxed to provide the necessary education, child health, and child welfare services that the large numbers of children in these states sorely need. The children of the poorer states will never have anywhere near equality of education, child health and child welfare opportunities unless the federal government helps.

National Objectives: The APC is working for better conditions for children both locally and nationally. The cause of children needs vigorous championing in Washington. Far too little is being done on their behalf. There is much that the federal government could do if legislators were given further evidence of the public's concern about the welfare of children. Every trade association, as well as labor organizations, the veterans, the farmers, and other groups have their effective lobbyists in Washington. Yet, surprising as it may seem, the spokesmen for children are relatively few and largely uncoordinated. Many of the shocking injustices to children -- the lack of adequate schools and of adequate child health and child welfare work, particularly in the poorer states -- cannot be remedied by local action. The APC is the only non-governmental national organization having a Washington office working exclusively in the field of federal legislation for children. To no other national organization in Washington is legislation concerning children a principal concern.

Special Committees: The following committees will all be organized and staffed as soon as funds permit. Several of the committees, notably Committee No. 3, are already actively functioning.

Committee (No. 1) on Federal Aid for Education Committee (No. 2) to Save the National School Lunch Program Committee (No. 3) on the National School Health Services Bill
Committee (No. 4) on Federal Aid for Children in Migrant Families
Committee (No. 5) on the International Children's Emergency Fund

Committee (No. 6) on More Adequate Appropriations for the U. S. Children's Bureau and on Increased Appropriations for Child Welfare, Crippled Children, and Maternity and Child Health under the Social Security Act.
Committee (No. 7) on the "Educational Orphans" Bill (schooling for children living on federally-owned property)
Committee (No. 8) on State Commissions to Study the Needs of Children

Advisory Committee: There will be an Advisory Committee of outstanding authorities on education, health, and welfare conditions affecting children and youth to advise what proposed federal legislation the APC will work for or against.

Washington Office: A small Washington office will be maintained as headquarters for several lobbyists who will serve the various special committees on federal legislation. From time to time an APC Bulletin on federal legislation will be issued and mailed to all members at large and to the chairmen of local Chapters and Affiliates. This will describe proposed legislation affecting children and youth, and will suggest ways and means that APC members, Chapters and Affiliates can work for the Enactment of this legislation.

Members-at-Large, Local APC Chapters and APC Affiliates: The APC hopes to build up a large national membership of mothers and fathers and others interested in the welfare of children. There will be Members-at-Large who will pay dues of a minimum of $3.00 or as much more as they wish to send. One means of enrolling them will be full-page advertising which Parents' Magazine is donating in each issue to the APC.

The Members-at-Large will be urged to organize local APC Chapters. A booklet will be furnished them on how to organize an APC Chapter. The Chapters are to send into the national office $2.00 per Chapter member, out of Chapter dues which will be determined locally.

Existing local groups, such as Women's Clubs and Parents Associations, with no other national organization connections, will be invited to become APC Affiliates to cooperate in nation-wide projects, while retaining their own local identity and independence.

Local Objectives: A pamphlet will be supplied to all local APC Chapters and Affiliates on suggested community activities. This pamphlet will give suggestions as to how to proceed with such local projects as:

Better pay for teachers
Better school lunch facilities
An after-school recreational program
Other needs of the local schools
A mental hygiene clinic for children
A marriage counselling service
A teenage canteen
A child health program for the community
Combatting juvenile delinquency

Public Education and Research: There will be the widest possible dissemination of the needs of the nation's children. As funds permit, independent studies will be made on special problems affecting children.

The APC National Council is composed of prominent, public-spirited citizens throughout the United States who are concerned with the welfare of children. They are kept informed by Bulletin as to what the APC proposes to do and is doing for children. While they endorse the fundamental purpose of the APC, they are not necessarily committed on all legislation affecting children on which the APC takes a stand. The members of the APC National Council are asked to advise on matters in their special field and to assist the APC locally whenever possible.

Executive Committee and New York City Office: The membership, public education, research, and financial work will be handled from the New York City office and the local APC Chapters and Affiliates will be serviced by this office. An Executive Committee will direct the activities of the organization.

Budget and Finance: It is hoped to raise $50,000 from membership dues and contributions. This will pay the rent and staff of the New York City and Washington offices. For the first few years contributions from individuals and foundations must be secured in order to build up the organization. Ultimately, membership dues should provide all the necessary funds. Contributions may, if desired, be designated for the use of any of the special legislative committees listed on pages 1 and 2.

A FUNDAMENTAL BELIEF OF OFFICERS AND NATIONAL COMMITTEE MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN PARENTS COMMITTEE

A requisite for participation in the APC is a belief in the extension of federal financial aid to the states to help equalize among them the educational, health and other welfare services for children and youth. The officers and National Committee members of the APC believe that while the federal government must not be permitted to interfere with the administration of the funds by the states (though the government should set up minimum standards) federal financial aid is essential, because many of the states, with relatively the most children, have not wealth enough that can be taxed to provide adequate educational, child health and child welfare services. If some states spent all their normal revenues for education alone they could not support their schools as well as the average school of the nation is supported. The federal government has for generations provided aid to the states to build roads, to maintain colleges, to fight forest fires. In addition it annually provides financial aids to the states for the care of crippled children, for building hospitals, for school lunches, for vocational education, and for many other purposes. Reliance on the poorer states to provide essential services for children simply hasn't worked and can't be expected to work because of their lack of taxable wealth. The shocking injustices to children caused by this situation (see description of some of these in the statement of APC Objectives) must not be permitted to continue in our democracy!

Get behind the SCHOOL HEALTH BILL!

Write your senators and congressmen urging them to vote for this bill which means health for your children

MAJOR-GENERAL LEWIS B. HERSHEY, Director of Selective Service, testified at the House of Representatives Committee Hearing: "The records of the Selective Service System indicate that there were approximately five million of our citizens who were physically or mentally or emotionally unable to render the service required of them during World War II. This was more than 30 percent of the total number of individuals examined. This record of the registrants examined during the life of the Selective Service System should give citizens of America cause for alarm. The experience of the Selective Service System convinced me that no American child should come to adult life with physical or mental defects or conditions which can be prevented or corrected at an early age."

SEVENTY-FIVE percent of America's 30,000,000 children between 5 and 17 years need dental care; 10,000,000 children have defective vision; 500,000 children have orthopedic and plastic defects; 1,000,000 children have hearing defects; 175,000 children have active tuberculosis. If the United States is to be a healthy and strong nation, such shocking conditions must not be permitted to continue.

While schools in some states are struggling to render adequate school health services, in a majority of the states insufficient money is appropriated for this vital purpose. To assist and stimulate the states to give every child a periodic school health examination and to do corrective work on the physical and mental defects found, the National School Health Services Bill has been introduced in Congress. In the Senate it is No. S 1290 and in the House it is HR 1980. In the Senate it was introduced by five Republican senators: Leverett Saltonstall, Henry Cabot Lodge (both of Massachusetts); Raymond E. Baldwin, (Connecticut); Irving M. Ives, (New York); H. Alexander Smith, (New Jersey) and J. W. Fulbright, Democrat from Arkansas. In the House it was introduced by Evan Howell, Republican from Illinois.

When Congress reconvenes early in January, the National School Health Services Bill has a good chance of passing if parents and school authorities throughout the nation will prove their interest by writing or, if possible, seeing their senators and congressmen and urging them to support it.

Just before Congress adjourned in July, a Committee of the House of Representatives held a public hearing on the National School Health Services Bill. All who testified at the hearing favored its enactment, several with a few relatively minor amendments. In addition to those pictured on the first page of this article, testimony for the Bill was presented to the Committee either in person or in writing by:

Dr. Vlado A. Getting, Massachusetts State Commissioner of Public Health, representing the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, of which he is secretary.

Dr. Reginald M. Atwater, Executive Secretary of American Public Health Association.

Maurice Collins, Assistant Administrator, Federal Security Agency, representing the Administrator, Watson B. Miller.

Mrs. Richard J. Bernhard, Vice-Chairman, National Child Labor Committee, and first Vice-Pres., Child Welfare League of America.

Russell Smith, Legislative Secretary, The National Farmers' Union.

E. Raymond Wilson, Friends' Committee on National Legislation.

Dr. George S. Stevenson, Medical Director of the National Committee on Mental Hygiene.

SENATOR LEVERETT SALTONSTALL, who sponsors the bill in the Senate: "This legislation will make a modest start toward establishing a national policy whereby our American children will not be permitted to reach maturity with physical or mental defects which can be diagnosed or corrected in the early stages. Such a policy designed to meet this undisputed health problem may be considered one of the soundest investments we can now make in our nation's future."

REPRESENTATIVE EVAN HOWELL, who introduced the bill in the House of Representatives: "If we want to have a healthy nation we must start with the children. Physically fit and productive adult citizens are the best investment a nation can have. That is the future dividend to be realized by investing now in the health of America's school children."

MISS KATHARINE F. LENROOT, Chief of the U. S. Children's Bureau: "States and communities need help with the development of more adequate standards, methods and procedures in conducting physical examinations of school children . . . and in assuring that treatment and adequate corrective measures are applied as they are needed. . . . I want to endorse this legislation. The need of school-age children for the health services it would provide is clear."

GEORGE J. HECHT, Publisher, PARENTS' MAGAZINE, and Chairman of the National Committee working for the enactment of this bill: "The U. S. Department of Agriculture annually receives many millions from Congress to guard the health of pigs and other farm animals; and yet Congress makes no appropriation to guard the health of school children. Are pigs and cattle more important to Uncle Sam than children? The future of the United States is dependent on healthy children. Uncle Sam must not keep his children waiting any longer!"

Walter J. Mason, Nat'l Legislative Representative, American Federation of Labor.

Mrs. Mary H. Oxholm, Chairman, Spokesmen for Children.

Miss Betty C. Wright, Director Field Service, American Hearing Society.

Francis J. Brown, Secretary, Committee on Relationships, American Council on Education.

W. E. Garnett, Rural Sociologist, Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station.

Dr. Joseph M. Babcock, Vice President, American Optometric Association.

Dr. C. E. A. Winslow, Professor Emeritus of Public Health, School of Medicine, Yale University.

The Bill will come up for active consideration when Congress reconvenes in January, 1948. The Bill was originally drafted by George J. Hecht, publisher of PARENTS' MAGAZINE, who heads the national committee organized to work for its enactment.

THE BILL'S stated purpose is "to make sure that no child shall come to adult life with physical or mental defects or conditions which can be prevented or corrected at an early age, it shall be the national policy to provide assistance to the several states to enable them to establish and develop school health services for the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of physical and mental defects and conditions of school children, including the correction of defects and conditions likely to interfere with the normal growth and development and educational progress of children."

This is the time of year when groups are coming together and planning their fall activities and programs. Parent Teacher Associations, Mothers' Clubs, Child Study, church and other groups should include in their plans active support of the National School Health Services Bill.

Our children spend a large part of their time in school, approximately five hours a day for approximately 175 days for at least twelve years. Any program which takes the child where he is—at school—and provides a well-planned system of health examinations and follow-up care is not only an efficient way of tackling the health problem, but it is also the democratic way since it benefits every child alike.

"But some schools already have school health services," a parent may comment. It is true that forty-three states report such work. However, the per pupil expenditure for health services for all children 5 to 17 years of age averages only 78 cents per year. Nineteen states report expenditures of less than 50 cents per pupil per year.

The proposed "National School Health Services Act of 1947" would establish a nation-wide program for the immediate expansion and strengthening of these health services for all school children. It calls for the appropriation of $12,000,000 annually to the U. S. Children's Bureau, most of which would be used for grants to the states, in the same manner as grants are now being made for maternal and child health services, services to crippled children and public child welfare services. States and localities which participate in this program would supplement the federal grants with state and local funds.

This bill is being supported by men and women without regard for political party. There is nothing political about it. It provides a carefully worked out program to give to all children everywhere every opportunity to be strong and healthy, or, if they are irrevocably handicapped in some way, to obtain the best medical care possible.

Surely this is a measure in which every parent in the country has a stake. Surely it is a measure which you as an individual and which any group to which you belong should support. You can do this by discussing this proposed legislation at your group meetings and passing resolutions approving the general purposes of the bill.

Next, write your two senators and the congressman from your district enclosing copies of any resolutions which your group may have passed, and urging them to support the bill which should be identified as Senate Bill No. 1290 and House of Representatives Bill No. 1980. Address your senators at the Senate Office Building, your representatives at the House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

The National School Health Services Bill has a good chance of being enacted by the next Congress if parents, teachers, P.T.A.s, Mothers' Clubs and all who have the welfare of America's children at heart will get behind it and work for it.

NOTE: A full report (75 pages) of the hearing on this bill (HR 1980) before the House of Representatives Committee can be obtained by writing the Clerk, House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Why and How you should work for the enactment of the proposed

NATIONAL SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES ACT of 1947

Every child should have an annual health examination—yet millions of them do not!

Rheumatic fever kills more children than any other disease; 175,000 children have tuberculosis!

75% of all children need dental care; ten million children have defects in vision!

THE SHOCKING FACTS!

MORE than one-third of all young men examined for military service during the past war were found to be physically or mentally unfit! . . . Their physical and mental defects should have been discovered and corrected (when they could have been) in their early school years! . . . Yet, only an average of 78c per child per year is being spent on school health examinations and for the follow-up and treatment of the defects found. . . . The only practical solution of this shocking situation is the passage of this bill which is now before the current session of Congress.

. . . See following pages for further data.

Summary of Proposed
NATIONAL SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES ACT OF 1947

The bill was introduced by Representative Evan Howell (R., 21st, Ill.) and has been assigned No. H. R. 1980 in the House of Representatives. The identical bill will shortly be introduced in the Senate. If you wish the actual text of the bill, write to our Committee or to the Superintendent of the Document Room, House of Representatives, Washington 25, D.C.

THE Federal Security Administrator, through the U. S. Children's Bureau, as authorized by title V of the Social Security Act, now makes grants to the States for the purpose of extending and improving (1) maternal and child health services, (2) services for crippled children, and (3) child welfare services. This proposed bill would establish a new grant-in-aid program for (4) School health services. School health services consist, in the main, of periodic school health examinations to discover physical and mental defects, and preventive and corrective services rendered by physicians, dentists, nurses and mental hygiene specialists.

Purpose: The basic purpose of this bill is best expressed by its section 2 which consists of a proposed declaration of policy by the Congress.

> "The Congress hereby declares that in order that no American child shall come to adult life with physical or mental defects or conditions which can be prevented or corrected at an early age, it shall be the national policy to provide assistance to the several States to enable them to establish and develop school health services for the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of physical and mental defects and conditions of school children, with special reference to the correction of defects and conditions likely to interfere with the normal growth and development and educational progress of children. Such school health services shall utilize and develop, insofar as feasible, the qualified public health, medical, dental and hospital facilities already established in each community."

In respect to treatment of physical and mental defects found, the bill specifies that this shall be provided especially in rural areas and areas suffering from severe economic distress. The bill further specifies that funds may also be used for the training and supervision of school personnel in utilizing the findings of health examinations, but excludes health instruction other than that given as part of examination, diagnosis or corrective procedures.

States Will Determine Program: This bill would apply to the problem of establishing and strengthening school health services, the same general pattern of Federal-State cooperation that has worked so successfully in improving maternal and child health services, services for crippled children, and public child welfare services. Under this bill, the States rather than the Federal Government would determine how they want to and can provide school health services. On the State level, the program would be administered as provided by State law either by the State health agency or the State education agency, or jointly by these two State agencies, with the advice of a State Advisory Committee consisting of representatives of public and private agencies concerned with health, education, and child welfare, and the public at large. Each State would determine how the health and education authorities will cooperate in making available all health services to school children provided for in the bill. Each State would draw up its own plan, according to its own needs.

Financing: For the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1947, $12,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated. For the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1948, $18,000,000 would be appropriated, and for each succeeding fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act.

(1) Half of the sum made available for allotment to the States each year would be apportioned among the States as follows: $20,000 to each State and the balance on the basis of the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17 inclusive. This amount would be matched dollar for dollar.

(2) Half of the sum made available for allotment to the State each year would be apportioned according to the financial need of each State for assistance in carrying out its State Plan after consideration of the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17, inclusive. These funds would not be matched.

(3) Of the sum appropriated each year, $2,000,000 or ten percent of the sum appropriated, whichever is greater, would be available to enable the Children's Bureau to administer and to provide demonstrations, to pay salaries and expenses of personnel detailed at the request of State agencies to assist them in carrying out this program, and for the training of personnel for State and local school health services, through grants to accredited schools of public health or other professional institutions.

Approval of State Plans: The Chief of the Children's Bureau is required to approve any State plan for expenditure of these funds which meets the following conditions: (1) Financial participation by the State. (2) Administration or supervision of the plan by either the State health agency or the State education agency, or jointly by these two State agencies. (3) The plan must be concurred in by both the State health and the State education agencies. (4) Such methods of administration as are necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including maintenance of personnel standards and selection on a merit basis. (5) Provision for necessary reports and provision for carrying out the stated purposes of the Act. (6) Provision for cooperation with medical, dental, health, nursing, education, and welfare groups and organizations in the State, and where necessary for working agreements with State or local public agencies having authority under State law for the care

CHILDREN CAN'T WAIT!

FOR twenty years health and school authorities have been talking about such a program, but no bill was passed, largely because of differences of opinion about administrative set-up. We believe that this bill is as completely satisfactory as is possible to all the interests concerned—the Republican and Democratic parties; the various education, medical, dental, mental hygiene and child welfare organizations, capital, labor, farmers, veterans, Catholics, minority groups, etc.—and that it has a good chance of passing during the present session of Congress. The important thing now is to get such a Federal grants-in-aid program started as promptly as possible. The children can't wait! Their health, because of the lack of adequate funds, has been neglected far too long! We hope that you will give this bill your active support.

Why This Bill Urgently Needs To Be Passed

4 out of 10 young Americans were rejected for Military Service in World War II because of physical, mental and other defects

A SHOCKINGLY large number of our children come to adult life with physical and mental diseases and defects which could have been prevented or corrected. It is a heart-breaking fact that year after year thousands of children die needlessly. Year after year, thousands of children are sick or crippled needlessly.

More than a third of the young men examined for our armed forces were rejected because of physical or mental defects—yet hundreds of thousands of these had defects that could easily have been remedied if they had been treated in time.

Rheumatic fever kills more children between the ages of 5 and 15 than any other single disease—yet most communities are entirely without an organized program for the care of children with this dreaded disease.

At least 75 percent of American school children need dental care, that is essential to their general health—yet we also know that less than 25 percent of them receive dental service.

There are 10,000,000 children with defects in vision, including 15,000 totally blind and 50,000 with only partial vision—and yet services which could prevent such blindness do not reach these children.

To this sad list could be added the 175,000 children with active tuberculosis, 1,000,000 with hearing defects, 500,000 with orthopedic and plastic defects, thousands with cerebral palsy, thousands with epilepsy, and many, many others.

About one child in every 20 born each year will spend some time in a mental hospital—yet there are 25 states without a single child guidance clinic, and thousands of communities have no program for the early detection and treatment of mental disorders in children.

These are not mere statistics. They are children. They add up to the story of a great American tragedy—of children who are dying, yet whose deaths could be prevented, of children doomed to a life of sickness or deformity who could be cured or helped.

The time is long overdue for action. Let us not indulge in further research and study to add statistic upon statistic and to fix the blame for these evil conditions. Instead, let us now resolve to find a practical way to bring all the "know-how" of modern medical and health services to our children's aid and without further delay. Let us tackle this problem with all the ingenuity and common sense for which America is famous. We cannot do less with good conscience.

The time has come when the federal government, state governments and local communities must join in a great partnership to solve this problem of health—a problem which parents, rich or poor, cannot solve alone. No child should be left out. We now have such a partnership for the construction of highways and harbors, flood control, and the provision of social security and other matters of nation-wide importance. Is the health of our children less important?

(8) Provision that the health services described in the State Plan shall be available to children without regard to race, color, creed or nationality, on a basis that is equitable in view of need for services.

The Chief of the Children's Bureau, acting with the advice of a School Health Services Board composed of himself as Chairman, the Commissioner of Education, and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified above, except that if a State Plan, or any portion thereof, is to be administered by a State education agency it shall not be approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau unless the Plan, or some portion of it, shall have been approved by the Commissioner of Education.

HOW TO HELP PASS THIS LEGISLATION

ORGANIZATIONS: It will be most helpful of all for your organizations to give their official approval of proposed legislation. When this is done, notification of this official approval should be sent to the members of the House of Representatives who represent your city or county and to both your senators. News releases stating your approval of the legislation should be sent to your local newspapers. An organization is not considered a lobby if it votes official approval of proposed legislation, nor does such action make it impossible for such an organization to deduce gifts to it on income tax returns—unless legislative action is the principal activity of the organization.

Organizations that do not take official positions on proposed legislation can at least have a speaker at a meeting to explain and discuss the proposed legislation. This speaker should urge those who are interested in its passage to write to their representatives in the House and to their senators.

Letters to the editors of local news papers and radio speeches on the proposed legislation are most helpful.

INDIVIDUALS: Write to your representatives in the House and to both the senators from your state and get your friends to do so. Do not write long letters but tell briefly what bill you support and give one good reason why you think it should be passed. Write letters to your local newspapers about this, or better yet, go to see the editor and try to get him to write an editorial on the subject. Get in touch with as many mothers clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, church, civic and labor union groups as possible and urge them to discuss the proposed legislation, to inform their members about it and to take action.

HOW TO ADDRESS YOUR SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES: Senators should be addressed at the Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. Representatives should be addressed at the House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. If you do not know the names of your senators and representatives, ask the town clerk, your chamber of commerce or any local political organization.

How Much Money Will Each State Get if the National School Health Services Act Is Enacted

THE Act provides for appropriation of $12,000,000 the first year, $18,000,000 the second year, and as much thereafter as Congress shall feel necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act. Each State will receive the following:

(1) The amount listed in the tabulation below, which must be matched dollar for dollar by State funds. The Act provides that each State should receive $20,000 and the balance on the basis of the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17 inclusive.

(2) A discretionary allotment according to need. During the first year there will be $5,000,000, and in the second year, $8,000,000, for apportionment among the States according to need, which moneys need not be matched.

(3) Any money allotted to the State out of the $2,000,000 available to the U. S. Children's Bureau for the training of personnel for school health services.

(4) Any money allotted by the U. S. Children's Bureau for demonstrations to be made within the State.

STATE ALLOCATIONS REQUIRING MATCHING STATE FUNDS

(1) Minimum federal funds your State will receive through matching--see below. Additional moneys will be allocated your State without matching as explained in (2) (3) and (4) above.

Red Cross Urged to Lead Democratic Trend in Welfare

Cabinet Post Proposed, Also National Council Including All Agencies

This is the text of a much-publicized address delivered Thursday before the regional conference of the American Red Cross in New York.

By Agnes E. Meyer

WHY am I here today? Because I made in a recent address to the trustees of voluntary welfare groups some sharp criticisms of the Red Cross. Some of your own liberal leaders now have given me the great opportunity and serious responsibility of amplifying those statements directly to you. Such an invitation is a mark of confidence which moves me profoundly. Surely democracy is safe when there are people left in our country who respond to criticism with such tolerance. I am, to be sure, in the position of a guest who has been invited to dinner to criticize the hostess. But your hospitality cannot absolve me from duty toward my country—and toward you—of speaking the truth as I see it. Your invitation obligates me to describe some of the dangers that beset not only the Red Cross but all voluntary welfare agencies in this period of social revolution.

For the Red Cross finds itself in exactly the same dilemma as many another American institution, not excepting the churches. A part of your leadership sees the urgent need for a revaluation of values in the light of social conditions and evolving contemporary needs. But another element clings with desperation to the worship of entrenched power and of certain authoritarian ideas that are now dead as a door nail. Your situation is more difficult than that of the other private welfare organizations because of your numbers, your wealth and, therefore, of the power involved.

There are other obstacles which make it difficult for the Red Cross to find its way out of this dilemma. The Red Cross has a head and a body but these two parts have no organizations which lately have been fed to the press. These relations are based upon an honorable and businesslike agreement which does credit both to the Red Cross and to the labor organizations involved. Yet for devious purposes this contractual relationship has been painted as a stain on the

to the press and to every one of 3750 chapters.

The plan has worked remarkably well. Every group involved has expressed its satisfaction publicly, including the National War Fund and the Red Cross. It represents a great step forward in the relations of the Red Cross with working people. This agreement is no more a disgrace to Norman Davis, your former director, or to Mr. O'Connor, the present one, than it is to Winthrop Aldrich, head of the War Fund. It is, indeed, a tribute to their intelligence, business ability and good sense. It is also a magnificent tribute to the statesmanlike vision and executive skill of the two labor groups.

Devious Methods

But do not blame the press for the way this highly creditable arrangement was used to frighten Red Cross members and vilify union leadership. That story was given to the press in that biased light by your respectable, supposedly honorable but very bitter and very obtuse old fuddy-duddy leaders who resent the fact that labor is gaining a foothold in the management of the Red Cross. They shudder at the thought that their holy of holies—the Central Committee—may be polluted by representation from labor, a move the Red Cross should have made long ago, considering it is so dependent on labor contributions and is becoming more so every year. These reactionaries have decided to force Mr. O'Connor out of the directorship on the theory that he is too friendly to labor. If you don't believe me, let me quote from the last article for which this type of Red Cross leader is responsible. "Perhaps Mr. O'Connor will be reappointed and the Labor-Red Cross agreement renewed. But the true interests of the Red Cross will not be served by either. Mr. O'Connor's reappointment, it is contended, will further demoralize the organization. (Contended by whom you members should ask yourselves.) Renewal of the agreement will not end the Red Cross opposition." There you have the die-hard psy-ters to fight a total war on the home front as if it were your own private war. But let me not give the impression that only you made this mistake. The suffering of war workers' families possibly was greater than those of many military men. Nobody in or out of the Government had the vision to foresee that a total war demands an all-inclusive democratic mobilization of our whole welfare structure. Even before the atomic bomb shocked us into realization that a new era has dawned, it became evident that the homeland, too, is a battlefield in modern warfare. We must begin at once a more democratic, better organized, more inclusive approach to our immense social problems, not only to handle our social reconversion successfully. If ever there should be another war, which Heaven forbid, we must not make the needs of our soldiers, it would weaken the logic and appeal of your separate drive for funds. There, my friends, is the source of your obsession that the Red Cross must have a monopoly of service to our military forces. Your charter, which is not mandatory but only permissive, is a mere pretext in such conflicts. Bureaucratic power rather than service to mankind are the prime objectives of your reactionary element. This dire influence is indeed the crux of all your difficulties with the public. Therefore, it seems obvious to me that the country will never get whole-hearted cooperation from the Red Cross, in peace or war, until its separate, expensive, drum-beating financial campaign has been eliminated and combined with the National War Fund. For the need to continue the War Fund I shall later make a plea. You-

ed with such inefficiency and scorn at one of your largest recruiting centers that they complained to Washington headquarters. To investigators the local chapter replied that the woman responsible for this behavior could not be fired because she was one of the largest contributors to the Red Cross. Again money was more important than service.

Now you have thousands upon thousands of staunch members who resent this kind of thing. These are the women to whom I am trying to bring courage and support with this frank analysis of the conflict going on not only among your leaders but in your ranks. Again and again your forward looking, intelligent members, especially younger ones, would ask me in community conferences: "But what can we do, Mrs. Meyer, to make our Red Cross leaders see their mistakes? They cause it is a model of social imagination and democratic procedure. Mr. Norton sees, for example, that professional people must conduct all technical programs. The blood bank, for example, will be conducted by State and local public health officials, while the Red Cross confines itself to the no less important task of publicizing the program. He sums up the Detroit philosophy of action as follows: "The Red Cross should be promoters, salesmen and publicists to get social programs going, to spur public officials into speedier action on a local level, then leave the program that emerges to trained and technical leadership."

Mr. Norton here defines what should be the role of the Red Cross and all other private agencies in the postwar world and sums up the central thought that I wish to leave with you. Private agencies should pioneer activities. When these are generally accepted and established, they must step aside and leave the administration to public agencies while they pioneer in new directions.

To accept that clear-cut philosophy and to achieve a genuinely democratic organization, the Red Cross must finally make up its mind whether it is, in fact, a "public" or a "private" agency. A little straight thinking on this basic problem of purpose and philosophy is essential now that your war jobs are evaporating and the Red Cross must decide what contribution it proposes to make to the "home service community job. If you don't face this decision, your reactionaries will continue to make trouble by playing both sides of the fence as their own advantage dictates.

Survey Worth Study

Fortunately your constructive national leaders had the social vision to anticipate the need for guidance on this subject. This group recently inspired a survey and report on the medical and health program of the Red Cross which will be of the greatest benefit to the Nation's health if it is other national health and welfare organizations. This plan calls for the unification of all national organizations including veteran groups, Red Cross, welfare organizations of labor groups, National Community Chests and Councils, the YW and YMCA, national health organizations—in short, all national groups concerned with the welfare of the veteran—in a Council of National Welfare Agencies.

At present only two States have an efficient, strongly organized movement that encourages local community service centers where the veteran, warworker or any other citizen can get help and guidance in any and all problems. This is essential if the veteran is not to get the run-around.

Yet many of these veterans' or community centers now are worse than useless because they look pretty on charts but do not succeed in bringing to the veteran all the services which the community, the State and Federal Governments.

Many Drives Wasteful

If the national organizations should pool their efforts through a National Council, expert advice in the setting up of veterans' centers and financial aid wherever needed by States and localities could rapidly be extended to all parts of the country. It would pool the immense resources and trained staffs these groups can put at the disposal of the States and communities. It would encourage this trend at the State and local level and hasten the day when the veteran can feel the whole country has been mobilized to receive him in a worthy fashion.

Such a Council of National Welfare Agencies could cooperate quickly on a Federal level with the new Cabinet officer and we would have on every governmental level harmonious inter-action between public and private community services. The War Fund should be continued to raise through one annual drive the separate budgets of the Council of National Welfare

Your invitation obligates me to describe some of the dangers that beset not only the Red Cross but all voluntary welfare agencies in this period of social revolution.

. . . challenges reactionaries

For the Red Cross finds itself in exactly the same dilemma as many another American institution, not excepting the churches. A part of your leadership sees the urgent need for a revaluation of values in the light of social conditions and evolving contemporary needs. But another element clings with desperation to the worship of entrenched power and of certain authoritarian ideas that are now dead as a door nail. Your situation is more difficult than that of the other private welfare organizations because of your numbers, your wealth and, therefore, of the power involved.

There are other obstacles which make it difficult for the Red Cross to find its way out of this dilemma. The Red Cross has a head and a body but these two parts have no life-giving relationship. The Central Committee or mind of your organization functions in an exalted isolation which the body—local chapters and contributors—has no means of enriching with a vigorous blood-stream of opinion. On the other hand, your bodily functions cannot be guided by the head through uniform standard setting and speedy assistance, whether of a financial, advisory or other nature. Often the chapters in the same State or even the same city do not know what the others are doing or thinking.

Need State Setup

Instead of a few area boards, what the Red Cross needs is a statewide federation of chapters under an elected State council, the chairman of the State council to have a voice in major proposals of your central committee. Without a State agency, you can never cooperate effectively with a peacetime welfare program, since all welfare work in our country is organized on a State and community basis. But I bring up this point now because my appeal is addressed to the rank and file membership. To become articulate in a fluid moment such as this when your group, like any other, is torn between progress and reaction, the membership, the great body of people who contribute their funds and services, must become the deciding factor, must achieve machinery by which it can reject at a moment of crisis its reactionary leaders and support those whose policies seem in harmony with the Nation's welfare.

No American who has the future of our country at heart can be indifferent to the choice you make between these contending forces. The Red Cross has the greatest potentialities for good of any single welfare organization in the country if only because of its size, wealth and prestige. But it also has possibilities for evil. Unless you see to it that your progressive leadership is upheld, the Red Cross can easily become a menace to the progress of democratic ideas and their effective implementation.

Let me begin by giving you an illustration of undemocratic leadership by your small but powerful group of reactionaries who strive to keep the reins of control in their hands. I refer to the distorted version of the relationship between the Red Cross and our two major labor organizations which lately have been fed to the press. These relations are based upon an honorable and businesslike agreement which does credit both to the Red Cross and to the labor organizations involved. Yet for devious purposes this contractual relationship has been painted as a stain on the otherwise untarnished reputation of the Red Cross and an unpatriotic act on the part of labor unions.

Let me outline the history of that agreement as given to me by members of your Central Committee and by the War Relief Committee of the labor unions.

Red Cross and Labor

Early in 1942, AFL and CIO proved they could act together when the welfare of the country is involved by making an agreement with the Community War Chests and councils to collect at least one hour's pay each month from every union member. These labor leaders were among the first to recognize that the total efforts of the American people could be mobilized only if a unified approach were substituted for innumerable separate campaigns. They also wished to protect their members from the confusion of multiple appeals. The plan was worked out on a community basis with careful supervision. When the National War Fund was organized in January, 1943, the arrangement was continued and extended. As the War Fund had its own administrative budget covering campaign and promotional expenses, it preferred to meet the administrative budgets of the two labor committees and receive in return their total collection.

Then came the eternal problem of the separate Red Cross drive. The unions solved it by allocating four months of their annual intake to the Red Cross and eight to the War Fund. Their combined budgets for the year beginning May 1, 1945, are $698,000, of which one-third is provided by the American Red Cross and two-thirds by the National War Fund.

In return for its $232,000, the Red Cross received from CIO and AFL 30 million dollars last year, or at an overhead of less than 1 per cent. If the Red Cross received all of its contributions at so small a cost, we would consider it very efficient. Yet your reactionaries talk as if the rest of the Red Cross funds just drop into its lap like manna from heaven. Their loud cries that something has been put over on the dear Red Cross is hypocritical hokum. Your Central Committee voted for the contract with a majority of 16 to 2. It made no secret of the arrangement. Copies of the agreement were given [illegible] expressed its satisfaction publicly, including the National War Fund and the Red Cross. It represents a great step forward in the relations of the Red Cross with working people. This agreement is no more a disgrace to Norman Davis, your former director, or to Mr. O'Connor, the present one, than it is to Winthrop Aldrich, head of the War Fund. It is, indeed, a tribute to their intelligence, business ability and good sense. It is also a magnificent tribute to the statesmanlike vision and executive skill of the two labor groups.

Devious Methods

But do not blame the press for the way this highly creditable arrangement was used to frighten Red Cross members and vilify union leadership. That story was given to the press in that biased light by your respectable, supposedly honorable but very bitter and very obtuse old fuddy-duddy leaders who resent the fact that labor is gaining a foothold in the management of the Red Cross. They shudder at the thought that their holy of holies—the Central Committee—may be polluted by representation from labor, a move the Red Cross should have made long ago, considering it is so dependent on labor contributions and is becoming more so every year. These reactionaries have decided to force Mr. O'Connor out of the directorship on the theory that he is too friendly to labor. If you don't believe me, let me quote from the last article for which this type of Red Cross leader is responsible. "Perhaps Mr. O'Connor will be reappointed and the Labor-Red Cross agreement renewed. But the true interests of the Red Cross will not be served by either. Mr. O'Connor's reappointment, it is contended, will further demoralize the organization. (Contended by whom you members should ask yourselves.) Renewal of the agreement will not end the Red Cross opposition." There you have the die-hard psychology of leaders who would rather wreck the Red Cross than see it become democratic. Now I do not know Mr. O'Connor personally. It is of no interest to me whether he is reappointed director or not. But, judging by his enemies, he must be a person of some merit.

Could Provide Leadership

Now why should the rest of us care—why should I care—whether the Red Cross remains under the domination of a small, powerful reactionary group? Because what you do with the people's money under your control, with the more than 70 million dollars which, I am told, is left over from your war chest, can make or mar a trend now well under way in our country for the integration and cooperation of education, health and welfare on the local, State and Federal level. It has become obvious that far more effective organization and administration of all welfare services are immediately required to meet postwar needs of the American family, of returning veterans and dislocated warworkers.

In such a program the Red Cross can play a leading part. But it will not lead unless it abandons the destructive influence of its standpat elements and rejuvenates its antiquated organization to match already existing State welfare machinery. Above all, it must cooperate unselfishly and wholeheartedly with the Nation-wide effort to strengthen public and private local community welfare agencies.

To cooperate humbly, sincerely and successfully in this national endeavor, you first will have to recapture what you so proudly define as "the Red Cross spirit." The public respects what it knew as "the Red Cross spirit." But your reactionary leaders have perverted this spirit until it has achieved a genius for making enemies and has made the Red Cross the object of repressed fears, resentment and even hatred. The fact that most Americans give money to the Red Cross is sometimes interpreted as proof that everybody loves you. That is fallacious. People have a long-standing reverence for the Red Cross, gained in simpler, happier days, which your well-publicized campaign methods always have exploited successfully.

Red Cross traditions were so powerful that they led many chapters to fight a total war on the home front as if it were your own private war. But let me not give the impression that only you made this mistake. The suffering of war workers' families possibly was greater than those of many military men. Nobody in or out of the Government had the vision to foresee that a total war demands an all-inclusive democratic mobilization of our whole welfare structure. Even before the atomic bomb shocked us into realization that a new era has dawned, it became evident that the homeland, too, is a battlefield in modern warfare. We must begin at once a more democratic, better organized, more inclusive approach to our immense social problems, not only to handle our social reconversion successfully. If ever there should be another war, which Heaven forbid, we must not make the same mistakes we did this time. An all-inclusive social strategy is as necessary as military strategy for the protection and safety of the home front.

STATE ORGANIZATION WOULD AID RED CROSS EFFICIENCY IN DISASTERS LIKE THIS
. . . directors many times must travel hundreds of miles to aid people like these Memphis flood victims

If I now remind you of some of the strategic and psychological errors of the Red Cross, I do it only because they illustrate to an extreme degree a monopolistic, competitive and paternalistic attitude toward welfare problems. All voluntary organizations are more or less afflicted with these attitudes. All must strive to overcome them.

Army Relief Gobbled Up

Take, for example, the hard-hearted way in which your leadership frustrated efforts of the Army Emergency Relief to help their own families at a time of dire need. The Army first made an agreement in 1942 that the Red Cross should contribute a million and a half dollars to found Army Emergency Relief. The Army had to agree not to solicit funds but Irving Berlin's show and various athletic contests brought in gifts of 17 million dollars. Then your leaders produced your famous charter to prove that only the Red Cross could administer home relief to the armed forces and induced Army authorities to issue a directive in 1944 not to consider the Army Emergency Relief as a separate agency. The plea of your leaders was duplication of functions, although any intelligent person knew that no one organization could handle so gigantic a task.

Even had you made a huge success of home service, there would be no excuse for this arbitrary behavior.

"What right had the Red Cross to make a monopoly of mercy?" said one general's wife to me. "To be sure, there was amateurish incompetence among our people to which the Red Cross could point. But how competent was the Red Cross? Why and through what power," she demanded, "could the Red Cross forbid the Army to dispense as it liked money which it had received from a grateful public?"

I can tell you why Army Emergency Relief was assimilated by the Red Cross and its activities drastically curtailed. This unwise decision was defended by one of your most arbitrary old leaders as necessary because, if any other agency were known to be serving the needs of our soldiers, it would weaken the logic and appeal of your separate drive for funds. There, my friends, is the source of your obsession that the Red Cross must have a monopoly of service to our military forces. Your charter, which is not mandatory but only permissive, is a mere pretext in such conflicts. Bureaucratic power rather than service to mankind are the prime objectives of your reactionary element. This dire influence is indeed the crux of all your difficulties with the public. Therefore, it seems obvious to me that the country will never get whole-hearted cooperation from the Red Cross, in peace or war, until its separate, expensive, drum-beating financial campaign has been eliminated and combined with the National War Fund. For the need to continue the War Fund I shall later make a plea. Your isolation, I feel sure, cannot be overcome until this supreme symbol of your isolation, your separate financial campaign, is sacrificed to the common good.

'Nobody Would Dare'

The hot dispute between the Red Cross and Army Emergency Relief was carried above generals, who dared not commit themselves, to the War Department. It decided in favor of the Red Cross because the Red Cross dictates to Army leaders instead of cooperating with them, because everyone from the highest to the lowest in the land must bow to the prestige and to the financial and political power of the Red Cross. In one community the Red Cross marched into the largest church parish house, tossed an old established religious and social program out of the window and told the clergyman calmly: "We'll use this room for the blood bank, that one for home service, this for bandage rolling, etc." When I asked this clergyman why he didn't toss the Red Cross out of the window, he looked aghast and stuttered, "Why, I wouldn't dare. Nobody can oppose the Red Cross."

The Red Cross can scarcely be blamed for regarding itself as sacred because it is never publicly criticized. But the mere fact that all criticism is repressed partly through fear of hurting your campaign appeal and partly through fear of your power, makes it all the more violent. Now isn't it fair to say that, when people high and low are afraid—are literally terrorized—by a voluntary benevolent society, something must be radically wrong at the very heart of its being?

It is but natural that the authoritarian, fear-inspiring attitude of your traditional old leadership is imitated and reflected by many local female gauleiters who rule the roost with a rod of iron, especially in smaller cities and towns. To me the most tragic thing about the Red Cross is the undemocratic influence upon many members which filters down from above. In too many of your offices people who want to ask questions or volunteer services are met not only with indifference but rudeness. When the Army sent out a hurried call for more trained nurses after the Normandy landing, the professional women who volunteered, often at great personal sacrifice, were treated with such inefficiency and scorn at one of your largest recruiting centers that they complained to Washington headquarters. To investigators the local chapter replied that the woman responsible for this behavior could not be fired because she was one of the largest contributors to the Red Cross. Again money was more important than service.

Now you have thousands upon thousands of staunch members who resent this kind of thing. These are the women to whom I am trying to bring courage and support with this frank analysis of the conflict going on not only among your leaders but in your ranks. Again and again your forward looking, intelligent members, especially younger ones, would ask me in community conferences: "But what can we do, Mrs. Meyer, to make our Red Cross leaders see their mistakes? They slap us down if we criticize and tell us firmly that we aren't 'good Red Crossers'."

We—Or Nobody

In many a community these tyrants will kill an idea no matter how valuable, if the Red Cross cannot carry it out and get credit for it. Their motto is: "Either we do it or nobody does it." This dog-in-the-manger psychology, this mania for "credit" in all but your truly modern-minded chapters, is again the result of pressure from above, from publicity and finance committees whose business it is to prove that the annual high pressure drive for funds is justified by results.

Proof of this statement lies in the fact that a wholly different, genuinely democratic psychology exists in your liberal national leaders and in local Red Cross chapters that weld their programs harmoniously with the local welfare program. For example, the five New York City chapters have combined to form a cooperative health council. San Francisco and St. Louis also have well integrated community programs. But I should particularly like to quote the wise advice of William J. Norton, chairman of your Detroit board of directors, who in my limited experience is doing one of the most outstanding local Red Cross jobs in the country. "The Red Cross is just one of many voluntary agencies and must not look upon itself as a sacred cow," he said. "The paternalistic outlook in voluntary welfare work is outmoded and in its place must come a more democratic spirit. When you take people's money, they have rights. They are all entitled to know their money is well spent and therefore they must have representation on our boards.

Public or Private?

"In Detroit," he continued, "we are a smoothly functioning part of the general community picture and do not act as if we had a halo around our heads. We believe the usual competition, jealousy and desire for credit between agencies have to be overcome by working out channels through which they can act together and yet maintain their own functions to full capacity."

I wish I had time to describe in detail the extensive postwar program of the Detroit chapter bebank, for example, will be conducted by State and local public health officials, while the Red Cross confines itself to the no less important task of publicizing the program. He sums up the Detroit philosophy of action as follows: "The Red Cross should be promoters, salesmen and publicists to get social programs going, to spur public officials into speedier action on a local level, then leave the program that emerges to trained and technical leadership."

Mr. Norton here defines what should be the role of the Red Cross and all other private agencies in the postwar world and sums up the central thought that I wish to leave with you. Private agencies should pioneer activities. When these are generally accepted and established, they must step aside and leave the administration to public agencies while they pioneer in new directions.

To accept that clear-cut philosophy and to achieve a genuinely democratic organization, the Red Cross must finally make up its mind whether it is, in fact, a "public" or a "private" agency. A little straight thinking on this basic problem of purpose and philosophy is essential now that your war jobs are evaporating and the Red Cross must decide what contribution it proposes to make to the "home service community job. If you don't face this decision, your reactionaries will continue to make trouble by playing both sides of the fence as their own advantage dictates.

Survey Worth Study

Fortunately your constructive national leaders had the social vision to anticipate the need for guidance on this subject. This group recently inspired a survey and report on the medical and health program of the Red Cross which will be of the greatest benefit to the Nation's health if it is carried out. This report is worthy of the closest study by every Red Cross volunteer. Although confined to medical problems, it is an excellent guide to step-by-step procedures that the Red Cross should follow in its endeavor to cooperate with local agencies. There you also will find an explanation of reasons why it is essential for the Red Cross to have State headquarters to work effectively. This State organization would be advantageous to the Red Cross if only for greater efficiency in times of disaster. The arrival of your area directors at points of disaster often has been delayed because they may reside hundreds of miles away. With a well integrated State program the chances are that you could cover the scenes of sudden flood or conflagration with greater promptness, effectiveness and expeditious community collaboration.

Your Red Cross medical report in its concepts of community reorganization fits in perfectly with the present general trend in Nation-wide social planning. To furnish a guide for such efforts, some 27 experts in government, education, health and welfare have drawn up a report entitled "The Road to Community Reorganization," which was presented to the President, Congress and the country last month This report suggests community service centers as a joint clearing house of all local welfare endeavor. To hasten local efficiency, it points out methods by which State governments can be improved.

National Council Needed

Because community services are now more than ever the concern of all people, because they are needed by all the people and because they never will assume their proper place in national life unless and until effective national leadership is provided, the report proposes that there be established in the Federal Government a Cabinet post, to include the functions of education, health, welfare and social insurance, designed to provide appropriate coordination and leadership of the basic community services that are essential to the well-being of the Nation.

But it takes time to pass legislation for this Cabinet post and as an immediate step to accelerate the happy return of the veteran to civil life, I wish to urge upon your attention a plan that has the approval not only of some of your own leaders but of those at the head of many zations of labor groups, National Community Chests and Councils, the YW and YMCA, national health organizations—in short, all national groups concerned with the welfare of the veteran—in a Council of National Welfare Agencies.

At present only two States have an efficient, strongly organized movement that encourages local community service centers where the veteran, warworker or any other citizen can get help and guidance in any and all problems. This is essential if the veteran is not to get the run-around.

Yet many of these veterans' or community centers now are worse than useless because they look pretty on charts but do not succeed in bringing to the veteran all the services which the community, the State and Federal Governments.

Many Drives Wasteful

If the national organizations should pool their efforts through a National Council, expert advice in the setting up of veterans' centers and financial aid wherever needed by States and localities could rapidly be extended to all parts of the country. It would pool the immense resources and trained staffs these groups can put at the disposal of the States and communities. It would encourage this trend at the State and local level and hasten the day when the veteran can feel the whole country has been mobilized to receive him in a worthy fashion.

Such a Council of National Welfare Agencies could cooperate quickly on a Federal level with the new Cabinet officer and we would have on every governmental level harmonious inter-action between public and private community services. The War Fund should be continued to raise through one annual drive the separate budgets of the Council of National Welfare Agencies, including that of the Red Cross. The combined drive could raise as much if not more money than your separate drive and at the same time increase your prestige through your willingness to cooperate democratically.

Just as we continued the Community Chest after the last war, so also we should not let the National War Fund go out of business. Many separate national drives are wasteful and we can no longer afford them. Moreover, they throw the welfare picture out of balance when, for example, we commit such follies as raising millions for infantile paralysis and nothing for more prevalent children's diseases such as cerebral palsy and cardiac ailments.

Why shouldn't the Red Cross join with other national agencies in asking the President to call together all the leaders of the voluntary national organizations to consider the plan? The country would then have proof that the Red Cross is supporting its liberal leaders and inaugurating a new era of mutual assistance, goodwill and democratic solidarity.

The Red Cross must play a role in the complex industrialized economy of the future equal but not identical with that which earned it the reverence and gratitude of a simpler, smaller nation in the past. In its national councils, as in each local chapter, all classes of citizens should have a voice in its decisions as well as the right to contribute. In coping with the vast welfare responsibility of the next decades, a vigorous, democratic Red Cross must share and collaborate flexibly with other public and private welfare agencies in serving all members of the community, regardless of race, color or creed.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

The tide is running fast and the fortune involved is not only the welfare of our own country but the well-being of all other nations. For only if we are strong here at home, spiritually, morally and physically, can we redeem the blood of our sons and carry out the obligations growing out of this war. Only if democracy finds new, more generous, more inclusive social patterns here at home will it be strong enough to hold aloft its banners as beacons of promise for universal peace and freedom.

AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

(Formerly The National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools)

Office of the Executive Secretary
P. O. Box 271
Montgomery 1, Alabama

Dear Sir:

Under separate cover, The American Teachers Association is pleased to send you a complimentary copy of THE BLACK AND WHITE OF REJECTIONS FOR MILITARY SERVICE. This report has been prepared by a special research committee of the association and was formally presented to the 41st annual convention of the association, held at the Tennessee A. & I. State College at Nashville, August 15-17, 1944.

In the spirit of the effort which is being made by all the professional organizations to take full advantage of all the revelations of this War crisis which may have major significance for our Post-War efforts in education and in our other areas of national development, this study has been made. The educational programs of this nation face an intensified challenge as a result of the War. The effort of this nation to achieve its goal of adequate and equitable educational opportunity for all children on a nationwide basis ... without differentiation because of economic circumstance or place of residence or sex or race ... should be appreciably accelerated by this World Crisis through which we are now passing. A straight-forward approach to the imperative need of Federal participation in the financing of an adequate and equitable program of public education (extending from the kindergarten through the presently-neglected area of adult education) must be made if the United States is to utilize its superior resources to the greatest advantage. Any deflections of unified national effort because of sectional and racial prejudices should be firmly discouraged.

We hope that you may find interest in this publication of The American Teachers Association. Members of the Committee as well as our new president (Mr. Walter N. Ridley, Virginia State College, Ettrick, Virginia) and the executive secretary will be pleased to be of such further service as may be desired in this matter. Any portion of this publication may be used, without special request, under the usual conditions of bibliographical acknowledgement.

THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION reached a new membership figure of 7206 for the past year of 1944-45. ATA President Walter N. Ridley has set a new membership goal of 12,520 for the current year which will end July 31st and has made the above indicated allocation between the various states.

After the first seven months ending February 28, this progress report is being released. The states of Alabama, West Virginia and Delaware have already reported more than half of their quota. The states of Virginia, Mississippi and Missouri have passed the one-third mark. The spring and summer months are major collection months in most of the states. There is possibility of achieving these new membership goals for 1945-46.

Group membership solicitation by counties and systems and schools is still the effective method. It is the necessary method because of the very nominal membership fee of one dollar. It is the basis of the reports which have come from the above-listed states, along with North Carolina and Georgia, where there has been the cooperation of state associations, of Jeanes teachers and of school principals.

INTEREST, INITIATIVE AND COOPERATION ARE HEREWITH SOLICITED.

THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

(Formerly The National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools)

OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY
P. O. Box 271, Montgomery 1, Alabama

April 6, 1948

To Presidents and Summer School Directors:

We seek to send this initial communication in ample time for its consideration as you plan the calendar of activities and special events for your forthcoming summer session. We herewith request that you place on your summer school calendar, with the necessary associated committee provision, an AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION EMPHASIS DAY (or days).

From the enclosed mimeographed STATEMENT AND REPORT, you will note on page seven the indication of this project as one of the three aspects of approach to the promotion of the American Teachers Association. Several summer schools plan for a more extended "Institute on Professional Organizations" and provide for some exposure of their summer school students to the professional implications associated with the role which teacher organizations have played in the development of education in America. Other summer schools have undertaken to sponsor the proposal of ATA President Walter N. Ridley for an ATA EMPHASIS DAY. Such a project would seem to be quite in line with the professional service which our summer schools seek to provide for those teachers-in-service who are in attendance. We do solicit your interest and effective sponsorship of such a program at your institution this summer.

The date can be of your own choosing in terms of the maximum convenience for your calendar. We would suggest the advantage of a possible uniform day or days within the week of June 24-28 which thus might become a nationwide ATA EMPHASIS DAY.

We make two additional requests. The first is that plans be made for the solicitation of memberships from those summer school students and faculty members who have not paid their membership during the year. The summer schools become a rather effective final opportunity to meet the membership goals for the year for the respective states and offer an opportunity for leadership in encouraging the broadening of the interest and participation of teachers in their professional organizations on the national level. The second is that plans be undertaken to provide for some summer-student representation at the forthcoming annual meeting to be held at the North Carolina College for Negroes in Durham July 23-25. It will mean much to the average teacher to have this type of professional contact. Alabama State Teachers College has featured this kind of project for the past ten years and has set up a special summer project through which funds were raised to send several delegates (six to fourteen) to the ATA at the same time that memberships in the ATA were also being collected. The result in Alabama has been evidenced in the rapidly widening professional spirit of the teachers and their major membership participation in the ATA. Several other summer schools have similarly undertaken such a project of representation on a more limited basis. EVERY SUMMER SCHOOL can do SOMETHING this summer with respect to each of these suggested requests.

We shall look forward to making available additional materials and suggestions. We shall be pleased to have inquiries from the committee chairman whom you may designate for this project at your summer school session. We will appreciate your initial consideration now as you begin to make your plans for your summer session.

STIMULATION of the voluntary 100% affiliation of every teacher with their local, their district, their state and their national professional organizations ... with the ultimate goal being that of a plan of UNIFIED MEMBERSHIP in professional organizations on all three levels (local, state and national.

10. SUPPORT of the program of national-organization membership appeal of the NEA-ATA JOINT COMMITTEE which proposes that teachers of Negro children have first their memberships in the AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION and thereafter in the National Education Association ... just as there is also the agreement of both national-level organizations that membership in local and state associations should precede membership in the national associations.

LIFE MEMBERS evidence both permanence and potential expansion. The 252 fully-paid life members are distributed by states as follows: Alabama 27, District of Columbia 19, West Virginia 14, Tennessee 13, North Carolina 12, Maryland, Missouri and Georgia 9 each, Mississippi and Arkansas 8 each, Louisiana and Virginia 7 each, Texas, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Ohio 6 each, New York 4, Florida, South Carolina, New Jersey and Oklahoma 3 each, Kansas 2, Delaware, Indiana and Illinois 1 each.

WE SEEK AN ADDITIONAL 98 FULLY-PAID LIFE MEMBERS BY JULY 31ST.

THE "THREE-PHASE" PROGRAM OF MEMBERSHIP SOLICITATION

1. Through A Program of Joint Appeal For Professional Memberships

In seeking both to stimulate maximum articulation between our teacher organizations on all levels (local, state and national) and to achieve a maximum membership response of all teachers of their respective organizations on these three levels, one technique is that of voluntary cooperation of these organizations in a joint cooperative and simultaneous appeal for professional-organization memberships. Local leaders and officers of local organizations undertake, at a designated period in the year, to make the appeal to their respective groups of teachers for their memberships in all three organizations. State associations, by formal authorization, direct their officials thus to sponsor joint membership solicitation.

This plan has been in operation in ALABAMA, WEST VIRGINIA, MARYLAND and THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA for several years and has resulted in these areas having the largest percentage of membership participation in the ATA, as shown on the last page of this statement. PENNSYLVANIA and DELAWARE have more recently utilized this plan with marked effectiveness. Some other states have cooperated through provision for encouragement of ATA memberships at their annual meetings and through their publicity.

This plan is a VOLUNTARY program of cooperation in membership solicitation designed to strengthen all three levels of organization membership and to make more economical use of the time of the organization officials as well as of the solicited teachers by undertaking the entire effort at one time. This plan IS NOT A UNIFIED MEMBERSHIP PROGRAM where every teacher is REQUIRED to take membership in all three levels of organization. It represents a step which each state association and local association might well take.

2. Through A Program Of "One Hundred Percent" Membership Affiliation

An increasing number of school faculties, of city-wide teacher groups and of county-wide teacher groups have moved to the point of a voluntary objective each year of ALL teachers becoming members of EACH of the THREE levels of professional organization (local, state and national). There is a sense of professional pride and honor associated with such a step which is taken voluntarily by a particular group of teachers. There is a commendable leadership initiative exhibited by those school principals, by those Jeanes teachers and supervisors and by those local association officials who undetake to meet their professional-leadership obligation through aggressive and dynamic sponsorship of such an appeal.

ALABAMA gives impressive demonstration of the "growth of this idea". The precedent was set by Pickens County, Alabama, six years ago. To date this year, 25 Alabama counties and 14 Alabama cities have registered 100% and an additional number of counties and cities have enrolled more than 50% of their teachers in all three levels of professional organizations (IN THE JOINT MEMBERSHIP APPEAL SPONSORED BY THE STATE TEACHERS ASSOCIATION). West Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and Virginia have an increasing number of such counties which are 100%.

Florida A. & M. College under the leadership of the late Dr. J. R. E. Lee was a pioneer in this program of 100% participation of college faculties. An increasing number of colleges now seek and attain such an objective.

3. Through A Program Of ATA Emphasis At The Summer Schools

The summer schools for Negro teachers serve a very appreciable percentage of the teachers in service. They provide opportunity for professional growth and stimulation in all aspects of the teacher's setting as a member of a noble profession.

Summer Schools now include a PROFESSIONAL INSTITUTE on their calendar of special programs of the summer session. For the past two summers, ATA President Ridley has advocated a simultaneous observance of ATA EMPHASIS DAY. Teachers are given information about the various types of professional organizations and are encouraged to affiliate at that time if they have not already done so during the regular school year.

The Summer School Membership Appeal for the ATA is the final effort before the ATA association year ends on July 31st. Customarily ONE FOURTH of the total number of ATA memberships for the year have been received through these summer school programs. The Okolona Industrial School in Mississippi this past summer registered ALL of its summer school students for a 100% response.

Some summer schools sponsor campaigns to send delegates to the ATA summer meeting. The effort is thus to provide, through some type of project or contest, for a distribution of attendance of teachers who otherwise on their own resources or own initiative might not have such an opportunity.

SUMMER SCHOOL DIRECTORS AND FACULTIES HAVE AN OPPORTUNITY AS WELL AS AN OBLIGATION TO STIMULATE THE PARTICIPATION OF THEIR TEACHERS IN THIS OPPORTUNITY.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

4 February 1947

RECEIVED
FEB 8 1947
Southern Regional Council

Editor or Director of Publications
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed herewith is a copy of ONE WORLD IN SCHOOL, published by the American Teachers Association, This publication was originally released in July, 1946 and distributed only to the members of the Association. This copy is one of a second printing being released for public consumption in 1947.

According to The St. Paul Dispatch:

> This publication "is likely to become a standard handbook for all persons, perhaps teachers especially, who, not content with merely deploring the prevalence of prejudice against minority peoples, want some practical way of combating it. ...This work classifies and describes the printed works that should be of immediate help to pupils of all ages, and teachers of all school grades, in meeting interracial problems with dignity and intelligence. ...Examination of the undertaking discloses a combination of taste, knowledge, and thoroughness that should recommend it, not only to teachers and pupils, but to all thinking citizens who sincerely want to remove one of the most serious blots on our national civilization."

Indeed, The St. Paul Dispatch labels this booklet as "A WEAPON FOR PEACE".

It is sent to you with the hope that your publication will find it possible to review it, to recommend it for what it is worth, or surely, at least to list it as a valuable publication worthy of reading and use by persons interested in peace.

I should appreciate your forwarding to me a statement regarding, or a clipping showing any treatment which you give the booklet. Any comment which you wish to forward on it which might or might not be included in your publication, will be appreciated.

Very sincerely yours,

Walter N. Ridley

Ed. Note: At the 50th (1953) annual convention of The American Teachers Association, held at South Carolina State A. & M. College at Orangeburg on July 26-27-28, the Convention Committee on Resolutions submitted the following statement which was formally adopted at the second session of The Delegate Assembly on Tuesday Afternoon, July 28, 1953.

I. THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

Our assembling here marks the 50th convention of ATA. The past achievements and successes of our organization have contributed immeasurably to the forward march of education in America. We believe that there is ample justification for the humble pride which we take in the glorious history of ATA. Since we now approach the beginning of our second half-century, our hearts and minds are directed toward a PRESENT which is pregnant with opportunities for growth and toward a FUTURE which can be a "Great Tomorrow."

The American Teachers Association is a SPECIAL-INTEREST and SPECIAL-PROBLEM organization dedicated to the objective of implementing, accelerating and achieving in full the AMERICAN IDEAL (a) of EQUALITY OF EDUCATIONAL IPPORTUNITY for EVERY child and (b) of EQUALITY OF PROFESSIONAL STATUS for EVERY teacher....without discrimatory differentials based on race or sex or place of residence or economic circumstance. Thus, the American Teachers Association has a distinctive and urgently-imperative role in the present circumstance of The Negro Child and His Teachers.

The American Teachers Association is challenged and urged (a) to re-vitalize and expand its efforts to achieve a representative membership, (b) to stimulate the growth and effectiveness of its departmental groups and (c) to utilize all channels for the implementation of its mission to improve the calibre of professional service of its members as well as to insist upon the equitable provision of the educational opportunity for all.

II. WE RE-AFFIRM

1) Our faith in the democratic concept and we urge that the democratic process become operative in the life of all peoples and in every phase of the educational program.

2) Our faith in the United Nations and in UNESCO and we urge an expanded program of instructional emphasis in our public and private schools

3) Our faith in the future of America and in the contribution which education can make to the realization in practice of the American Way of Life and of the democratic process for an ever- widening circle of nations and peoples of the world.

4) Our conviction that Federal Aid to Education is both desirable and necessary for the achievement of equality of educational opportunity for every American child.

III. WE COMMEND

1) The well-visioned program of The World Condederation of Organizations of The Teaching Profession and we urge that ATA continue its membership participation and delegate representation.

2) The National Education Association and the Convention Bureau of Miami Beach for a most significant demonstration, at the 1953 meeting of the NEA Representative Assembly, of how the "will" to insure recognition of the dignity of the personality of every NEA member could result in unrestricted use of the convention and hotel and municipal facilities...and thus bring all members to a more wholesome and higher professional level.

3) The several professional organizations whose labors are directed toward the accomplishment of the worthy goal of equality of professional status and uninhibited organizational participation for every teacher.

4) Those state associations and other groups which have opened their membership and participation doors to all without denial because of race

5) The American Council on Education and similar organizations for their efforts to influence the improvement of the professional service in the various phases, levels and areas of education

6) The Southern Education Foundation andthe associated agencies for the current program of leadership development with which is to be associated a continous and careful evaluation of the project

7) The Southern Regional Council for its re-vitalized program designed for local-level acceptance of the practice of integration and we urge that organizations, schools and teachers make increasing use of the informative materials being made available by this organization.

8) The significant opportunities now being sponsored by such agencies and projects as The Ford Foundation, The Kellogg Foundation, The Fullbright Scholarships and The National Scholarship Service for Negroes

9) The Association for The Study of Negro Life and History for its objective to improve the level of human relations in this nation through the provision of historical materials which will stimulate the mutual appreciation of groups racws and nations as a basis for better understanding and for more effective cooperative living

10) The National Association For The Advancement of Colored People for its continuing and aggressive efforts to achieve the elimination of discrimnatory racial differentials in education, in transportation, in housing and in citizenship status.

11) The Diocese of Raleigh for its abolition of racial segregation in its churches... as an example of functional Christian brotherhood and as a suggestion to other dioceses of the Catholic Church as well as the other Christian denominations

12) All officials and citizens responsible for the recent action in the Nation's capitol which makes possible the utilization of restaurants and other public facilities by all citizens

IV WE RECOMMEND AND URGE

1) Increased membership and contribution support to The Legal Defense and Education Fund of NAACP by citizens and teachers and state associations....and the continuation of the TEN PERCENT contribution by ATA

2) Regular and increased support by teachers associations, by citizen groups and by school and pupil groups to the Association For The Study of Negro Life and History

3) Continuing and widening efforts in the area of professional human relations through the NEA-ATA Joint Committee and through similar cooperating committees at state and local levels.

4) Continuing and persistent effort to implement the integration of all ethnic groups into single all-inclusive organizations with teacher organizations taking the lead.

5) Continuing major and differential increase in state and local appropriations for education which will be assigned for the equalization of educational opportunity FOR ALL.

6) All teachers, and teacher-organizations (State and local) to give their membership and interest-support to ATA as a special teacher-organization serving a special and urgent need.

IN RE: Request made through Mr. C. L. Harper

Dear Mr. Fleming:

I have just had a long distance conversation with Mr. C. L. Harper respecting some requests which you make of him and which involve ATA and associated State Officers.

I shall be pleased to have a specific statement and request in respect to your inquiry which you are anticipating and which relates to the question of impressions and suggestions for possible constructive assistance in the preparation of community attitudes for whatever may be the depaending decision in the Supreme Court cases.

The NEA-ATA Joint Committee had special conference on this matter on July 24-25 and anticipates another meeting the latterpart of September. There was some intimation of several channels of inquiry. It is a question as to the background on the basis of which any statement for quotation should be made. I indicated to Mr. Harper our interest and willingness to make whatever statement was desired and feasible. However, I possibly need a specific letter of some detail as a framework before we shall seek to prepare the response. I invite this approach and request from you.

Our response to the request for the directory of State Association Secretaries, I wish to advise that I shall hope to be in position to furnish an up-to-date list within the next ten days. We have now instituted inquiry to get the

Mr. U. B. Broadneaux
Lylburn Downing School
Lexington, Virginia

Dear Mr. Broadneaux:

We could send you somebody but the distance is considerable and the commitment of time for the whole period -- August 24-31 -- is quite a matter too. Actually, if I or one of my very few assistants came up, it would cost possibly $75.00 in transportation. And in all conscience, there should be some compensation for the time of the speaker or consultant involved.

There are people nearer to you who could do quite as good a job as I or anyone whom I might send. I think of Reverend W. Carroll Brooke at Box 208, Staunton, Virginia. He is an Episcopalian clergyman who has been, for the past year or so, Chairman of the Education Division of Christian Social Relations of the Virginia Council of Churches. He has studied all these matters and has wise, forward, and helpful ideas on them.

Still another man would be Emerson Smith of the Virginia Council of Churches at Richmond, 109 West Grace Street.

Irene Osborne, American Friends Service Committee, Community Relations Project, 104 "C" Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is a youngish white woman who, for the Quakers, has done most of the brain work in preparing public opinion in Washington, D. C. for ending segregation in the schools. She is probably the best expert in this area in the country. Washington is close by, and she might be quite glad to make the trip. She has a Negro woman as an Associate -- Miss Alma Scurlock -- who knows about as much as Irene Osborne.

Still another source would be Tartt Bell, who runs the American Friends Service Committee work in the South from an office at 617 West Market Street, Greensboro, North Carolina. He has studied all these matters and has favorable and far-sighted views. An assistant to him, Miss Anne Queen, would also be perfectly acceptable and quite helpful.

Still, if you want somebody from here, I or one of my helpers would come, but we would like to hold our visit to one or two days and there is the problem of travel expense money.

IN RE: ATA Convention at Nashville, July 26

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Am too late in making this request for your participation on the convention program of The American Teachers Association at Tennessee A & I State University at Nashville on Monday night, July 26?

From the enclosure, you will note that the convention theme is TEACHERS AND THE SUPREME COURT PRONOUNCEMENT. At this convention, we seek to center the emphasis on the circumstance and problems and obligations of the Negro teacher in this present transition crisis. Our teachers need to have "reinforced" knowledge of what are the implications and problems and most advisable action for them in this circumstances. They need to know the various ways in which their security may be challenged and what need to become their defensive techniques. They need to be inspired to recognize their obligations to themselves and to their pupils. They must make their own personal readjustments to function effectively in a pattern of expanded professional relationships. They need to be warned with respect to the areas of their own improvements both in skills and in philosophy.

We now look forward to a sumposium session on Monday Morning when we shall hope to review what is now happening in those areas where specific steps are already being undertaken(such as Baltimore, Washington, Saint Louis, etc.) We should desire that there be the two contributions on Monday night with your presentation from the vantage point of the very dynamic approaches being made by the Southern Regional Council. It would seem to offer also the opportunity to widen the acquaintance of these ATA members with the program of the Southern Regional Council at this time.

I shall look forward to your reply at your very earliest convenience. ATA will be pleased to reimburse you for your travel expenses for this service.

SECRETARIAL MEMORANDUM #6 "THE FIFTY-FIRST CONVENTION" June 19, 1954

NNOUNCING
THE FIFTY-FIRST (1954) ATA CONVENTION
AT THE TENNESSEE A. & I. STATE UNIVERSITY AT NASHVILLE
ON SUNDAY-MONDAY-TUESDAY, July 25-26-27, 1954

'he Fifty-First (1954) annual convention of The American Teachers Association opens on Sunday afternoon, July 25 and extends through Tuesday, July 27.

SUNDAY: The MEMORIAL SERVICE at four o'clock in the afternoon;
The GREETING & KEYNOTE program-session in the evening.

MONDAY: The PROFESSIONAL-PROBLEMS SYMPOSIUM in the morning;
The First Session of THE DELEGATE ASSEMBLY in the afternoon
The PROFESSIONAL-INSPIRATION public program in the evening

TUESDAY: The simultaneous DEPARTMENTAL-DISCUSSION sessions in the morning
The Second Session of THE DELEGATE ASSEMBLY in the afternoon
The annual ATA LIFE-MEMBERS BANQUET in the evening
The ATA-Host Lyceum Program in the evening.

THE CONVENTION THEME: "THE TEACHER AND THE SUPREME COURT PRONOUNCEMENT"

The American Teachers Association is composed of TEACHERS who have a THREE-FOLD interest and obligation in the import of the recently announced Supreme Court Decision

(1) As AMERICAN CITIZENS who are concerned with steady progress toward the achievement in practice of the concepts of CHRISTIANITY and of DEMOCRACY and who thus are also concerned that there be "SINCERE COMPLIANCE" with the expressed "Law of The Land"

(2) As AMERICANS (and in majority percentage also as NEGROES) who are dedicated to the acceleration of the effort to achieve EQUALITY OF EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY for EVERY CHILD....including the often-disadvantaged and frequently-separated Negro child for whom the recent pronouncement of The Supreme Court IS that any practice of Denial and/or Separation ON THE BASIS OF RACE constitutes both INEQUALITY of OPPORTUNITY and VIOLATION of the CONSTITUTION of The United States.

(3) As TEACHERS whose circumstance of employment, whose sphere of professional service and whose special instructional obligation are both affected and expanded by the Supreme Court decision.

The first two areas of interest and obligation are being approached through the various organizations (civic, religious, governmental) to which ATA members belong and with which ATA officially cooperates. The third area is the distinctly-professional concern of ATA as an organization and warrants the parallel and SUPPLEMENTARY effort of all teacher organizations, including ATA and its affiliated organizations.

It is thus the theme-objective of the 51st ATA Convention to seek interpretations, suggestions and plans of action which will implement the service of TEACHERS AS TEACHERS in this pending crisis and transition. The Program-Contributions will be directed toward this objective. The departmental discussions at the Tuesday Morning sessions will explore and develop specific lines of actions for teachers in their respective areas of instructional and administrative assignment. The convention goal is the development of a GUIDING PRONOUNCEMENT for the membership and associates of ATA.

THE CONVENTION SETTING AND FACILITIES

The dynamic and rapidly-expanding TENNESSEE AGRICULTURAL AND INDUSTRIAL STATE UNIVERSITY at Nashville will be the setting for this epochal 51st ATA convention. It was in Nashville FIFTY YEARS AGO (1904) that the NATCS was organized. After a half century, ATA returns to Nashville and to an outstanding state institution which was not in existence when ATA began 50 years ago but which has subsequently been host for two ATA conventions.

The facilities of Tennessee A & I State University are being made available to delegates to the ATA convention. LODGING will be provided for as many as possible on the campus at the charge of TWO DOLLARS ($2.00) per night. OFF CAMPUS LODGING is estimated to cost $3.50 per night per person in private homes and from $2.00 to $8.50 per night for single rooms in hotels. MEALS (breakfast, lunch and dinner) will be available in the University Cafeteria at the rate of $3.75 per day for delegates purchasing meal tickets at the time of registration. The Life Member's Banquet Ticket is priced at $2.50.

The ATA HOST-LIASON COMMITTEE of the University has been appointed and includes Mrs. Mabel Bell Crooks as chairman, Vice President A. V. Boswell, Dr. H. A. Bowen, Mr. Cass, Mr. R. M. Gaines, Mrs. H. C. Kincaid, Dr. E. C. Lewis,Jr., Mrs. A.H.G. Sasser, Mrs. F. A. Sanders and Mr. F. L. Teague. Requests for reservations and for associated information can be addressed to the committee chairman (Mrs. Mabel Bell Crooks), Tennessee A & I State University, Nashville 8, Tennessee.

The Tennessee Education Association is the associated host and looks forward to its opportunity to extend special courtesies as well as to facilitate the success of this 51st (1954) ATA Convention. Principal G. A. Key, 1123 College Street, Chattanooga, as a member of the ATA Board of Trustees, looks forward to such special assistance as may be requested of him.

THE ATA PUBLICATION CONTRIBUTION

There is significant volume of publication relating to the facts and issues and solutions to the school cases recently argued before The United State Supreme Court. ATA makes its significant contribution through the publication of two phamplet-studies:

I. LEGAL STATUS OF SEGREGATED SCHOOLS
II. PROGRESS OF THE EDUCATION OF NEGROES, 1870-1950

Each of these two studies has been made by The Research Division of The National Education Association at the request of The NEA-ATA Joint Committee. ATA makes available TO EVERY ATA MEMBER the reprint in full of each of these studies in a special issue of THE BULLETIN which will be released before the date of the 51st (1954) ATA Convention.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Please find enclosed (CR RHA) my personal check in the amount of sixteen dollars and sixty-five cents ($16.65) which has been reported to me for sales at Nashville of the pamphlet. I brought the remaining copies on to Montgomery. Upon request I am now shipping twelve copies to The Alabama A and M College and fifty copies to Mr. E. J. Gransbery at Albany State College. They propose to send the reimbursement checks for these respective quantities. I shall look forward to the accounting for these remaining copies.

We appreciate your fortunate decision to make this publication available to ATA members in attendance at the convention. The sales response is indicative of their interest.

Yours very truly,

Dear Dr. Trenholm:

Most kind of you to send over $16.65 for sales of the pamphlet, and to make arrangements for many more of the copies to be sold.

I think the pamphlet is going to be popular, and I am deeply grateful to you for the very substantial assist that the meeting and your special kindness gave to it.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

Please find enclosed ATA Check # 354 in the amount of fifty dollars ($50.00) as reimbursement for your travel incident to your presence at Nashville on Monday night to contribute to that program.

Your contribution was quite worthwhile and was received with great appreciation. It also represented the opportunity for many ATA members to become acquainted with Southern Regional Council and thus to become aware of its potential contribution in this current struggle in which both organizations are concerned.

Again thanking you, I am

A COMMITTEE-CONFERENCE PROPOSAL — 1955-56: NO. 23

SATURDAY - JULY 28 - AT ATLANTA — July 9, 1956

This 1955-56 MEMO, NO. 23 relates to a proposal for a pre-convention committee-conference at Clark College in Atlanta on Saturday, July 28, 1956, beginning at 10:00 and continuing into the afternoon and with the possibility of an evening session.

There is a TWO-FOLD OBJECTIVE of this special committee-conference:

(1) To make some EVALUATIVE APPRAISAL of the special ATA Exploratory Project of this summer which has been directed toward a widened acquaintance with the resource materials on Intergroup Education which are included in the two NEA-ATA "Loan-Use" collections (THE KIT and THE PACKET)

(2) To consider possibilities and to develop proposals for a program which ATA, and also the NEA-ATA Joint Committee, might undertake in 1956-57 as a service-stimulation to teacher-organizations (both local and state), to schools, and to patron-adult community groups.

The ATA convention-program on Monday Morning, July 30, provides for a descriptive report of this ATA summer project ... with associated background orientation to the past decade of effort in this area of Intergroup Education for the Improvement of Human Relations. It is the anticipation that the Departmental Group Discussions on Tuesday morning, July 31, will include some consideration of WHAT TO DO and HOW with their respective school-level and school-area pupil groups. Thus, this proposed committee-conference on Saturday, July 28 will seek to develop the initial suggestions which can thus be subsequently discussed.

The two enclosed mimeographed presentations (No. 19 and No. 20) provide additional acquaintance-information respecting this ATA summer project. In the FOREWORD of Presentation NO. 20, there is reference to the several efforts of ATA which extend back over more than a decade. The KIT was prepared in 1952 and the PACKET was prepared in 1954. There has been ACCELERATED CHANGE in the past two years. There is SIGNIFICANT and DISTURBING CRISIS in this year of 1956. There is thus concern as to what may be the most advisable approach and DIFFERENTIATED emphasis in 1956 for 1956-57.

ATA members are adult-citizens and associate themselves with the implemented efforts of the various adult-citizen organizations. ATA members are ALSO teachers ... with professional responsibilities to THEMSELVES, to their PUPILS and to their PATRONS. There is a COMPLEMENTING obligation of teacher-organizations in the "educational aspects" of the current circumstance. WHAT can these teacher-organizations do to UNDERGIRD and UNDERSTANDING and the FAITH of TEACHERS themselves? WHAT (and HOW) should teachers seek to do to provide pupils with an ADVISABLE and CONSTRUCTIVE INTERPRETATION of the trend of developments which are affecting the school circumstance of pupils in varying ways in the various states and communities? WHAT assistance should teachers seek to give their patrons and their adult-constituents? WHAT may thus be READ and DISCUSSED as an EDUCATIONAL CONTRIBUTION in these "troubled times"? WHAT are the ADVISABLE STRATEGIES for TEACHERS in their PEDAGOGICAL activities as related (and differentiated) in their respective communities?

Dr. Mitchell:

Third Paragraph of this letter: I do not find a copy of a letter of inquiry -- maybe HCF?

Also, in checking through the file folder, ATA altogether did purchase some sixteen dollars worth of pamphlets (at least that many were sold to members of ATA).

I have nothing listed, nor is there anything on your calendar, for July 20th.

IN RE: ATA in Atlanta
July 23-27
July 28
July 29-31

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I send this letter to inform you of ATA activities in Atlanta on the above-indicated dates, and to solicit both your interest and your assistance.

From the ATA Memo. No. 20 (on blue-color paper) you will note the enclosure of some SCR Pamphlets in the list of titles of the NEA-ATA PACKET which will be on exhibit at Atlanta University during the week beginning July 23 under a faculty-committee sponsorship of which Mr. Whitney A. Young is chairman.

You will note the letter of inquiry to the Southern Regional Council with respect to the titles of subsequent pamphlet-releases for the past two years which are now to be recommended for inclusion in a possible additional bibliography.

From the enclosed Memo. No. 23 you will note the proposal for a special committee-conference at Clark College on Saturday, July 28 for the specific purpose as therein outlined. We need the assistance of the Southern Regional Council in seeking to evolve a bibliography of resource materials as well as in seeking to develop suggestions for study programs which will be pointed toward teachers themselves and through them to pupils and patron-adults. We need to be as practical as possible in terms of what the varying local circumstances have now become to be and in terms of what we may need to do even for teachers themselves in some circumstances. Thus we extend this invitation and make the appeal for the participation of you or your designated staff representative. This will be a small group of possibly 15 persons with invitations now extended to such persons as Dr. Joseph H. Douglass, Dr. R. B. Marston of NEA, Dr. W. N. Ridley and Miss Mary L. Williams and Dr. J. R. Picott of the NEA-ATA Joint Committee, along with a staff representative from the Race Relations Department at Fisk University, and 4 or 5 other similarly selected persons. We shall hope to implement our further preparations through subsequent Memoranda in terms of the response to our invitations.

Still another matter is that of the possibility of availability of SRC Pamphlets for sale at the ATA Convention. We will have our special illuminated exhibit on display. I recall the interest-response to the previous opportunity for purchase of SRC Pamphlets ... including the meeting at Nashville where you made a most helpful address.

We are concerned with every effort to extend the acquaintance, develop interest, and implement the response-participation in SRC. Is there the possibility that you or Dr. Ruth could be available for participation in the program-symposium on Monday morning, July 30? If such is possible, I should like to develop further details in subsequent correspondence.

Hoping that this letter is not too involved and that I have made myself reasonably clear with respect to the several items and inquiry-request, I am

Yours very truly,

TO DEPARTMENTAL-DISCUSSION OFFICERS — 1955-56: No. 31

We hope that your thoughts and anticipations are now directed toward ATLANTA where we will be assembled for the 53rd ATA Convention on Sunday-Monday-Tuesday, July 29-30-31.

In addition to this MEMO. No. 31, we also enclose the recent MEMOS. No. 19, 21, 22, 24, 25 and 26 to which we invite your attention. We are also sending the LODGING-RESERVATION Form (No. 27) which you should execute and mail immediately to Rev. L. H. Pitts...if you need such assistance.

From MEMO. NO. 24, you will note the allocation of the 2½-hour period form 9:30 to Noon on Tuesday morning, July 31st, for the twelve concurrent discussion groups. You will also note the FIVE suggested Question-Topics which grow out of the convention-theme and the anticipated emphases of the scheduled general-session presentations...with the anticipation that there WILL NOT be consideration of ALL FIVE by EACH of the discussion groups, but rather preferential selection in relation to the pertinence-and-interest of the respective discussion group.

From the reports at Houston, several departments chose their leadership officers for the 1956 convention at Atlanta. For other departments there is no such recorded indication. As in previous years, we seek to utilize the resources of the host institution (Atlanta University in 1956). This arrangement insures that there may be some assurance of operation of each of the twelve discussion-groups as well as availability of some special competency-resources. This related participation is to be a cooperative and "supporting" assistance. The pre-session leadership-contacts are to be facilitated and some supplementary pre-convention communications anticipated. There is the hope that time and place can be determined and announced for each respective leadership-core to have an acquaintance pre-planning conference at least on the preceding day of Monday, July 30.

We shall also hope that there may be not only the enlisted resource assistance of other delegates to the convention but also the rotating assistance of several of the general-session speakers.

Your preparation can advisably include the listing of questions and comment-statements and suggestions which become a part of the anticipated discussion-period. Some questions will suggest themselves to you as you listen to the general-session presentations and make your notes accordingly. A brief but adequate orientation statement should be outlined as an expeditious initiation of the consideration of each respective question-topic. The emphasis however is to be on a minimum of speeches and a maximum of free-flow question-discussion-suggestion.

WE WILL AGAIN BE GRATEFUL FOR YOUR ASSISTANCE. If you cannot get to the convention, PLEASE INFORM ME BY RETURN MAIL.

IN RE: ATA Project: Education for Human Relations
A Request for Bibliography-Suggestions

Gentlemen:

From the two enclosed mimeographed presentations, you will note the objectives and a special "summer effort" of The American Teachers Association.

You will note that you are listed as a publication-source for one or more of the titles listed in the two "loan-collections" (THE KIT and THE PACKET) as developed and sponsored cooperatively by The National Education Association, The American Teachers Association and The United States Office of Education. There is both awareness and concern respecting the additional titles which have become available with these past two eventful years.

We will appreciate your response to these four requests:

(1) Are your listed publications still in AVAILABLE supply for possible purchases?

(2) Do you have additional and/or more recent titles which you would recommend for inclusion in the now-contemplated "third" bibliography (as of 1956)?

(3) Are there similarly recent titles of other publishers and/or organizations which you would suggest?

(4) Would it be possible to include your above-suggested recent titles (item #2 above) in our special convention-exhibit at our ATA Convention in Atlanta on July 29-30-31?

Appreciating your response to this inquiry and request, I am

IN RE: ATA Convention Program

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I do appreciate the letter from Mr. G. S. Alexander in which he conveys the indication from you that you will be gracious to participate in the pre-convention committee-conference on next Saturday, July 28, and then in the professional symposium on Monday morning, July 30.

Each of these occasions will be on Clark College Campus. We are now proposing that the conference on Saturday will be in the lounge at Pfieffer Hall (which is the dormitory for men). The convention program on Monday morning is to be in Davage Auditorium which is in the administration building at Clark College.

We seek now to schedule you and Dr. Ambrose Caliver for the third topic of that Monday morning session: SOME NEW AND/OR ACCENTUATED PROBLEMS FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION AND FOR NEGRO TEACHERS. We will be concerned with such itemization and interpretaion as you and Dr. Caliver would choose to make from your respective points of vantage. Since each of you will now share the committee-conference on Saturday, there could be the opportunity for your agreement as to the respective points of emphasis which each of you might present. We are particularly concerned with the interpretative emphases upon these critical problems about which our teachers must have informed understanding and must develop techniques in relationship to their respective community circumstances ... which now becomes significantly serious in certain states, as you know.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Dr. Caliver in order that he too may anticipate accordingly.

Appreciative of the indications in the letter from Mr. Alexander with respect to SRC Pamphlets, I am

IN RE: Monday Morning at Atlanta

Dear Dr. Caliver:

We now seek to clarify and evolve our program for the Monday morning session at Atlanta.

I plan to have written you earlier this week respecting your making contribution to the third phase of the professional symposium for which the revised topic is: SOME NEW AND/OR ACCENTUATED PROBLEMS FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION AND FOR NEGRO TEACHERS. I am concerned with an analytical and interpretive approach rather than a mere emotional emphasis upon just one or two aspects. I think that you are quite in an admirable position to point up several problems for public education which are now quite serious. You can make the approach from the national point of view with reference to such significant efforts as illustrated in the White House Conference, again in efforts to initiate federal aid, in the national challenge of the Supreme Court's decision and in efforts of the office of Education ... with their major pertinence for Negro teachers.

You will note from the enclosed letter to Dr. George S. Mitchell that I am asking him to share this participation. You may choose to "exchange notes", even before next Saturday when the two of you will have the contact opportunity at the committee-conference, to agree as to the respective emphases. I take the liberty to send to him, a copy of this letter in order to facilitate the "related thinking" of each of you.

Pleased that we can look forward to your assistance at Atlanta, I am

Dear George:

I have just received a letter from Trenholm, and the copy of the letter which he wrote you. I am presuming to suggest a division of labor: I should like to set forth the general frame of reference and context in which Negro teachers will probably have to operate within the next few years. This presentation would include a brief discussion of the various changes resulting from scientific and technological development which have an impact on all teachers. I would expect to make very slight reference to special application to Negro teachers.

I would hope that you could follow with a discussion of the implications of the Supreme Court Decision in the setting which I shall have given with some emphasis on the need for remedial instruction in order to improve the quality of Negro students and competence of Negro workers.*

Very cordially yours,

Ambrose

IN RE: Saturday, July 28

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

It has now been deemed advisable to have the special-committee conference on Saturday to begin 2:00 in the afternoon rather that at 10:30 in the morning, Consequently I dispatch this special delivery communication to you.

I do hope that this change will be to your possible advantage in terms of leaving you free on Saturday morning for your other probable obligations. I also hope that it is equally convenient for you on Saturday afternoon. We are, of course, apologetic for this imposition upon your Saturday afternoon.

We are pleased now that we can anticipate the presence of Dr. Herman H. Long from the Race Relation Institute. He will constitute another experience-resouree as we seek to evolve determination of the advisable complementing service of ATA.

Dear Mr. Trenholm:

By shoving six or eight people around, I cleared up Saturday morning July 28th for our Special-Committee Conference. I have to be part of a movie that's being made on Saturday afternoon. And I can't just shove around movie cameras and all the movie staff.

So the best I can do is to do what I did: call Mr. Pitts' secretary and say I will show anywhere Saturday morning or Saturday night or Sunday, to be briefed as I should be. Will you put it in your mind to contrive to tell me where to come to be briefed, when? My home telephone number is DEarborn 5961.

SOME SUPPLEMENMENTARY NOTES

1. There is just the brief calendar period of 2½ days for the convention, We seek to achieve a maximum accomplishment within this convention period. There is thus COMPACT PLANNINGand the associated anticipation that each program item will be dispatched on a time-schedule. The prompt attendance of ATA delegates at each session and at each occasion is essential. There can be a fruitful and pleasant period within these 2½ days.

2. WORKING TOGETHER FOR "OUR" CHILDREN IN THIS TRANSITION-CRISIS is the convention theme. Each of the session-programs as well as the departmental discussion-groups on Tuesday morning, is planned to the end that there can thus be a restricted emphasis and the associated objective to achieve some basic and helpful understandings which may be reflected in the efforts of each ATA member in his respective location for the coming year.

   a. Special note should be taken of ATA MEMO. NO. 24 in which there are additional indications with respect to the related approaches on Sunday afternoon, on Monday Morning, on Monday night, and on Tuesday night. There is also the proposal of FIVE question-topics around which the discussions on Tuesday morning can be centered.

"INTERGROUP EDUCATION FOR IMPROVED HUMAN RELATIONS": SOME SUGGESTIVE TITLES

"Intergroup Relations refer to the interactions among persons belonging to groups which have one or more differences ascribed to NATIONALITY, RACE, RELIGION, CULTURE, AGE, and/or SOCIO-ECONOMIC STATUS. Intergroup Education IS that type of Education which assists people in LEARNING (1) To ACCEPT EACH OTHER on the basis of MERIT, (2) to PROMOTE the effective PARTICIPATION of ALL individuals in the social group, and (3) to PREVENT MINORITY-GROUP MEMBERSHIP from becoming a HANDICAP in HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS."

Over the past decade the American Teachers Association has given attention to this challenging urgency of INTERGROUP-EDUCATION FOR IMPROVED HUMAN RELATIONS. At the 43rd (1946) Convention at Durham, the Convention Theme was THE AMERICAN TEACHER'S OPPORTUNITY AND OBLIGATION IN INTERGROUP-EDUCATION with program contributions by Dr. Lloyd Allen Cook, Dr. Hilda Taba and Mrs. Helen Parker Mudgett. In 1944 ATA had published ONE WORLD IN SCHOOL as a subsequently widely-used bibliography on Intergroup-Education which had been prepared by Miss Louella Miles of Saint Paul, Minnesota and which had been edited by Mrs. Helen Parker Mudgett.

Within the past five years, The American Teachers Association, the National Education Association and The United States Office of Education have jointly developed and provided TWO LOAN-USE COLLECTIONS (The "KIT" and The "PACKET") of materials on INTERGROUP EDUCATION. The "KIT" (1952), containing 27 pamphlets and other items is designed primarily for TEACHER-EDUCATION institutions. The "PACKET" (1954), containing 37 pamphlets and accompanied by a LEADERS GUIDE, is designed especially for ADULT COMMUNITY LEADERS. Each of these two collections is available for Loan-Use through application to Dr. R. B. Marston, National Education Association, 1201-16th Street, N.W., Washington. A limited number of sets of THE PACKET are also available for Loan-Use through the Office of The ATA Executive Secretary (Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, P.O. Box 271, Montgomery, Alabama).

For this current ATA Year of 1955-56 and contemplated for more-extended promotion in the coming year of 1956-57, The American Teachers Association is again giving special emphasis to INTERGROUP EDUCATION FOR IMPROVED HUMAN RELATIONS.

a. An initial approach is The Exhibit-Display and Associated Publications of these two NEA-ATA loan collections (The KIT and The PACKET) at six participat- Summer Schools: Alabama State College, Atlanta University, North Carolina College, Southern University, Tuskegee Institute and Virginia State College. Designated staff representatives of these institutions met at ATA Headquarters in Montgomery on June 8 to plan this exploratory experience. Virginia State College loaned Dr. Walter N. Ridley (ATA Past President and now-secretary of The Joint NEA-ATA Committee) for assistance at ATA Headquarters during the month of June and for subsequent two-day periods in July at Southern University, At North Carolina College and at Atlanta University.

b. An Exhibit-Presentation was made on June 18-19 at Shreveport to The Annual Convention of The National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers.

c. At the approaching 53rd (1956) ATA Convention in Atlanta on July 29-30-31, there will be Exhibit-Display, discussion of projects for 1955-56 and a "now-sought" special pre-convention committee conference on Saturday, July 28.

Much has happened within the past two years since the release of THE PACKET in 1954, Tensions and Crises have increased within the past twelve months. Significant additional (and more up-to-date) publications have been issued. There is evident urgency for a third (1956) bibliography with the associated attention to a DIFFERENTIATED program of EDUCATION (a) for children, (b) for youth, (3) for college students, (d) for teachers and (e) for adult patrons and citizens. Concureent with the wide variety of controversy, of action and of reaction must be associated deliberated EDUCATIONAL EFFORTS for OUR children and their parents and their teachers who are in varying circumstances in this TRANSITION-CRISIS. ATA thus recognizes and seeks to make a professional contribution to its constituency.

This presentation is a beginning. The titles of THE KIT and of THE PACKET are herewith listed for distribution to those who may share the Exhibit-Display at the six institutions and at the ATA Convention. Some "first suggestions" of additional (and more recent) titles are being contemplated as an ATA SUPPLEMENT. To facilitate the purchase of these titles, the alphabetized list of publisher-sources are first indicated with identification of the "source number" of the titles in THE KIT and/or in THE PACKET available from each respective source.

A 1956 SUMMER EMPHASIS-PROJECT IN "IMPROVING HUMAN RELATIONS"

For the past THIRTY YEARS, (beginning in 1926) A JOINT COMMITTEE of THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION and THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION has been in continuous operation. This Joint Committee is composed of TEN members ... five nominated by The National Education Association and five nominated by The American Teachers Association.

The basic purpose of this JOINT COMMITTEE has been to explore, to suggest and to stimulate ways in which each of these two national-level professional organizations might utilize their respective resources for improvement of education of ALL children ... but with special reference to NEGRO children who share the disadvantageous circumstances associated with the persisting spectre of RACE in American Life.

This NEA-ATA JOINT COMMITTEE

(a) Has stimulated increased membership and program participation of Negroes in the wide range of professional-organization programs

(b) Has stimulated the efforts to remove RACE differentials in membership and in the living-and-participation conditions incident to the convention-attendance of Negro members

(c) Has made suggestion and appeal for "resolution-declarations" by the NEA, by ATA and by the various other organizations which have the "moral obligations" to direct emphasis to these urgencies of American Life

(d) Has directed attention to the distortions and inadequacies of treatment of the Negro in textbooks and films ... with associated direct appeal for what is now an "evidenced improvement"

(e) Has encouraged the cooperative effort in the preparation and publication of special studies and materials designed to accelerate the achievement of the accepted American concept of equitable and wholesome status of the Negro in the structure of education and of adult life

One of the more recent interests of The NEA-ATA Joint Committee has been the encouragement of a COOPERATIVE venture in the provision of suggestive "Loan Materials" for the use by GROUPS which would seek to study the problems in the area of INTER-GROUP and HUMAN RELATIONS. The U. S. Office of Education, The National Education Association and The American Teachers Association have responded to this appeal. A KIT of 27 titles has been assembled for loan-use by teacher-education classes. A PACKET of 37 titles has subsequently been assembled for loan-use by adult groups. A Leader's Guide has been prepared for each of these two collections. The National Education Association has provided the "location and staff service" for the circulation of these two loan-collections. The financial participation by NEA and by ATA has been supplemented by some contributions from several philanthropic agencies.

THIS 1956 EMPHASIS-PROJECT IN "IMPROVING HUMAN RELATIONS"

After a special-service stimulation last summer and in cognizance of the intensified controversies of this past school year, ATA now undertakes an "exploratory-experience" to direct the attention of Negro Teachers to the resources which are available through the KIT and the PACKET.

(OVER)

Six Institutions (Alabama State College, Atlanta University, North Carolina College, Southern University, Tuskegee Institute, and Virginia State College) have responded to the invitation to participate in This EMPHASIS-PROJECT during the month of July. The titles of the KIT and of the PACKET are being placed on display. Some additional titles have been suggested as an ATA SUPPLEMENT. A "THIRTY-PLATE ILLUMINATED DISPLAY EXHIBIT" has been developed under the immediate direction of Dr. Walter N. Ridley of Virginia State College who is past President of ATA and who has been on loan for assistance at ATA Headquarters in Montgomery during the month of June. Presentations, Discussions and Films are being utilized.

There is the hope that this exploratory experience can be basis for an increased and widened service-effort, during this next school year, by schools and colleges, by local and state teacher organizations, by PTA and by other adult groups.

"TO IMPROVE HUMAN RELATIONS": WHAT YOU AND I CAN DO

YOU and I

1. CAN LEARN about and use MATERIALS designed to CREATE UNDERSTANDING of and SUGGESTING solutions to tension-producing problems.

2. CAN GAIN KNOWLEDGE about the TENSION-PRODUCING CIRCUMSTANCES around us today so that we will be able to be more OBJECTIVE and EFFECTIVE in discussion of them.

3. CAN LEARN TECHNIQUES and FACTS which will help us better to PRESENT and/or DISCUSS circumstances or problems which are sometimes tension-producing

4. CAN LEARN how BETTER to LESSEN or CONTROL OUR OWN PREJUDICES against ideas, people and circumstances around us.

5. Can LEARN ENOUGH about the U. S. CONSTITUTION, the BILL OF RIGHTS, the UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS, the GOLDEN RULE, and the AMERICAN IDEAL OF EQUALITY and FAIR PLAY to become UNDERGIRDED firmly in OUR PERSONAL FAITH in American Democracy.

6. Can SEEK to GAIN enough PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE to aid in combatting prejudices in our HOMES, GROUPS and COMMUNITIES.

7. CAN INTRODUCE into our HOMES, CHURCHES, CLUBS and OTHER ORGANIZATIONS a serious effort to study and learn "how to improve human relations."

8. Can STIMULATE in our HOMES, CHURCHES, CLUBS and OTHER ORGANIZATIONS efforts to learn enough about the laws and government of our nation, state and locality to understand more clearly the tension-producing events of today.

9. Can ARRANGE for and/or PARTICIPATE in those COMMUNITY CONTACTS and ACTIVITIES (whether individual, group, or mass) which give opportunity for improvement of knowledge and attitudes about human beings and their needs and values.

10. Can DEVELOP GOOD HUMAN RELATIONS FOR OURSELVES and THOSE AROUND US to the extent that our homes, classes, churches, organizations and communities begin to reflect a contribution to understanding of the needs and values of ALL MEN and, thus, a contribution to peace at home and abroad.

11. Can SUPPORT those agencies and PROGRAMS which foster good human relations and are thus favorable to the growth of better citizens for our American Democracy.

12. Can SELECT some FREE and INEXPENSIVE MATERIALS and send them to leaders such as ministers, governmental officials, school boards, editors, teachers and others in our communities, for the purpose of aiding them toward right decisions and actions.

VI. THE CONVENTION-PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS

16. The ATA-Convention-preparations seek a maximum flexibility in the provision for program participation through acceptances BOTH before the convention-date AND at the time of convention registration at Bethune-Cookman College.

17. The Two-Weeks-Earlier convention-date results in some "last-minute" program-participant clearances with some resource-personnel who are gracious to respond to the appeal for program-participation assistance.

This Volume XXXII, No. 1 (June, 1958) issue of THE BULLETIN is the "first" issu of this 1957-58 ATA year. The last previous issue was the 48-page Volume XXXI, No. 2 (July, 1957) issue.

Again during this year, the communication-report channel has been the series of ATA MEMOS which have been released at intervals to the ATA representatives and to those in attendance at the various teacher-association meetings.

As was also the procedure last summer, there are TWO issues of THE BULLETIN within the two months of June and July. This Volume XXXII, No. 1 (June, 1958) issue is the convention-announcement number with selected information-presentations which are intended to facilitate the anticipations for the convention-experience at Daytona Beach on July 13-14-15.

The Volume XXXII, No. 2 (July, 1958) issue will feature (a) the report of the 1957 convention at Durham, (b) the program for the 1958 convention at Daytona Beach, (c) the state teacher associations and related teacher-organizations and (d) service-activities and related ATA information.

ATA can report progress both in membership and in service-activities during this year. See the membership statistics on pages 6 and 8 of this issue. Read the service-activity report-presentations on pages 5, 6, 7 and 8. Look forward to the additional report-presentations in the July convention-issue.

ATA is embarked on its program of expanded field service. Look forward to the report, in the July isue, of state-committee personnel and activities for the states of Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Florida. WHAT ABOUT YOUR STATE?

At Daytona Beach on Sunday afternoon, July 13, there will be memorial tribute to the deceased ATA life members of the year. Our list includes: MISS MYRA FAIRFAX (West Virginia), MISS HATTIE FEGER (Ohio), Dr. BENJAMIN F. HUBERY (Georgia), MRS. M. ALICE LASAINE (South Carolina) and DR. W. F. MAIZE (Florida). For the THIRD time in the fifty-five years of NATSC-ATA, the annual convention is staged in Florida. It was 11 years ago (1947) that ATA last met in Florida . . . at the-now Florida A. & M. State University when ATA Life-Member WILLIAM H. GRAY was president of the host college. It was SEVENTEEN YEARS ago (1935) that NATCS met in Florida — also at the-then Florida A. & M. College . . . in the service-period at that college of the late J. R. E. LEE who was the founder—and first president of NATCS.

Florida has distinctive place in the history of NATCS-ATA. In addition to Dr. Lee and Dr. Bethune, there had been service of the late NATHAN B. YOUNG as the 5th (1915) NACTS president when he was president of Florida A. & M. and of DR. GEORGE W. GORE as the 33rd (1950 and 1951) ATA president who became President of Florida A. & M. during his service-period as ATA president. Another interim-president of Florida A. & M. College (the late W. H. A. HOWARD) served as treasurer of NATCS in 1921-26. A former vice-president and associate of Dr. Bethune and Bethune-Cookman College (the late JOHN C. WRIGHT) was an ATA life member and a past vice president in 1926 and 1927 . . . as well as the husband of the late MRS. ADDIE STREATER WRIGHT who was assistant secretary and editor of THE BULLETIN in 1929 and 1930.

The State of Florida will offer cordial hospitality and increased membership response. Mrs. Irene R. Straughter and Dr. Gilbert Porter, president and secretary, respectively, of the Florida State Teachers Association were active at Durham and look forward to cooperative stimulation of the convention preparations. Principal S. W. CURTIS of the "four-year one-hundred percent" Pinellas County, has accepted responsibility as chairman of the Florida ATA State Committee. The accepted 1957-58 membership goal for Florida is a "four-figure" total (in excess of ONE-THOUSAND annual members).

55th (1958) Convention Meets At Daytona Beach

The 55th (1958) ATA Convention will meet at Daytona Beach, Florida on Sunday-Monday-Tuesday, July 13-14-15.

The historic BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE is the convention site and the college-host. The Florida State Teachers Association and ATA Region-II share the host responsibilities.

The Convention-date is TWO WEEKS EARLIER. This mid-July date is an "adjustment-courtesy" so that the ATA Executive Secretary may include "ATA representation" at the annual convention of WCOTP at Rome, Italy on July 31-August 6 in the gracious "trip-gift" which has been provided by the teachers and associated friends in the State of Alabama. There are indications that this mid-July date may become more acceptable and more convenient for subsequent ATA conventions.

THE 55th CONVENTION THEME
Appraising "Our" Circumstance In 1958

EDUCATIONAL IMPLICATIONS
PEDAGOGICAL OBLIGATIONS

The United States comprise a GREAT NATION with NOBLE CONCEPTS and POWERFUL IDEAS. ATA members pledge themselves to the furtherance of these concepts and to the preservation of these ideals. ATA members associate themselves with those varied adult enterprises which strive to help America to be great.

ATA members are ALSO teachers with an immediate obligation to serve our youth for whom we are professionally employed. As a teachers' organization, ATA strives ever to stimulate its members to recognize and to understand the EDUCATIONAL IMPLICATIONS of our struggle as an American Democracy. ATA members are challenged to face and to meet the associated PEDAGOGICAL OBLIGATIONS.

Progress and Achievements have come RAPIDLY and SIGNIFICANTLY within the past three years. However, "new" problems now arise and have "imperative-urgency" as a result of the "changes," the "repercussions" and some "resistance-reprisal-intimidation reactions."

There are associated urgencies arising from the current-year revelations and changes in the "national" and the "international" scene.

a. The increased emphasis on Science, on the Comparative Effectiveness of Education in America and on the problem of Public Concern and Adequate Tax-Support for Education are illustrations of our National Problem-Circumstance.

"THE ATA OBJECTIVE" continues to be (a) the stimulation, (b) the implementation and (c) the acceleration of the "Accepted" American goals of EQUALITY OF EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR "EVERY" CHILD and of EQUALITY OF PROFESSIONAL STATUS FOR "EVERY" TEACHER.

For ATA members, there are "differentiated" problems in 1958: (a) in the COMMUNITIES in which they serve, (b) for the CHILDREN whom they teach and (c) in the PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZATIONS to which they belong.

As at the previous conventions, ATA will seek at Daytona Beach to relate itself to the current-year problem and will utilize both the presentations and the work-group discussions toward the objectives of information, of interpretation and of implementation of the problems and implications of OUR CIRCUMSTANCE IN 1958.

The 55th Convention Host-College: Bethune-Cookman College

For a tenth consecutive year, ATA is fortunate in having the advantage and the convenience of a college (BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE) as its convention site.

For the immediately-preceding nine ATA conventions, the host colleges have been North Carolina College in 1957; Clark-Morehouse-Spelman, Atlanta, in 1956; Texas-Southern in 1955; Tennessee A & I in 1954; South Carolina State in 1953; Tougalpo-Jackson in 1952; Hampton in 1951; Alabama State in 1950 and Central State in 1949. Florida A & M had been the host back in 1947.

The convention-site at Daytona Beach is on the East Coast of Florida. Many convention delegates will travel through JACKSONVILLE (location of Edwards Waters) and through the historic SAINT AUGUSTINE (location of Florida Normal and Industrial College) enroute to Daytona Beach. Some will probably extend their visit in Florida in order to travel south to Miami and Miami Beach and/or west to Tampa.

The 1958 convention-site will have additional ATA appeal. BETHUNE-COOKMAN College was founded by the gracious and dynamic MARY McLEOD BETHUNE who was the FOURTEENTH (1924) NATCS-ATA president as well as the first of our now-past five lady-presidents. There will thus become a privilege for the ATA convention-membership to see the institution which she founded and administered in such commendable manner.

BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE has very convenient location in the beautiful city of Daytona Beach. The railroad station is within eight blocks of the campus.

The campus is compact and advantageously arranged. Maximum distances between buildings are within the equivalent of just two blocks. Both the ATA Headquarters and the ATA convention sessions will be in the comodious and well-planned MOORE GYMNASIUM. Exhibit-Display areas and associated-service areas will be located in that one building. The Group-Discussion sessions will be distributed between the Gymnasium, the Library and the Science Building.

Just "across the street" are the dormitories, the Dining Hall and the Administrative Building. The school auditorium, in which the opening Vesper-Memorial services will be staged, is located in the Administration Building. The grave of the late MARY McLEOD BETHUNE is just to the east of the Auditorium and also near the now-memorial dwelling in which she resided as president of Bethune-Cookman College.

LODGING

Curtis and Meigs Halls (for women), and Cookman Hall (for Men) are being reserved for the housing of ATA delegates. There will be an approved list of private homes for those delegates who may prefer to live in private residences.

The accommodations are being planned for two occupants per room, at the rate of Three Dollars ($3.00) per night, per person. Single occupancy of rooms will be available at a rate of Five Dollars ($5.00) per night, per person. These rates are the same for off-campus residence accommodations as for dormitory ones.

Payment for lodging for the desired number of nights is made to the Business Office, located in White Hall, upon arrival or during registration.

Reservations should be requested in writing. Either a letter or the ATA Reservation Request Form (Memo No. 35) should be mailed to: Mr. Paul L. Hyde, Business Manager, Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Florida.

OUR HOST-COLLEGE PRESIDENT

55th CONVENTION DELEGATE ASSEMBLY

The business of the American Teachers Association is dispatched through a DELEGATE ASSEMBLY. At Daytona Beach, the Delegate Assembly will:

a. Receive the official reports on Monday Morning (July 14) at 9:00;
b. Nominate officers for 1958-59 on Monday afternoon (July 14) at 4:00;
c. Ballot on nominated candidates on Tuesday morning (July 15) at 9:00;
d. Take action on reports and proposals on Tuesday afternoon (July 15) at 2:00.

The Delegate Assembly is constituted as follows:

1. Annual-Membership Delegates (1 for each 25 annual members for the preceding year of 1956-57);
2. Affiliated-Organization Delegates from organizations (state and local) paying the 1957-58 Affiliation Fee;
3. Life-Membership Delegates (both certified and "current" instllment-payment) who are in attendance at the convention.

The roster of delegates from each state is officially certified on Monday morning (July 14) by the ranking state-association officers through the respective Regional Vice President to the ATA Executive Secretary who presents the list at the Monday-Afternoon session of the Delegate Assembly for official acceptance as the membership of the Delegate Assembly for the 55th Convention. In ALMOST every instance, EVERY STATE will have as many (or more) eligible seats in the Delegate Assembly than they have members in REGISTERED ATTENDANCE at the convention. Thus the DELEGATE ASSEMBLY is a "must" for almost every ATA Member who will be at Daytona Beach.

The potential distribution of the Delegate Assembly for the 55th Convention at Daytona Beach is distributed, as below-indicated, for the TWENTY-NINE states in which ATA has either or both annual members and life members:

"A New Door Has Opened"

It is now TWENTY THOUSAND annual members for ATA.

In the record, this credit will go to an energetic and devoted Past-President and presently a member of the ATA Board of Trustees. The now-memorable date is June 18, 1958. Mrs. Lillian Rogers Johnson of Clarksdale, Mississippi, transmitted 39 memberships for LaFayette County and 165 memberships from Hinds County to bring the annual-membership figure to date for 1957-58 up to 20,049. This transmittal also brough tthe record for the State of Mississippi up to 2,145 annual memberships.

For almost a decade, ATA has wistfully looked forward to achievement of 20,000 annual members. The direction has been STEADILY FORWARD with the "18,000" category for each of the preceding three years: 18,037 in 1954-55, 18,375 in 1955-56 and 18975 in 1956-57.

THE SEVENTEEN ATA-STATES of 1957-58 sharing in this signal annual-membership response are as follows:

Rank	State	ATA Region	This Year 9½ Months
1.	Alabama	II	6,246
2.	Georgia	II	3,197
3.	North Carolina	III	2,758
4.	South Carolina	III	2,588
5.	Mississippi	I	2,145
6.	Virginia	III	1,307
7.	Tennessee	V	883
8.	Florida	II	410
9.	Arkansas	I	286
10.	Maryland	IV	175
11.	Texas	VI	58
12.	District of Col.	IV	55
13.	New Jersey	IV	15
14.	Missouri	VI	14
15.	West Virginia	V	8
16.	Louisiana	I	3
17.	Delaware	IV	1
		TOTAL	20,049

ATA is organized in six regions. The identification of the region for each state has been above-indicated. The major membership-concentration is in Region II (Alabama-Florida-Georgia), Region III (North Carolina-South Carolina-Virginia), and Region I (Arkansas-Louisiana-Mississippi). The regional distribution of the 20,049 annual memberships received to date within the first nine and one-half months of the current ATA year (which ends on August 31) is as follows:

Region	Total	Region	Total
II	9,853	V	891
III	6,553	IV	246
I	2,434	VI	72

ATA AT CLEVELAND: JULY 1

Since 1926, there has been a JOINT COMMITTEE of The National Education Association and The American Teachers Association . . . with five members nominated by EACH of the two organizations.

On Tuesday afternoon, July 1, at the NEA convention at Cleveland, the NEA-ATA Joint Committe ewill stage its now-customary open-program session with addresses by DR. SEYMOUR L. WOLFBEIN, Chief of The Division of Manpower and Employment in the U. S. Department of Labor, and by DR. DAN W. DODSON of The School of Education of New York University.

ATA AT TEACHERS STATE ASSOCIATION OF TEXAS (At Waco)

"ATA is not out, but up." Within the past five years of rapid development and change in the expanding pattern of provision for school attendance of Negro children and in widening of professional-organization participation of Negro teachers, the query has recurrently been raised as to the continuing need for ATA. The increasingly-intensified resistance in the states of the major ATA-Membership constitute an inescapable evidence of the job yet to be done.

When ATA members meet at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach on July 13-14-15, there will be enthusiastic gratitude for the membership-achievement within these first nine and one-half months. There will also be reinforced effort to achieve the current-year goal of 22,500 annual members in ATA.

ATA AT ROME, ITALY: JULY 31-AUGUST 6

"The 1957 A T A Declaration"

EDITOR'S NOTE: As was the precedent of last year the abstracted summary of the ATA DECLARATION OF 1957 is carried in this pre-convention issue of THE BULLETIN . . . ahead of the 1957 Convention Report which will be carried in the July—1958 Professional-Number of THE BULLETIN for "first release" at the 55th Convention at Daytona Beach on July 13-14-15. This abstracted summary had prior release as ATA 1956-57 MEMO NO. 29 issued on August 15, 1957. Its inclusion in this pre-convention issue is intended to facilitate the deliberations BOTH of the 1958 Convention-Committee on Resolutions whicvh will have its initial meeting at Daytona Beach on Saturday afternoon, July 12 AND OF the members of THE ATA DELEGATE ASSEMBLY on Tuesday afternoon, July 15.

The Preamble statement was as follows:

"ACCUTELY CONSCIOUS OF THE SERIOUS AND CRUCIAL PROBLEMS BESETTING ALL AMERICANS IN THESE TRYING TIMES, WE, THE MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION, REDEDICATE OURSELVES TO THE FULFILLMENT OF OUR OBLIGATIONS AND TO THE ATTAINMENT OF OUR RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES IN BRINGING INTO COMPLETE FRUTITION THE DEMOCRACY IN WHICH WE SO DEEPLY BELIEVE."

A. The American Teachers Association expressed REAFFIRMATION OF ITS FAITH:

1. In the Democratic concept and willingness to cooperate in every effort to make it more functional and meaningful, and
2. In the validity of the basic documents underlying the structure of the American Government and involving their intent to prevent tyranny of temporary majorities and destruction of the rights of individual citizens, and
3. In the essential decency of the American people in whom there is the confident belief that the great current issues of freedom and rights will be finally settled in such a way as to sustain and guarantee the essential dignity and worth of every child and every adult, and
4. In the United Nations and in UNESCO for emphasis upon an expanded program of instruction and implementation in our public and private schools, and
5. In the conviction that Federal Aid to Education is both desirable and necessary for the achievement of "Equality of Educational Opportunity" for every American child.

B. The American Teachers Association makes THIS OFFICIAL DECLARATIVE APPEAL:

1. For the recognition of the importance of public schools, organized and administered in conformance with the concepts of Democracy, as an absolute necessity for the training of ALL people in America in order that there may be satisfactory adjustments to the now-inevitable socio-economic changes and in order that there may be the perpetuation of the AMERICAN way of life.
2. For the recognition of the interest and welfare of children as a FIRST consideration which will require an advantageous climate for learning, both in the classrooms and through wholesome attitudes of parents in the homes, and which makes most imperative the organization and promotion of study and discussion groups of educators and other community leaders who will seek to accelerate the process of achievement of good human relations.
3. For a concern respecting the serious shortage of school buildings which constitutes a national emergency and which warrants this appeal to the President and the members of the 85th Congress to place uppermost the interest and welfare of children in a decision to provide federal funds.
4. For a recognition of the importance of attitudes of fair play and goodwill in the associated utilization of services of ALL available educational personnel in EACH local community.
5. For support of those organizations (local, state and national) which seek to accomplish practices of employment, participation and representation of ALL teachers in ALL areas of education and adjustment.
6. For policies which will implement the RETENTION of competent teaching and supervisory personnel on the basis of objective qualifications determined solely by training, experience and excellence of character.
7. For increasing participation of Negroes on school boards as "towers of strength" in the working out of school problems affecting ALL citizens.
8. For the recognition by Negro teachers of their peculiar responsibility in the changing pattern and for their determined effort to avail themselves of every opportunity for adequate and thorough training incident to the acquisition and application of those skills which make for more effective teaching.
9. For continued effort of the various state association of teachers to utilize all resources for the full implementation of the law of the land.
10. For the President of the United States to exercise vigorous leadership in the existing crisis relating to the efforts to enact constructive and effective civil-rights legislation.

C. The American Teachers Association expresses COMMENDATION:

1. To those organizations, agencies, groups and individuals whoch and who are working for improvement of the practices of Democracy in our nation through local-level acceptance and implementation of the interpretations of the COURTS and through the counteracting of propaganda which would tend to minimize the dignity and worth of every human being in a nation dedicated to the guarantee of INDIVIDUAL EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY in employment, in education and in political participation.
2. To those leaders and peoples of exploited areas around the world who repudiate colonialism, caste and other derisive exploitation of oppressed peoples.
3. To those religious leaders and church groups for steps to eliminate conflicts and remove barriers which limit individuals in the realization of their maximum potentialities as full and useful citizens in a Democratic society.
4. To those members of the teaching profession whose herioc deeds and uncompromising resistance to coercion and intimidation have set good examples of sacrifice in the face of pressures and reprisals.
5. To those classroom teachers who have remained steadfast in their efforts to perform at high instructional levels despite survival-anxieties, limitations of academic and personal freedom and adverse working conditions.
6. To those state education associations and other teacher organizations which have opened membership and participation to ALL teachers.
7. To the Southern Education Foundation for stimulative contributions to the in-service professional improvement of educational leaders.
8. To such agencies as The Phelps-Stokes Fund, The Ford Foundation, The Kellogg Foundation, The Science Foundation and the National Scholarship Service for their sponsorship of significant improvement opportunities and to those educators who are accepting the responsibility for the identification and stimulation of students and teachers who might advantageously avail themselves of the opportunities being provided through these agencies.
9. To Thhe Association for the Study of Negro Life and History for its energetic effort to improve the level of human relations through the provision of historical materials and through the encouragement of study and instructional projects which will stimulate the mutual appreciation of all groups, races and nations.
10. To ATA for its project on "Education for Improved Human Relations" which has effected increased stimulation, interest, knowledge and skills in this area.
11. To the ATA Committee on "The Negro in School Encyclopedias" for its exploration of the availability and evaluation of the text-treatment of the Negro and for those associated plans to develop constructive suggestions of improved and additional materials for availability as teaching aids.

D. The American Teachers Association RECOMMENDS:

1. That local communities organize bi-racial committees, with proportional representation, which will work toward the reduction and elimination of racial tensions wherever they exist.
2. That a message be dispatched to the President of the United States to express the disappointment of ATA members over the elimination of the major provisions of Section 3 of the pending civil-rights legislation.
3. That continuing determined effort be made to advance salaries of teachers to levels that will be comparable with other professional and industrial incomes and that will make possible the retention of competent teachers as well as the attraction to the profession of persons of outstanding ability.
4. That all boards of education seek and/or continue to implement a policy of salary schedules that will have no differentials based on race, color or creed.
5. That there be continuing differential increases in state and local appropriations toward the goal of equalization of educational opportunity for all and without differentials because of rural-versus-urban or industrial-versus-non industrial areas.
6. That school boards and other policy making boards be staffed on the basis of competence and representation without discriminatory differences because of race.
7. That philanthropic foundations, institutions of higher education and local school systems seek to increase their services in promotion of an improved program of in-service education for teachers.
8. That teacher associations, schools, pupil groups and citizen groups give regular and increased financial support to The Association for the Study of Negro Life and History.
9. That all educators give membership support and associated participation-assistance to The American Teachers Association as one channel for the stimulation of a "working and living Democracy" in all areas of our community life.
10. That ATA continue its evolution of an expanded program for profesisonal development, teacher welfare, placement research, increased Field Service and increased size of membership.
11. That ATA accelerate implementation of provision for additional professional staff service in order to advance and to make more efffective the various programs and services of the organization.
12. That pertinent sections of these Declarations, Commendations and Recommendations be abstracted and dispatched to the thus-involved agencies and organizations.

ATA "Certificated" Life-Members Continue To Increase

In addition to its TWENTY THOUSAND annual members, ATA has AN ADDITIONAL THOUSAND life members.

The fee for life memberships is TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS. There is provision for installment-payment in annual minimum-amount of FIVE DOLLARS. The life-membership certificate and the life-membership card are issued AFTER the total payment has been completed. There are thus both "CERTIFICATED" and "INSTALLMENT-PAYMENT" life

Beginning nineteen years ago (1939-40) there was initiation of a "PERMANENT-FUND" project. All life-membership payments over the years have been segregated and preserved in a separate "interest-investment" account . . . for subsequent capital-outlay utilization in the evolving service-program of ATA.

There has been steady increase in the number of CERTISICATED (completed-payment) life members each year, as may be noted from the following exhibit:

9	1939-40	58	1949-50	51	1944-45	43	1954-55
8	1940-41	47	1950-51	40	1945-46	43	1955-56
12	1941-42	55	1951-52	39	1946-47	50	1956-57
2	1942-43	38	1952-53	78	1957-58	??	1957-58
18	1943-44	40	1953-54	44	1948-49

There is now the customary special-solicitation in the convention-month of JULY to secure the current-year installment-payment, to encourage completion of payments for the life-membership certificate, and to seek additional NEW life members. Communications are thut being dispatched accordingly and response is thus awaited.

The names of the 50 certificated life members of the preceding ATA year of 1956-57 (the administration of Dr. Theodore R. Speigner) and the names of the 14 certificated life members thus far in the current ATA year of 1957-58 (the administration of Dr. Charles W. Orr) ar eherewith indicated. WE NOW SOLICIT THIRTY-SIX COMPLETION-PAYMENTS IN ORDER THAT THE 1957-18 CURRENT-YEAR RECORD WILL BE AS GOOD AS THAT OF THE 1956-57 PRECEDING YEAR.

IN RE: DR. FRED ROUTH
JULY 14th AT DAYTONA BEACH

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Upon my return to my office this morning, Dr. J. T. Brooks informed me of his conversation with you respecting the interest of the American Teachers Association in having the presence and the participation of Dr. Fred Routh at our Convention at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach on Monday, July 14.

I appreciate your indication of the hope that Dr. Routh would arrange to be with us there and your indication that you would seek to do the follow-up contact.

I now enclose both the Convention-announcement issue of the BULLETIN and the ATA Memorandum #36. From these two enclosures, Dr. Routh can note our statements respecting the convention-theme.

We are particularly anxious to have his assistance for a 15-20 minute contribution at the symposium on that Monday morning and his services as a consultant for the interest-group discussion that Monday afternoon for Topic H "Community Attitudes and Inter-Group Liason". We are seeking to give consideration to the difficult area of public opinion and our present circumstance of restriction and severance of channels of communication and discussion as suggested in 8-b of ATA Memorandum #36. We will now have additional advantage of the inclusion in the Convention-Program issue of the BULLETIN of a very stimulating address at the NEA-ATA Joint Committee session in Cleveland yesterday afternoon. We would look forward to the analysis which Dr. Routh would make with respect to the nature of the problem and the types of efforts which might be undertaken in varied ways and different communities. We would look forward to additional conversation-clearance with Dr. Routh after he is back in his office.

I am taking the liberty to list the name of Dr. Routh (with a question mark) on our tentative program which now has to be sent to our printer. I do hope that we may have stimulation of his informative contribution.

THE AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION
THE 55th (1958) CONVENTION

No. 2 THE ATA CONVENTION-REPORTER July 14, 1958

LANIER KEYNOTES CONVENTION

Dr. R. O'Hara Lanier, Special Consultant with the Phelps-Stokes Fund, completely enraptured his audience with a spell binding discourse on "The Impact of Color in a World Crisis." The occasion was the second general session program of the 55th Convention held at 7:30 Sunday evening in Moore Gymnasium. Presiding was Dr. I. T. Brooks, Region II Vice President.

"The History of Civilization is a race between Education and Castastrophe," said Dr. Lanier. "This is not the first time, nor the last, when the world was divided into opposing camps, ideologies, and different philosophies. Today, the battle lines are clear: Democracy vs Totalitarianism; Reason, Love and Sympathy vs primacy of irrational will; struggle and competition vs survivial and cooperation.

"The World will not survive half oxcart and half cadillac. The vise of Communism is but an outward manifestation of the world revolution now in progress - a revolution of the "have-nots", not so much against the haves, as against their own lot in life.

Lanier asserted that the battleground of freedom and democracy lies in the uncommitted parts of the world - where color is king! Now is the time to break unbalanced and unnatural economic relationships and substitute another relationship based on equality.

Also appearing on the program was Dr. John A. Vander Waal, Head of the Department of Religion and Philosophy, Bethune-Cookman College, who lead the responsive readings and gave the invocation. After a selection by the host College Choir under the direction of Dr. William D. Wheeler, Jr., the following persons brought greetings to the convention:

Mr. James E. Huger, in behalf of Bethune-Cookman College; in behalf of the City of Daytone Beach, Major J. Hart Long; Superintendent John T. Smiley in behalf of the Volusia County Board of Instructors; Dr. Royal Puryear in behalf of the Florida Council of College Presidents; Dr. Gilbert Porter in behalf of the Florida State Teachers Association.

In response to all of these greetings, ATA President, Dr. Charles W. Orr stated that: "The American Teachers Association acknowledges with sincere appreciation the expressions extended to us. To appraise one must be always mindful of the means and ends. Our end is to give to America happy, healhy children who are mentally strong and unafraid to face conditions that their parents are creating. In ATA, this can be accomplished. Thank you Florida, Bethune-Cookman College, and Datona Beach for giving us the opportunity to confer, to plan, to resolve issues, and to think about appraising our circumstances in 1958.

Dear Gilbert:

It was good to be with you at the ATA annual convention in Daytona Beach. We here are all impressed, as I told you, with the speech of Rembert Patrick. We would like an additional twenty-five copies for distribution to key people in the South.

You will recall that I promised to send you the address of the man with CCD, and asked that you send him one hundred (100) copies for distribution to key agency personnel throughout the nation. Here is his address:

Mr. Arnold Aronson
Secretary, CCD

I thought the ATA convention was stimulating and important. I was glad to have a small part in it.

All good regards.

Mr. Arthur Dye, Jr.

Dear Arthur Dye:

Frankly I am at a loss as to a suggestion for employment possibilities for you. Your interest and qualifications have been thoroughly considered by those of us here at the Council; we would like to see you well-placed, but cannot come up with a specific suggestion at this time. The reason you have not heard from me sooner is that for a period of about two weeks it looked as if the Virginia Council might work out an arrangement whereby they could use a younger man working closely with their top policy people.

Bill Williams of the Florida Council on Human Relations may still be looking for someone to serve as an intern in his program. I had thought this slot was already filled. A letter to him would be in order; if you would like copies of the letters I have received from Clyde Barrington, Courtney Siceloff, and Morris Mitchell sent to him I would be glad to do this on word from you.

It is with real regret that we face the fact that we can turn up so few opportunities for someone who is ready to go to work. We will continue to keep you in mind, and you will be notified of any possibilities that come to our attention. You have our every good wish in your efforts to find satisfactory placement.

Sincerely,

Many thanks for your letter of July 16 with a check for my travel expenses to the Daytona Beach meeting of the ATA.

Sirs:

In the latter part of December, this past year, the Atlanta Area Chapter of the American Veterans Committee submitted to your committee for entry in the national contest on community projects a detailed plan for integration of foreign students into the Atlanta community. Since we have received no word as to the progress of the judging we are, of course, anxious to learn whether our project is still in the running for one of the top awards. We feel that this monetary support would help make possible an activity of great value to the Atlanta community.

An early reply advising of the status of the contest would be greatly appreciated.

Very sincerely yours,

Mr. Andrew E. Rice

Dear Mr. Rice:

I apologize for not answering your communication of October 8 enclosing the proposed community project of the Atlanta Chapter of the American Veterans Committee. I have been away from my office a good deal and a quick glance at the proposed community project convinced me that it needed very careful reading.

I am very much interested in the proposed community project. As I read, I noted some comments in the margin and I would like as I dictate just to comment upon aspects of the report.

1. I am wondering why the students from the Extension School of the University of Georgia are not available to the Atlanta Chapter. You know, I believe that I am also the General Secretary of the Committee on Friendly Relations among Foreign Students. I believe that we could make such a list of students available to you. If this would be helpful, let me know.

2. It is my belief that international students cannot actually achieve their educational objective unless community resources are utilized to supplement educational interests and objectives. The argument that institutions in the city of Atlanta are essential to the program is entirely correct.

3. I compliment the Atlanta Chapter on its forward inter-racial program, in its genius in planning such a program with full consideration of the realities of local segregation laws.

4. I would have some questions as to the effectiveness of four major meetings with nationally recognized personages. It is my own feeling that smaller meetings and the field trips far outweigh major meetings in importance. In the same manner on the proposed budget, I would say that $2,000 for the major meetings might better be distributed through the twenty minor meetings, the field trips, and the clerical services.

I do not know when I am likely to be in the South because I am planning a trip to the Near and Middle East shortly after the end of the New Year. However, I would like very much to have the opportunity to meet the Atlanta Chapter of the American Veterans Committee I hope sometime this present academic year. I do get into Washington frequently, and I hope that I may have the pleasure of meeting and talking with you.

You will recognize, I am sure, that in my capacity as President of the National Association of Foreign Students Advisers or the General Secretary of the committee on Friendly Relations among students I have nothing to do with the program of the Williamsburg meetings. I will, however, be present in Williamsburg. I am sure that Mr. James Kline of the Institute office in Washington will make the necessary arrangements for you for consideration of this plan at the Williamsburg meetings.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ J. Benjamin Schmoker
President

Dear Ken:

Enclosed are thermofax copies of a few items bearing on Legion-segregationist relations. You probably know of the several incidents covered, but these clippings may add a detail or two.

You will see that one of the enclosures is a reproduction of the WCC's monthly paper reprinting The Firing Line's smear of the Southern Regional Council. This issue of The Firing Line has been reproduced and distributed in some quantity by the Georgia Education Commission, the official state agency for segregationist propaganda. So that you can see how ill-based the smear is, I'm also sending along our analysis of it.

You probably know that The Firing Line has also run an article or two of the same sort attacking the NAACP. If you don't have this and need it, we could probably turn it up with a little effort.

The picture of Faubus receiving the Legion award was a real hair-curler. We'll be looking forward with interest to the results of your current study.

Dear Harold:

We are doing a study of how the American Legion has cooperated with, been used by and associated with the White Citizens Councils and other hate groups in the South. We are having a very difficult time getting much information on this and it occurs to me that you might have some knowledge of this. We would very much appreciate your advice and counsel on the subject. Do you have any information or know where and how we could get information of such activities? We will be most grateful for your suggestions.

Legion Award To Faubus

This month this space displays a copy of a photograph showing the presentation of another Americanism Award given one day before AVC's. This Award, given by the American Legion, goes to Gov. Orville Faubus, second from the left. Also shown are, extreme left, Erie Cocke, Jr., former National Commander of the Legion who made the presentation to Faubus, and, to the right of Faubus, National Legion Vice Commander Harry Miller of Fayetteville, W. Va., and Dr. Garland Murphy, Little Rock.

The BULLETIN is convinced that these two photographs rank near the top of the reasons why AVC, celebrating its 15th anniversary, has achieved a unique place among veterans organizations and has proved its worth in the struggle for a "More Democratic and Prosperous America and a More Stable World." Happily we can report that we have the enthusiastic applause of members throughout the nation as evidenced by a few samples of their response reproduced on Page 2.

National Leaders At Convention

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Nearly a score of national leaders from Congress, government and leading organizations will be at AVC's 15th Anniversary Convention, April 24-27, the Convention Committee headed by former National Chairmen Bill Mauldin and Mickey Levine have announced.

Levine

Already commitments have been received from several members of Congress to be at the Convention and other plans for additional figures from Washington are being developed daily, Mauldin and Levine announced.

Mauldin

Among the national dignitaries to be at the Convention will be many who have formerly held high positions in AVC and thus will not only be able to speak to the delegates and guests on matters of importance to the nation but will be able to relate their views to the continuing program of AVC.

The Convention Committee states that the announcement of the full list of the leaders who will be at the Convention will be made in a few days and all Chapters and delegates and those attending the Convention will be informed as soon as all of the final plans are completed. The next issue of the BULLETIN will carry a full story on those who will attend the Convention and participate in its deliberations.

AVC Board Acts On The Recession, Vets Affairs

CHICAGO, ILL.—AVC's National Board took action in three major areas in its quarterly meeting here.

In a major statement on the nation's economy, which was presented to Congress by Senator Paul Douglas of Illinois, the AVC Board called for a rapid expansion of social and public works activities by the Federal government to meet the present economic crisis. A full text of the statement in reprinted on Page 3 of this issue of the BULLETIN.

On veterans affairs the Board called for a big reduction in non-essential spending for veterans programs with the money saved to be used for expanding Federal assistance to education, health and other vitally needed social welfare activities. A text of this statement which received nationwide press association and radio and TV coverage also appears on Page 3 of the BULLETIN.

In other action the Board began a sweeping study of international affairs, discussing the Rockefeller Report, the Gaither Report and other recent studies on American foreign policy. AVC International Affairs Commission Chairman Bernard J. Cogan declared: "The work begun by the Board and carried on by the Chapters and members leading up to the April Convention will keep AVC in the leadership in this vital area.

The Board also adopted an AVC study on the Status of Forces Agreements, set plans to call upon the nation's governors to again declare a "Servicemen's Voting Week," and developed final plans for the April Convention.

The Board was heartened by reports for the Administrative Department headed by Sam Tappis of New York that 1958 membership was running well ahead of 1957 and that overall support of AVC was also surpassing 1957.

Washington Site Of Many National Conferences

WASHINGTON D. C.—Many of the nation's and the world's problems may not be closer to solution because of the inactivity of the government here, but this city has never been busier with meetings, conferences, and dinners. AVC is lending its support and sponsorship to many of these activities.

Already on the schedule are:

Birkhead Chairs

February 25-26—Conference on Foreign Aid with the White House, Congress and national organizations participating. AVC Executive Director Kenneth M. Birkhead will chair one of the special workshop sessions.

Birkhead

March 6-7—10th Annual Conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House. AVC is a sponsoring organization and Birkhead, Clearing House Vice Chairman for Civil Liberties, will chair a panel on "Individual Freedom and the Common Defense" introducing John A. Johnson, General Counsel of the Department of the Air Force, Walter Millis, the historian and author, and Dr. Harrison Scott of the California Institute of Technology.

March 10-12 — National Workshop for Religious Liberals. Birkhead will participate in a panel on Housing. Other participants in the Workshop include Herblock, Senators Paul Douglas, Richard Neuberger, Joseph Clark, Jacob K. Javits, and Hubert Humphrey, Director of the Bureau of the Budget Percival Brundage, Marquis Childs, and Paul Blanshard.

AVC Dinner

March 14—Washington AVC Chapter's 10th Annual Bill of Rights Award Dinner. Honorees include Senator Paul Douglas, Angier Biddle Duke, President of the International Rescue Committee, Morris Milgram, famed builder of open-occupancy housing projects, and David Scull, who is often referred to as the "conscience of the decent people of Virginia who are fighting against the segregationists and racists of that state."

AVC To Support Reciprocal Trade

WASHINGTON, D. C.—AVC will join an impressive array of national leaders and organizations when it presents its views on the reciprocal trade program on March 19th to the Congress.

A staunch supporter of the principles of reciprocal trade since its inception, AVC will call for a five-year extension of the trade act and also for government assistance for those few industries who are hard hit by the competition of foreign trade.

AVC has worked closely with the Committee for a National Trade Policy which has spearheaded the liberal trade proponents' efforts on Capitol Hill. The organization participated this month in an educational program on the reciprocal

WASHINGTON, D. C.—AVC joined six other national organizations in an action supporting civil liberties this month.

In a letter to a Special House Judiciary Subcommittee Congress was urged not to override the Supreme Court ruling in the Mallory case. The organizations stated that such a reversal "would be tantamount to a congressional declaration of support for illegal police action" and a reversal of the "trend of the past several hundred years away from convictions out of the mouths of the accused."

The other organizations signing the letter were: ADA, ACLU, Friends Committee on National Legislation, UAW, IUE, and the Workers Defense League.

Citing Bar Association studies which "leave no doubt that indigent and ignorant defendants in the federal courts are daily being denied their constitutional and statutory rights in the course of criminal proceedings against them," the organizations' letter urged the Judiciary Subcommittee "to address itself to these problems and not devote its energies to eliminating one of the most vital safeguards of the rights of all of us as free men."

AVC Looks Forward

AVC's 15th Anniversary Convention, April 24-27, can well be the most important Convention in AVC's history. It must not be a Convention of meaningless phrases and platforms covering the waterfront and yet grappling with no problem.

The answer that most conventions bring forth today is, if we're worried about Sputniks, let's build more Sputniks. The answer to the threat of Russian military strength seems to be to build bigger guns and planes than the Russians. AVC Looks Forward

AVC's 15th Anniversary Convention, April 24-27, can well be the most important Convention in AVC's history. It must not be a Convention of meaningless phrases and platforms covering the waterfront and yet grappling with no problem.

The answer that most conventions bring forth today is, if we're worried about Sputniks, let's build more Sputniks. The answer to the threat of Russian military strength seems to be to build bigger guns and planes than the Russians. The answer to economic difficulties at home seems to be to pump a little more money into the economy and hope that somehow, some of it gets to some of the people who need it.

Maybe the answers satisfy some of the people. Maybe they satisfy the politicians. But they shouldn't satisfy AVC. In fact, we might say if they satisfy AVC then AVC has outlived its usefullness, its ability to create, its unique qualities of looking ahead and thinking ahead.

Leadership Built Reputation

AVC was thinking ahead on housing after World War II and led the fight for a decent housing program. AVC conceived and worked for the establishment of a Bradley Commission five years before the President set up the Commission. AVC called for the censure of Joe McCarthy three years before the Senate acted. These are examples of the kind of leadership, foresight, and action AVC has been noted for, and on which it has built its reputation and respect.

The 15th Convention must come up with comparable thinking and action. Every AVCer and AVC Chapter should have discussed and collected thoughts and recommendations on the Rockefeller Report, on what has been published of the Gaither Report, and on the other studies on defense and foreign policy in a space age.

The 15th Convention must be ready to make its concrete proposals, backed by a program, to look forward on defense, disarmament, foreign policy, national affairs, and veterans affairs.

Won't Win Popularity Contest

This issue of the BULLETIN reports the action of AVC's National Board in calling for a reduction in unnecessary Federal expenditures for veterans programs and the use of this money for the whole population by building schools, expanding health research and other welfare programs that will benefit citizens-veterans most by benefiting the whole of the nation.

This action by the AVC Board is certainly not designed to win any popularity contest. It will be violently attacked by the professional veterans and by many politicians. Yet it is this kind of forceful, realistic and forward looking action that has made it possible for AVC to carve its niche in the nation's recent history. It is the kind of action that must be taken at the Convention.

Even though this kind of action is not easy to take, we have a feeling that it will be taken and that the 15th Anniversary will go down as one of the most productive and meaningful Conventions in AVC's history.

Sound A Tocsin

Please, sir, sound a tocsin for all who will frame our platforms and resolutions in the Poconos in April. They'd better be very, very good this year.

The usual 199 bored feet of platform just isn't going to do. We've already got our long-playing record on virtually all questions of public policy.

Our 1958 convention could be both unique and heroic if we could come out with but one or two great pronouncements. It is not within the writer's poor powers to prescribe how this can be accomplished—but there may be a good lesson for us in what William E. Bonn had to say about a pretty fair publicist on U. S. ways and means named Abraham Lincoln . . .

Resolutions Passed By National Board

Statement On Veterans Programs

The cost of veterans programs, the largest item in the Federal budget outside of defense and interest, can be enormously reduced, possibly by as much as $1 billion dollars a year without reducing necessary veterans' service and without reducing aid to disabled veterans or survivors of the war dead.

The following are areas in which the cost of the veterans programs can be reduced:

VA Operations

1. Operation of Veterans Administration offices. For example, a recent report indicated that the Cleveland VA Regional office had reduced its yearly expenditures by $4 million between 1950 and 1958, while, at the same time, increasing the number of cases it handles. If comparable reductions were made in the other 67 VA installations more than $250 million could be saved in this one activity alone.

2. Tightening restrictions in the free, non-service connected disability use of VA hospitals by those able to pay for hospital care or by those already covered by private or company group hospital plans.

Other Economies

3. Including social security income in figuring a veterans' total income for purposes of non-service connected pensions. AVC said that there is an income limitation on receiving non-service connected pensions, but that social security payments are not included.

4. Integration of the veterans housing program into the Federal Housing Administration to eliminate the duplication of administrative costs for both programs.

5. Reduction and even elimination in some cases of payments for many service-connected disabilities which have proved of absolutely no hinderance to the veteran in carrying on his livelihood.

Savings Benefit Whole Nation

The $1 billion saved could be used for many and worthwhile activities by our government. Some of it could be used to give needed additional aid to the truly disabled veterans and their survivors. The remaining funds can be used for health research, education, and many other welfare services that will benefit the whole population and therefore the veterans who really benefit most by the general good of the nation's health, economy and general well-being.

Statement On Nation's Economy

While U. S. military superiority is being seriously challenged, national production, national income and job opportunities are falling. Only unemployment and the cost of living are rising in the United States.

Pious statements from government leaders in Washington that the difficulties will ease in three months, six months, or some day in the future, will not solve the problems of those who are suffering now, and who may be facing more troubles in the months to come.

Urge Accelerated Programs

The American Veterans Committee believes that the present serious national unemployment, business failures, and falling consumer buying power demand immediate and forceful governmental action.

Rather than cutting back on the present level of social services as the Administration has proposed, which will only further injure those people already suffering from the current conditions, AVC urges, in addition to the contemplated increases in defense spending, which we support, immediate adoption or accleration of programs of:

1. School construction
2. Housing construction
3. Highway construction
4. Other public works construction

In addition, we urge increases in social security benefits, extension of the maximum period for payments of unemployment compensation beyond the present 26-week limit, increase in the personal exemptions for income tax from $600 to $800, and the elimination of unjustified tax subsidies such as statutory depletion for oil and other minerals, dividends credit and deduction, and others.

Improve Economic Circumstances

Such a program will not only strengthen the national economy but will do so by directly improving the economic circumstances of the vast majority of Americans as distinguished from the trickle down philosophy of the present national Administration. At the same time it will produce additional revenues from increased business and the elimination of tax subsidies.

The citizens-veterans of the nation benefit most from the strength of the nation's economy. They are suffering now with the rest of the citizens because of our current economic difficulties and the threat of worsening conditions.

Encampment For Citizenship

The Encampment for Citizenship has called upon AVC again to help select and sponsor applicants for the 1958 Encampment sessions. They will be held this summer, from late June to early August at the Fieldston School in New York City and International House in Berkeley, California.

This is the thirteenth session of the outstanding summer program to provide special education in citizens affairs to young men and women between the ages of 18 and 23 who are leadership potential. Participants in the Encampment have the experience of living together and working in a self-governing, democratic community that represents most of the cultural and geographic segments of the American community.

Some scholarship aid for Encampment applicants sponsored by AVC is available. AVCers who know of qualified young men and women who would profit from this exciting summer session should contact the national office, 1830 Jefferson Place, N.W., Washington, D. Pre-Convention Rules

Here is a summary of the most important provisions of the Pre-Convention Rules for the AVC Fifteenth Anniversary Convention (April 25-27, 1958, Pocono Manor, Pocono, Pa.). The complete text of the rules will be sent to all chapter chairmen. The new changes to the rules are printed in italics.

Delegates: Five types: 1) chapter delegates; 2) members-at-large holding proxies of at least nine (9) other members-at-large; 3) chairman of state councils; 4) elective national officers; 5) members of the National Planning Committee.

Chapter Representation: On the basis of one delegate for every ten (10) members (or major fraction thereof) in good standing; each chapter, however, is entitled to at least four (4) delegates and no chapter is entitled to more than ten (10) delegates. Each chapter will designate at least one delegate to serve on each of the four convention committees: International, National, Veterans, and Internal affairs. Chapter membership, for the purpose of convention representation, will be based on the national membership records as of November 1, 1955.

Proxies: Chapters which are unable to send one or more of their own members as delegates may elect any other member or members of AVC as their proxy-delegates. A member-at-large may give his proxy (proxy forms to be furnished by the National Office) to any delegate or to another member-at-large but such a member-at-large must hold at least nine (9) such proxies to be accredited. A proxy holder has the power of transferring his proxy to any other eligible member. Elective and appointive national officers and employees of the National Office may not hold proxies. Proxies must be mailed to the National Office at least fifteen (15) days before the convention.

Chapter elections: Chapter delegates may be nominated and elected up to fifteen (15) days prior to the National Convention. Notices of meetings held to nominate or elect delegates must be mailed to all chapter members and to the National Office at least seven (7) days prior to the meetings. Delegates may be elected by mail balloting.

Alternates: Each chapter is entitled to as many alternates as delegates.

Registration fee: $5.00 per delegate and alternate.

Platform:

a. The chairman of the permanent Commissions will submit the first draft platform to the National Office no later than seventy (70) days before the opening of the National Convention.

b. The draft platforms shall be sent to all chapters no later than sixty (60) days before the opening of the National Convention.

c. The chapters shall send all recommendations for changes and/or additions to the respective Commission chairmen no later than thirty (30) days before the opening of the National Convention.

d. The final proposed draft platforms shall be sent to all duly elected delegates and alternates, together with instructions as to how proposals for amendments may be made, no later than ten (10) days before the opening of the National Convention.

POCONO MANOR, PA.—Another of the many special features of AVC's 15th Anniversary Convention headquarters are the beautifully equipped tennis courts at Pocono Manor Inn. The courts, added to the top-flight golf course, the boating facilities, and the beauties of the Poconos in the spring make this the most beautiful AVC Convention site in the organization's history.

And, of course, all of these are in addition to the platform writing, resolution work, debating and caucusing that are always highlights and the stimulation of every AVC Convention.

SMALL FRY

This year's convention will again be a "family affair" with the small fry having a number of activities planned around them. There will be games, supervised play, and excursions, to divert the small and not so-small youngsters. The woodland surroundings of the Pocono Manor provide an unusually attractive setting for the children's events.

At the last convention, Barbara Sobernheim and Barbara Birkhead supervised these activities. Plans are now under way to have an enlarged program under the guidance of the staff and volunteers.

Chapters To Start Work On Platform

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The draft platforms, developed by AVC's National Affairs, International Affairs, and Veterans and Armed Forces Affairs Commission are being completed and distributed to Chapters throughout the nation to start the work of preparing the final drafts to be considered at the 15th Anniversary Convention, April 24-27.

The platform on Veterans and Armed Forces affairs has been sent to the Chapters. The platform on National Affairs is being reproduced for distribution now, and the International Affairs document will be completed at an early date for distribution.

The early work by the Chapters on the platform is of great importance for the coming Convention, for much of the success of an orderly and successful Convention will depend on having the platforms in well-organized form for consideration by the delegates.

Furthermore, in this first year of the space age there will be much that will be new and subject to discussion in the platforms. The early efforts by the Chapters will allow full deliberations by all AVCers on the platforms and the development of the most meaningful planks to guide AVC during the coming year.

Chapters are urged to hold meetings and "bull-sessions" on the platforms to stimulate full debate throughout AVC. All of the suggestions and comments from Chapters will be considered by the Platform Committee at the Convention for presentation to the Plenary Sessions.

Deadline for Incentive Plan Soon

NEW YORK, N. Y.—No actual deadline for Incentive Plan Ads for the 15th Anniversary Convention Journal has been set by the Journal Committee but, since the dates for the Convention are now less than two months away, a deadline will have to be set soon.

Until the deadline is set all those who want to attend the Convention can take advantage of the generous provisions of the Incentive Plan which will provide a weekend for one or two at no cost at the beautiful Convention site for the selling of ads in the Journal. The plan works as follows.

A $25 Ad—free banquet ticket for the gala Saturday night banquet.

A $50 Ad—Special arrangements to cover the cost of Banquet tickets and other meals for the Convention.

A $100 Ad—A complete weekend for one—this covers room, all meals and the Banquet.

A $200 Ad—A complete weekend for two—this covers room, all meals and the Banquet for two.

Many AVCers have already taken advantage of the Journal Incentive Plan. They have found local businessmen, organizations and others more than willing to take ads.

Crystal Anniversary

Of course, the fact that this is AVC's 15th Anniversary adds much impetus to buying tickets. Many want to buy ads to help the organization celebrate its Crystal Anniversary.

An ad form is printed below to help you get started. If you need additional forms or if you would find a copy of last year's Journal helpful in contacting prospects, don't hesitate to write to AVC Convention Program, 45 East 65th St., New York, N. Y.

AVC's 15th Birthday Parties

From New York to California, from Massachusetts to Georgia, AVC Chapters are holding parties in honor of AVC's 15th Anniversary.

AVC Administrative Director Sam Tappis states that before the conclusion of all the parties, several thousands AVCers will have participated in the Crystal Anniversary celebrations.

In Washington, D. C., AVC founder and former National Chairman and Board member Gil Harrison, publisher of the NEW REPUBLIC was honored.

In New York more than 20 parties have been held. Chicago, Ill., led with parties in the middle west. The party there was held at the time of the National Board meeting and members of the Board were honored guests at the party.

National Chairman William R. Ming, Jr., has appeared at several of the parties including that held in Minneapolis. Ming also appeared at the special 15th Anniversary activities at Little Rock, Arkansas, when AVC presented its Americanism Award to the nine pupils at Little Rock's Central High School.

Although the parties were held for fun and relaxation, typical of AVC is the photograph below as former National Chairman and now Board member Mickey Levine is shown in the midst of the celebrants in serious discussion with several of the Chicago AVCers.

Dear Ken:

We are always glad to cooperate with AVC and will make such further efforts as we can to turn up information for your study through our normal channels. However, I don't think we had better undertake any formal responsibility for the project, for two reasons. First, we are already loaded beyond the capacity of our staff. Secondly, and quite frankly, we have so many battles to fight already that we are not eager to get involved in a knock-down-drag-out with the Legion.

This doesn't alter the fact that a temporary project person employed by AVC would have our cooperation and, I'm sure, that of other organizations with like purposes.

Do let me know what you finally work out and if we can be of further help in this or any other matter of common concern.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Harold:

Thank you very much for your letter and enclosures. You have thrown more light and given us more information on our subject than we have run into so far -- which gives me an idea. Would it be at all possible for you people to do this project - at least a pilot one to begin with, and then if, in your judgement a more thorough one could be done then go ahead with that? We have already raised some money for this and hope to be getting more. But, you know AVC, we will not be able to raise too much. Please advise me as to whether you think the SRC could give us its professional help on our project and then perhaps vaguely what kind of a project you visualize. We could get people to do research in New York (where we feel the NAACP files should reveal somethings) and here in Washington where you might have suggestions for library research. That would leave the rest up to you or one of your associates, directing the thing and ferreting out information in the South.

Please let me have your reactions to this, as to whether the idea is reasonable and feasible.

Sincerely,

Ken

AVC Initiative Ends Roanoke Segregation

WASHINGTON—Restrooms in the Roanoke, Virginia, railroad station are no longer designated "White Ladies" and "Colored Women" thanks to the initiative of an AVC staff member.

While travelling by train in March 1957, Mrs. Mabel Hairston, who has served for more than ten years as an AVC employee and now holds the position of National Comptroller, noted the segregated facilities. Upon her return to Washington, AVC brought the offensive signs to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Over a year passed while the Commission investigated the complaint. Finally, fourteen months later, the ICC announced that the case was closed: toilet facilities at the Roanoke terminal henceforth will be open to all without segregation.

Dear Mickey:

I find that I never replied to your letter of November concerning the proposed survey of discrimination against Negro servicemen and veterans. This is just to let you know that my silence doesn't indicate any lack of interest or willingness to cooperate in whatever plan is finally agreed upon.

Shortly after your letter was received, I had a talk with Vernon Eagle and, as he requested, gave him such ideas as I had about the fact-finding aspect of the project. I am all too conscious of the lack of systematic, documented evidence on this subject; we are all familiar in general with the discriminatory pattern, but proving it in court -- or in Congress -- is another matter. Hence my suggestion that someone be commissioned to do a fast but thorough job of fact-finding before you and Lou Warshaw come South. Bob Thompson would be a good choice.

In any case, call on me and the Southern Regional Council for whatever help we can give.

Cordially,

"CITIZENS FIRST, VETERANS SECOND"

November 19, 1959

Mr. Harold C. Fleming

Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Fleming:

The American Veterans Committee (AVC) has formulated plans to conduct a nationwide investigation to determine to what extent the Negro veteran has been discriminated against in attempting to obtain his legal rights and privileges under the GI Bill of Rights, including housing, education, farm and business loans, disability claims, pensions and hospitalization benefits. The survey will transcribe somewhat the boundary of veterans' rights and include treatment of Negro servicemen on and off military bases, as well as personnel and hiring policies toward Negro veterans in private industry and in all branches of government.

Our schedule includes a survey on a uniform basis in selected Northern and border states (Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, Ohio, Illinois, Oregon and California) conducted by local AVC units and sending to Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Arkansas, Lou Warshaw, a Board member and myself.

The survey will include on the spot reviews of government bases and Veterans Administration facilities and also interviews with officials and Negro veterans. It will also provide information concerning use of various benefits by white veterans in these areas, as contrasted with Negro veterans.

Since Congress enacted the GI Bill and other post war veterans' legislation, billions of dollars have been appropriated. We have a legitimate curiousity to learn how the Negro veteran fared.

There are now plans to extend the GI Bill to peacetime veterans. Passage of such legislation is inevitable. Now is the time to learn how legislation for World War II and Korean veterans was carried out and to immediately provide for a fair distribution of benefits for the future.

Our completed survey will be brought to the attention of the President, the two National Conventions of the major political parties and to all organizations concerned with civil rights.

Dear Harold:

I am sending you a copy of our outline of the AVC audit with emphasis only on the interviews with Negro veterans. We have obtained remarkable cooperation from the Defense Department, the Veterans Administration, and various civil rights groups.

You can be of inestimable assistance in helping us set up contacts directly with Negro veterans in the various communities we plan to visit. This is the part of the audit that we need to be able to meet directly with people in order to obtain from them the mass of statistical material necessary for these purposes.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Dear Mickey:

It was a pleasure seeing you and Lou, and I am glad to find that you successfully penetrated McClelland's would-be iron curtain.

I'll look forward to seeing your report, from which we can learn a great deal.

Meanwhile, we'll be prepared to cooperate in every way we can with your additional survey next fall.

Dear Harold:

Lou, and I, want to thank you for your hospitality, interest, and co-operation.

We are hopeful that many things can, and will, be done.

Some have happened already. In Charlotte, Montgomery, Tuskegee, Jackson, the Delta area of Mississippi, and Little Rock, negro veterans are forming associations, more or less connected with AVC, which we are servicing.

After we have finished this Audit, next fall, we will initiate another, dealing with the Reserve, National Guard, and ROTC.

Looking forward to continued co-operation.

Sincerely,

Mickey Levine

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Attorney General William P. Rogers has been asked by the American Veterans Committee to institute an investigation of what AVC terms "official incitement to riot" in Alabama and Georgia as a result of Negro "sitdowns".

Dr. Paul Cooke, Chairman of AVC's National Affairs Commission, supported the contention of incitement by quoting Mayor Earl James of Montgomery, Alabama, as warning "the Negro people of this community that the tempers of the white citizenry of our city are being pushed to a point beyond their power to control".

Also cited by AVC was a statement by Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook that demands by Negroes for food counter service is public advocacy of violation of Georgia laws that will be met with both local and state resistance. AVC's letter quoted from a February 24 editorial in the Atlanta Constitution which said, "It seems to us that this is an example of grave official irresponsibility. For the State's Attorney General to say that he expects violence is an encouragement to those who might wish to create it".

AVC informed Attorney General Rogers that in its view such conduct by State officials will lead to an infringement of the constitutional rights of Negroes in the areas involved to a degree sufficient to warrant the intervention of the United States Department of Justice.

To Achieve a More Democratic and Prosperous America and a More Stable World

2 March 1960

My dear Mr. Rogers:

National Chairman Mickey Levine and Vice Chairman Louis S. Warshaw of the American Veterans Committee are presently conducting a survey of the status of Negro veterans in Veterans Administration facilities and Defense Department Installations in certain areas of the South. Similar surveys are being conducted in northern areas by other members of AVC.

A by-product of the survey in the South has been the disclosure of evidence that public officials and certain newspapers, particularly in Alabama and in Georgia, are inciting their communities to riot as a result of Negro "sitdowns."

Enclosed with this letter are photostated reprints of newspaper accounts and editorials indicative of the temper of certain officials in Georgia and in Montgomery, Alabama.

The purpose of this letter is to urgently request that the Department of Justice conduct an investigation of this situation in both areas with a view to preventing any infringement of civil rights or civil liberties among Negro residents of the areas involved. Your cooperation will be genuinely appreciated.

Respectfully,

Paul Cooke
Chairman
National Affairs Commission

GOVERNMENT AND LIBERTY

I. The Nation's freedom - the Bill of Rights

1. We reaffirm the basic right of all Americans to due process of law, the right to counsel and to freedom from unlawful search and seizure. We oppose all efforts to suppress freedom to believe, speak, write, assemble, criticize, and dissent.

2. A. We urge the passage and enforcement of Federal legislation and regulations which will insure to the citizens of the United States and of the several States the full measure of their privileges and immunities of due process of law and the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to them by the Constitution, regardless of race, color, ancestry, national origin, religion, or sex.

B. In furtherance of the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court calling upon the States to integrate their school systems "with all deliberate speed" we urge the passage of Federal legislation which will:

(1) Direct the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to give technical assistance to communities engaged in integration - as well as draw up plans for any community which has failed to initiate such integration plans of its own.

(2) Give the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare the further duty of seeking assistance from the Attorney General to enforce the above through all legal means at hand.

(3) Provide Federal funds to help support school systems deprived of State financing because of State or local laws designed to hinder or evade integration.

(4) Empower the Attorney General to seek injunctions or proceed under law on behalf of persons claiming deprivation of civil rights or liberties.

C. We urge the enactment of Federal, State, and local legislation to prevent discrimination, whether through segregation or otherwise, because of race, color, national origin, ancestry, religion, or old age and also the denial of equal opportunity in:

(1) Voting: (a) by abolition of poll tax and any other undue restriction or voting rights; (b) by legislation which makes it mandatory for all State voting registrars to maintain their records; (c) by legislation empowering the Justice Department to obtain such records under orders from any Federal District Court.

(2) Housing: By legislation aimed at cutting off Government aid at all levels to builders practicing racial or religious discrimination.

(3) Employment: By creation of a Federal Commission on equal job opportunity under Government contracts; and legislation at all levels aimed against segregation in employment.

(4) The use of facilities and accommodations open to the public.

D. We urge inclusion in all Federal legislation making loans or grants to states, municipalities or private institutions, of a provision requiring these loans or grants to be used without discrimination on the basis of race, color, ancestry, national origin, religion or sex (recognizing, however, the right of any institution to limit its religious services to the members of a particular religious denomination or to limit its services to the members of one sex).

E. We urge protection by Federal law of all members of the Armed Forces from physical violence, because of race, color, ancestry, national origin or religion.

F. We urge making lynching a Federal crime, as well as making provisions for compensation to the families of lynching victims.

G. We favor Federal legislation making it a crime to bomb or to conspire to bomb school, church and other public and quasi-public property.

H. We believe in the principal of church-state separation and are therefore opposed to the use of public funds for church-administered schools, the display of religious symbols on public property and sectarian instruction in public schools.

I. We favor freedom from censorship of newspapers, magazines, radio, television, motion pictures and other media by the Post Office, Customs Bureau, police departments and other units of government as well as by private pressure-groups.

J. We oppose wire-tapping and electronic eavesdropping, whether by private individuals or Government officials, elected or appointed.

3. A. The right against self-incrimination. A personal right to refuse to testify on any matter which he fears may tend to incriminate him a fundamental constitutional right which should not be diluted or impaired. No inference of guilt in any legal proceeding should be drawn in regards to any person solely because such person exercises this right.

B. The right to travel. The right of an American citizen to travel abroad should not be arbitarily abridged by the Federal Government. A citizen should be free to leave this country without an "exit permit" which the passport has in recent years in large part become.

C. Immigration and Naturalization. We urge revision of the immigration and naturalization laws to eliminate racial and religious discrimination, to eliminate the outdated national origins quota system and to do away with distinction in the treatment of native born and naturalized citizens.

We urge that all hearings on immigration and naturalization matters be subject to the safeguards of the Administrative Procedures Act.

We urge revision of our nationality laws to remove from them the provisions on loss of citizenship except for loss of citizenship through voluntary expatriation.

We urge a revision of the statutes and practices governing deportation

(a) to provide a reasonable statute of limitations precluding deportation of any person on the basis of any act or event which occurred prior to the limitation period.

(b) to preclude deportation of those charged with activities which were legal when undertaken.

(c) to preclude deportation of those who arrived in the United States as children and who have spent the major portion of their lives in the United States.

II. The Nation's Government

1. Freedom of information: The right of the people to full knowledge of governmental affairs must not be abridged, except where disclosure would imperil the national security or where disclosure would, without substantial public benefit, encroach on the right of the individual to personal liberty or freedom.

2. Congress: We urge proper changes in the rules of the Congress of the United States which will make it possible for the majority of the Members to vote cloture or close debate on legislation after a reasonable period, and which will make merit, not tenure alone the standard to be used in the selection of committee chairmen.

3. State and Federal relations: Federal payments to the States for aid to schools in federally impacted areas, for assistance to the blind, disabled, dependent children, and the aged, for slum clearance, waste treatment facilities, vacational education, and hospital construction must be continued. We favor Federal supervision which assures minimum standards in the performance of these cooperative programs.

4. State and local government: We urge reapportionment within the States to provide for equitable representation based on current population distribution.

5. The Federal civil service:

A. Apart from discharges based on reorganization of Government activities or reductions in force, Government employees should be discharged only for cause and through due process of law. The employee should be presented with a written statement of charges, have the right to a hearing before an impartial board. He shall have the right to present evidence, be confronted with adverse witnesses, cross-examine witnesses, and receive a transcript of the hearing free of charge. Action toward his separation from the Government service should be taken only on the basis thus made.

B. The rights granted to veterans in the Veterans Preference Act in regard to discharge procedures and appeals should be extended to all Government employees except those in probationary status.

6. District of Columbia: We urge that the District of Colubia receive:

A. The right to full local self-government;

B. The right to vote in presidential elections and to representation in the electoral college in proportion to its population;

C. The right to elect one nonvoting Commissioner to sit in the House of Representatives and to represent the District in Congress;

D. A fixed annual contribution in lieu of real and personal property taxes on federally owned property within the District of Columbia.

ECONOMIC SECURITY

III. Basic economic policy

1. We continue to support the Employment Act of 1946 which states it is the policy of the Government to create and maintain "conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities, including self-employment, for those able, willing, and seeking to work and to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

2. To insure the interest of the consumer, we urge Congress to establish a Department of the Consumer, to be headed by a Secretary of Cabinet rank.

3. We know from our national experience that maximum prosperity, without inflation, can only be attained and maintained so long as the national economy continues to expand its consumption and investment with increased leisure at a rate equal to our population growth, plus rising productivity per man-hour. National policies and programs to insure this rate of national economic growth should be established.

IV. Monetary and tax policy

1. Monetary policy:

A. We urge the increase of and additional appropriations for much-needed social, welfare and economic measures as sound investments in the well-being of our Nation.

B. We urge easier credit for small business, home building, and the family farm.

C. We urge the establishment of a Federal capital budget for reimbursable public works projects with a life in excess of five years, in order to rationalize public works appropriations and to improve the accounting and budgetary operations of the Government.

2. Tax policy:

Increased economic activity together with stricter enforcement of our tax laws should produce much of the income needed to finance the Government programs which we support.

We urge the elimination of special provisions in the internal revenue laws which are discriminatory in nature. As blatant examples, we point to the favored tax treatment of the extractive industries, the restricted stock options for corporate executives, the retirement income credit, the preferred tax treatment of profits on stock market transactions, and the dividend exclusion and credit provisions.

We also call for an end to the abuse of the deductibility of business expenses to finance luxurious travel, vacations, and entertainment for business management, professional men and sales executives.

V. Housing and urban renewal

AVC is vitally aware of how closely the country's economy and well-being are dependent upon the building and housing industries and of the continued need for additional housing at reasonable rents. With this in mind we offer the following housing program:

1. That the FHA and VA insure mortgages for a term up to 40 years with low downpayments and that the Federal Government make said mortgages attractive investments to lending institutions.

2. An enlarged and vigorous middle income program both publicly owned and Government stimulated and privately sponsored including consumer cooperative housing as the best method of meeting the needs of an ever-growing middle class.

3. That the Government (municipal, State, Federal) pursue a vigorous program of urban renewal planning and make provisions for the smaller builder-owner and individual owner to participate actively.

4. Vigorous enforcements of present Government anti-discrimination clauses in FHA and VA loan provisions and a Federal law insuring open occupancy in all sales and rentals.

5. Continued and expanded publicly owned housing for low income groups, together with a Government stimulated, privately sponsored program to provide housing for said groups with a view toward giving subsidies, grants-in-aid, mortgage guarantees, site clearance aid and real estate tax abatement.

6. That the Government (Federal, State, and municipal) make allowance in the form of subsidized additional mortgage guarantees and real estate tax abatement to builders and owners who make special provisions for the disabled and the aged.

VI. Conservation and development of natural resources

We view the development and conservation of our natural resources as a vital part of the Government's role and policymaking function in the economy. Because of the scope of the subject, we state, however, our proposals in this field under a separate heading.

1. Department of Natural Resources. We suggest the reorganization of the Department of Interior as a Department of Natural Resources to promote effective application of the principles of conservation and development to all segments of our national life concerned with natural resources, and to center Federal responsibility in this field clearly within a single agency.

2. Soil and Forest Conservation. We urge the Department of Interior and Agriculture to continue and expand their programs of education and control designed to encourage wise conservation practices. We further request the appropriate committees of Congress to remain constantly vigilant to detect and prevent by appropriate legislation any unnecessary destruction or loss of the truly irreplaceable resources of soil and forest.

3. Water conservation. We recognize that, if water use continues to increase at its present rate, we shall be faced within a century with the necessity of using and reusing every gallon of water available from natural sources within our country.

A. We, therefore, reaffirm our strong support of the comprehensive river basin development (one river - one plan) principle first proclaimed by Theodore Roosevelt in his message to Congress of February 26, 1908.

B. We urge the accelerated application of this principle to our great river basins in order to assure their full development and to prevent the waste of a large proportion of their resources, and condemn the abandonment of this principle by the present administration in the Hells Canyon conflict and the violation of the comprehensive plan for the Columbia River Basin.

C. We favor enactment of legislation to establish a coordinated Great Plains Administration and the coordination of separate regional developments of this type, both with respect to river valley considerations and to national economic policies.

D. We urge the Federal Government to undertake the planning and construction of multi-purpose water and power projects similar to the one provided for in the Tennessee Valley. The value of the social and economic benefits provided by these projects to these areas and their inhabitants are far in excess of the investment made by the Government in their development. Their very scope and vastness preclude their proper development by the short-term, piece-meal operations of private interests.

E. With the limitations of fresh water from natural sources clearly in view, we ask for development and conservation of all our water resources for maximum domestic, agricultural, industrial and recreational uses.

F. We urge the Department of the Interior to expedite the program to develop economic means of converting brackish and saline waters into usable fresh waters at economic cost.

4. Energy resources conservation: We call for the establishment of a rational, comprehensive national policy to guide the development and use of our energy resources and a positive, dynamic Federal program to effectuate that policy, especially:

A. The maximum feasible development of our only prepetually renewable energy resource, the hydro-electric power of our great river systems, including Federal construction of such multi-purpose power dams as Hells Canyon Dam, the Trinity River project and other waterpower, irrigation, flood control and navigation works, using standards of feasibility for such projects based upon their reasonably expected service life.

B. A continuation and acceleration of the Federal programs to develop and stimulate development of effective processes for the utilization of our immense reserves of oil, shale and coal.

C. The speedy development of atomic energy (both fission and fusion type) for power and other peaceful purposes, including the construction of atomic power reactors and powerplants by the Government, to develop atomic technology and ultimately to provide for low-cost atomic power.

D. With our production and consumption of electric energy increasing at phenomenal rates, we urge the establishment of a rational and coherent national policy to maximize the benefits available from the great strides technology has made in high-capacity, high-voltage generation and transmission and to assure to every part of the Nation the economic stimulus of abundant low-cost power.

5. Wildlife and recreation: We urge an increasing expansion of our national park system, national monuments and national forests for recreation of the people of the United States and for preservation of wildlife and the conservation of the few remaining wilderness areas in our country in their natural state.

6. Public lands and Indian rights: We strongly recommend enactment of laws making it mandatory for the executive branch to submit to Congress for prior approval any proposal to sell or grant proprietary privileges in Federal-owned land or resources to private interests. We oppose revocation of Federal commitments entered into by treaty between the U.S. Government and various Indian tribes. We shall support efforts to safeguard Indian lands and resources from exploitation and expropriation in violation of treaty obligations.

VII. Agriculture

We believe that the land, water and other natural resources should be used and conserved by owners and operators in such a manner as to pass on these irreplaceable natural resources undiminsihed to future generations.

We are convinced that families on family farms can best conserve these priceless national assets and that they are an essential balancing force in the social, economic, and political structure that is vital to the stability, preservation and improvement of representative democratic government.

We support the right of farm families to earn and receive income from their work, management, and property ownership equivalent to those earned and received by people in other walks of life from similar productive resources.

We believe that these aims can be attained through combined individual and cooperative private action with and under programs of democratic government.

Industrialized agriculture, which now is able to use unprotected and sweated farm labor, domestic and imported, in competing unfairly with family type farming, must be brought into compliance with all labor and welfare legislation which now protects non-farm industrial workers, including the Wage Hours Act, social security, unemployment compensation, the Taft-Hartley Labor-Management Relations Act and State workmen's compensation, health and safety laws. Only as these long overdue extensions of coverage are made can more than 2 million migrant farm workers - the most depressed, helpless, and exploited remaining segment of our society - be given first class citizenship in our economy; only as this is done can family farm operators be assured of the fair competition needed for their survival at a truly American standard of living.

VIII. Labor and social policy

We urge:

1. An increase in the Federal minimum wage to $1.25 and extension of Federal minimum wage legislation to cover employees now excluded. We favor similar extension of coverage for the Fair Labor Standards Act as a whole.

2. Federal standards to increase unemployment insurance benefits, more realistic eligibility standards and lengthening of the period for which benefits are paid to 39 weeks.

3. Improved social security benefits, including earlier optional retirement. We warn against the tendency of administrators of the act to construe the act narrowly in many individual cases, so as to deny social security benefits contrary to the spirit of the act.

4. Amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act to outlaw State right-to-work laws, to compel the NLRB to accept jurisdiction whenever an employer is actually engaged in inter-state commerce, to grant strikers the right to vote in certification elections and generally to establish labor's equality with management in labor's own sphere. Such changes in the law are necessary since the Taft-Hartley Act has not brought about friendly relations between management and labor but has unjustifiably limited - especially as currently administered - the sphere of union activity and has unjustly prevented workers, in many parts of the Nation, especially in the South, from exercising their right to organize.

5. Enactment of laws for the full disclosure of the administration of pension and health and welfare plans, whether administered by unions or management or jointly by both. Federal law should follow existing Federal securities legislation and State laws such as that of the State of New York, except for the exemptions contained in the latter.

6. The recently disclosed abuses in labor union management call for labor vigorously to clean its own house with the aid of Federal remedial legislation. Caution should be exercised in regard to legislation dealing with internal union management so that it will strengthen, not weaken, an independent democratic labor movement. In particular, we oppose proposals to bring the labor union under the sway of the antitrust laws.

7. Legislation requiring unions to admit to membership qualified applicants witout regard to race, color, ancestry, national origin, religion or sex.

8. Legislation granting official recognition to Federal employee unions.

IX. Education

Impressed by the fresh insights and persuaded by the soundness of the Rockerfeller Brothers Fund 1958 Report on Education in America, we call for active governmental leadership, community interest and support;

1. To promote widespread recognition of the fact that "in the quality of education lies the fate of freedom itself," to provide educational opportunity for every American to the limits of his capacity, and to identify the talented among us and challenge them to their highest achievement.

2. To insure the availability of adequate funds for public school construction and raising teachers' salaries, such as in the revised Murray-Metcalf bill (or similar legislation) and for necessary expansion of the physical plant in tax-supported institutions of higher learning, all on a scale sufficient to satisfy the demands imposed by continuing increases in student population and the cost of living, to improve the quality of education and to elevate the status of the teaching profession to a level commensurate with its social importance; also to explore the practicability of the creation of a large fund to provide loans repayable by the borrowers over long terms out of excess earnings attributable to education above minimum levels.

3. To improve and extend existing scholarship and loan programs for college and university students.

4. To extend scholarship and exchange programs for study by Americans abraod and by nationals of other countries in the United States.

5. To appropriate adequate Federal aid to communities impacted by Federal programs.

X. Public health

We urge:

1. Increased Federal expenditures for research in the prevention and cure of illness.

2. Expansion of medical insurance and group medical care plans, including a plan for national health insurance.

3. Expansion of public health facilities and services, hospitals and nursing homes and facilities for the rehabilitation of the aged and disabled.

4. Access by patients to all health facilities and services, hospitals and nursing homes without regard to race, color, ancestry, national origin, religion or sex.

XI. Civil defense

Mr. Paul Cooke, Chairman
AVC National Affairs Commission
1830 Jefferson Place, N. W.

Dear Paul:

With the hope that this is still in time to be of some help, here are some suggestions toward the statement on school desegregation:

(1) Since AVC's recommendations will presumably be based on experience and evidence, I suggest that the statement include a brief bibliography that will support the suggestions made. I am sending separately a few appropriate publications, in case you haven't seen them; others can be selected from the bibliography in the SRC pamphlet referred to immediately below.

(2) In a recent pamphlet, SRC tried to sum up what we now know about school desegregation. The pertinent section for this purpose reads as follows:

> What are the requirements of a good desegregation plan?
> Although the methods for desegregating and administering a school system should be left to professional educators, there are some principles of common sense which any plan ought to observe.
> In the first place, the initiative for desegregation should rest with school officials, and not with the Negro child and parents. The school administrators are responsible for the soundness of the educational system. To thrust upon the Negro parent and child the psychological and and social burden of starting the desegregation process is unjust, inhumane -- and irresponsible. It is the professional educators who, if left free of political control, can intelligently decide where desegregation should begin, how differences in achievement and ability can best be accommodated and overcome, and what is most advantageous for the individual child.

Moreover, no plan is good which treats children as if they were things, and not sensitive personalities. To place one or two children in a school with scores or hundreds of children of the other race, and to do so with the deliberate intent to purchase thereby continued segregation of all other children, is an act of punishment. It converts children into objects of curiosity, and occasionally of persecution; it makes of them scapegoats for the failure of laws and political policies.

Another common-sense principle is, that a plan should be geared to ending abnormal conditions as rapidly as possible. Token desegregation means continually disturbed school conditions, for the white students as well as the Negroes.

And finally, a good plan is one which is conducive to community peace. No plan can either wholly cause or wholly prevent violence and disorder. There are, nevertheless, some features which experience has shown to invite trouble. For example, as one prominent official has been quoted as saying, "no one hits a six year old." The implication of this is that those school systems which begin desegregation at the senior high school level, do so at the very place where violent reaction is most likely. Likewise, prudent planning will provide a safety valve, perhaps in the form of relatively free transfer-out privileges, for those parents who are too passionate to tolerate any desegregated education for their children.

(Taken from: School Desegregation: The First Six Years. SRC pamphlet, May 1960)

(3) In addition to a good plan, sound preparation is essential. On the basis of careful study of desegregation experiences, Wey and Corey concluded in Action Patterns in School Desegregation: "Scattered localities reported success with minimum public preparation. But the vast majority of school officials' reports and extensive on-the-spot research point up the importance for at least some preparing, either through overt or subtle means. In fact, for most communities, an attempt to desegregate without some public conditioning is an invitation to failure and the possibility mounts in proportion to local sentiment against desegregation."

(4) A major part of preparation should include community education to explode the myths about school desegregation that have been spread by extremist propaganda. For example: It is the overwhelming conclusion of social science that there are no innate differences in intelligence attributable to race. There is not a single shred of evidence that desegregation lowers academic standards or increases juvenile delinquency; on the contrary, some school systems have reported an improvement in both respects after desegregation was put into effect. The Washington, D. C., school system -- the most extensive school desegregation yet effected -- has been deliberately misrepresented to the American public; objective study has demonstrated steady improvement in academic and behavior standards since the Washington schools were desegregated. And so on.

(5) Preparation of teachers is critically important. In her authoritative booklet on desegregation, Jean Grambs wrote: "Attitudes of teachers do not change overnight, any more than do attitudes of children. It has been found, however, that where teachers of both groups can meet on a professional level to discuss mutual problems, many of the stereotypes and distortions fade away; they begin to see each other as equals and as persons worthy of respect. This feeling is then apt to carry over to children, and teachers are then more able to see each child as he is." The implications for the administrator are clear. One of them is that faculty integration, along with pupil integration, may do as much as anything to facilitate a successful experience.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming
Executive Director

Dear Harold,

Thanks for agreeing to serve on the AVC National Affairs Commission. And you are at the right distance to help.

I should like to send out from the Commission at letter to each school district integrating (or desegregating, technically) this September. In the letter AVC would urge the school board (Houston, Texas; Fairfax County, Virginia, for example) to take such steps as we believe would accomplish the changeover in fair and effective fashion.

Acknowledged 8/12/60

Possibly, we would say something about the importance of a carefully prepared policy for children and teachers. Or the importance of planning for integration as well as desegregation. Or the need for educating the school personnel to their full job.

Now, almost by return mail, would you send me the statement you would recommend being sent--or the framework or basic elements of such a statement? It could be particularized for Houston, etc, or general to apply to all such cities in the near future.

I should appreciate this very much. Thanks.

Dear Arnold:

I am sorry that your letter of August 17 has gone unanswered while I have been traveling around.

Actually, there are five colleges in the Atlanta University system -- Clark, Morehouse, Spelman, Morris Brown and the Interdenominational Theological Seminary. In order to try to advise you about establishing relations with students in these and other Negro colleges in Georgia, I need to know a little more about your objective. Does this relate to AVC's veterans services, to the sit-in movement or to the student protest movement or what?

Of course, the normal channel for any such approach would be through the student government, or the student body presidents. If you feel that these are the names you need, let me know and we will try to round them up. In the case of the sit-ins, other student leaders might be more appropriate, at least in some cases.

I promise to answer your next letter more promptly.

REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Prince Edward County School Situation. The Department of Justice asked our assistance in obtaining copies of papers and briefs that were filed in the private suit pending in Prince Edwards County. As soon as we obtain the material we will send it.

Federal Aid to Education. Birkhead reported that this legislation is blocked in the House Rules Committee and is dead for this session. A motion was passed that AVC write to all House and Senate Candidates stating AVC's support for Federal Aid to Education.

Repeal of Disclaimer in National Defense Education. A telegram was sent by AVC to the House Sub Committee on Special Education urging support of S.2929 which repeals the disclaimer affadavit in the Act.

Immigration. Letters will be sent on two bills (1) H.R. 7209 easing naturalization proceedings for Korean veterans so that they can follow the same procedure as World War II veterans (2) A bill in the Senate Judiciary Committee easing the re-enlistment requirements of aliens so that such aliens so not have to come back to the United States to file a declaration of intent to become an American citizen prior to re-enlistment but can do so at their overseas station.

Reapportionment. A motion was passed that Andrew Rice be given authority to reconvene a group of interested organizations on reapportionment similar to the group that AVC had convened last November. June Bellish, Henry Stoner and Walter Redfield were added to Rice's sub-committee. Redfield's suggestion that AVC support State unicameral legislatures was referred to the subcommittee with the request that if such subcommittee should approve the principle it should report to the full committee whether AVC could support the principle under our existing platform.

Presidential Election - D.C. A motion was passed that after the elections, AVC send out a letter to the Governors of all states and the presiding officers of all state legislatures urging their support of the proposed constitutional amendment, and that the individual Chapters be requested to urge the individual members of their state legislatures to support such amendment.

Arkansas General Hospital. Letters were sent to Congressman Norblad, Armed Services Committee and to the Director of the Arkansas Covational Rehabilitation Service pointing out that any provision in law or any promise not to discriminate in the use of the Rehabilitation Service does not preclude such Service from segregating their facilities, and specific assurance of non-segregation should be obtained.

Desegregation and Integration for the First Time. Letters are being sent to school boards with detailed suggestions for fair and peaceful desegration and for immediate start on real integration for the districts that have already started desegregating.

PRIORITIES

A motion was passed that the priority program to implement the platform remains as in 1959-60. (1) Civil Rights and Civil Liberties and (2) Re-apportionment.

NEW PROJECTS

The problem of water pollution was considered as a new project.

RESOLUTIONS FOR NATIONAL BOARD MEETING

4 August 1960

Dear Mr. Barrett:

You will recall that on September 3, 1959, representatives of AVC's National Affairs Commission conferred with you, in your office. We discussed with you the action of the authorities of Prince Edward County, Virginia, closing the County's public schools to avoid complying with the decrees of the Federal courts that colored children be admitted into the previously white schools.

At that time, we suggested several courses of action that the Federal Government might take to prevent this outrageous denial of public education to many hundreds of pupils solely because of race.

There were then pending in Congress various civil rights bills, some of which included the so-called Title III provisions; and you indicated that if such authority were available, the Federal Government would certainly consider instituting a suit to require the County authorities to open the schools on a non-racial basis.

Pending the enactment of such legislation, you then indicated that the Department of Justice would consider filing an amicus curiae brief in any case that might be initiated by private parties in the Federal courts to compel the opening of the Prince Edward County schools.

St. John Barrett, Esq.
Civil Rights Division
Department of Justice
Washington 25, D. C.

Within the past few weeks, such a suit was instituted in the United States District Court in Virginia. It is now pending there and will be heard in the near future.

In the light of our previous conversation concerning this matter, we respectfully urge that the Department of Justice enter into this case as amicus curiae to help protect the constitutional rights of the children of Prince Edward County.

The Department of Justice has in past years frequently participated as amicus curiae in civil rights cases for the purpose of aiding the courts in the protection of the constitutional rights of colored people. Thus, the Attorney General specifically noted the Department's interest in protecting the constitutional rights of American citizens, in the Government's briefs in Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1; Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U.S. 24; Takahashi v. Fish and Game Commission, 334 U.S. 410; Henderson v. United States, 339 U.S. 816; District of Columbia v. John R. Thompson Co., 346 U.S. 100; the Public School Segregation Cases, 347 U.S. 483; Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, and in many other cases, both in the Supreme Court and also in lower federal courts.

There is no higher duty of Government than the protection of the constitutional rights of American citizens; and we urge that the Department of Justice should therefore file an amicus curiae brief in the pending Prince Edward County case.

For your convenience there is attached a copy of our letter to you of September 2, 1959, together with a copy of the attachment to that letter.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Paul Cooke

Our purpose is, at least in part, to have regular Southern contacts in order that the Negro veteran in the South can have some constant flow as to his rights as a veteran; in other words, to help carry out the recommendations of the 1960 Audit.

We would appreciate the names of the student government leaders in the colleges you mentioned.

Dear ~~Mr.~~ Harold Fleming:

Your recent letter to Arnold Feldman of the American Veterans Committee was forwarded to me for reply because of my recent appointment by Mickey Levine to direct AVC's campaign to contact key students on Negro college campuses in the South.

Of course, AVC remains interested in, and will cooperate with, the sit-in and student protest movements, in accordance with its longtime traditions and desire of its membership. Nevertheless, it was the decision of the delegates at the last national convention of AVC, implemented by National Board action, that we bring to the attention of key campus contacts the work and conclusions of AVC's latest Audit, the individuals who cooperated with us, and our plans to establish and service AVC Chapters in the South , and also service those Negro veterans who are not members of our organization.

In view of what I hope has been a clarification of our desires, I would be more than grateful if you would send me the names of student contacts, and others in the Atlanta University system, who would be helpful in furthering our long range plans. Naturally, we will be guided by any suggestions on your part.

Our National Board will be meeting this weekend in Washington, prepared to kick off our Southern campaign immediately thereafter.

Many thanks for your interest and cooperation.

Sincerely,
Bernie

MINUTES OF MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
NATIONAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION
October 6, 1960

PRESENT: Cooke, Feldman, Birkhead, Shore, Rice, Indritz and Lechliter.

Reapportionment - (Rice) Andy advised that he had met in New York with members of the Political Science Association; had discussed the matter with Jewel Bellush; had obtained records of the preceding convention from Birkhead; had discussed the matter with Dave Williams of A.D.A. and corresponded with Henry Stoner.

A motion was passed that A.V.C. set up a convention of persons interested in reapportionment; and that A.V.C. also investigate the possibility of taking action in the Supreme Court cases dealing with reapportionment in Virginia and Maryland. Also that A.V.C. should bring to the attention of the convention the Supreme Court cases.

It was decided to hold the convention Monday, November 28; that the convention should be an all day conference announced as closed to the press; that A.V.C.'s sessions should be as follows: 10:00 - 10:30 plenary session; 10:40 - 12:00 group working sessions; 12:15 - 1:45 luncheon reporting sessions and discussions by persons who have fought for reapportionment; 1:45 - 5:00 group working sessions. It was decided that the conference cost should be $2.50 over the cost of the luncheon and that this should include a coffee break. Invitations will be sent six weeks in advance by letter.

Veterans Audit - We had sent copies of the Audit to the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy and the Civil Service Commission. They both replied to the effect that they could do nothing unless we should give them specific information as to qualified Negro veterans who were denied employment on the basis of race. They also stated they would welcome informal discussions.

It was decided that the replies we received were inadequate, that the important factor is not specific individual cases but rather a pattern of discrimination as shown by the practices and small number of Negroes employed. It was decided we should send a new letter to the President's Committee (copy to Civil Service Commission) pointing out the specific patterns and practices set forth in the audit.

Letter to Secretary of State Christian Herter - A letter will be sent to Herter requesting that he take active steps to remove discrimination in housing for diplomats and referring to A.V.C. activity in securing the removal of racial designations in real estate advertisements.

Armed Services Designation of Race - Rice reported that he noted that Air Force Recruits sent to Lockland Base, Texas had their race listed on their orders. This matter was referred to the Executive Director for action by him or the appropriate Commission.

Dear Paul:

I am honored, of course, to be chosen for the Washington AVC Chapter's annual Bill of Rights award. My personal efforts scarcely deserve this recognition, but I am assuming that the overall work of the Southern Regional Council is the real honoree.

In those terms, I will be glad to accept the award and will plan to be in Washington on February 22 or 23. Naturally, I will also be happy to speak at the Howard University luncheon if that is arranged.

MEMORANDUM

FROM

Dear Harold,

Your travel and hotel expenses for the occasion will be met, but for the moment I did not want to put the item in the formal letter of invitation.

Actually, what I expect is that Howard University will invite you to speak at a luncheon the same day (the dinner is at night), that H.U. will pay for your trip.

Please clear that Thursday or Wednesday of the February 22 holiday (at least it's a holiday in D.C.).

I am most pleased to tell you that the Washington, D.C., Chapter of the American Veterans Committee (AVC) has unanimously voted to award to you its Annual Bill of Rights recognition, begun in 1947 and maintained continuously. The Chapter members judged your work in group relations to be of great importance in support of the Bill of Rights of the United States Constitution.

Our awards are traditionally made at a Bill of Rights Award Dinner on this occasion to be held on February 23, 1961.

Please let us know whether you will accept our award.

Dear Paul;

The change of date poses no problem for me. I have reserved Friday, March 3, for the dinner, pending later word from you about time, place, and any other details I will need to know about. For example, will I be expected to make a speech at any time while I'm there? I take it my role at the dinner will be passive, but you earlier mentioned the possibility of a Howard luncheon.

Among other things, it will be a special pleasure to see the National Board members again.

We are most happy here at AVC that you will accept our Bill of Rights Award. I am sorry that I have to write to ask you to change the date on your calendar. The reason for the change is that the National Board will meet in Washington Thursday, March 2nd to Saturday, March 4th. We are going to set the dinner on Friday night in order that the National Board will be present for the dinner. This we have done on previous occasions and the dinnerhas always been a gala affair. I hope this meets your approval. Please let me know as soon as possible.

AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE (AVC) AUDIT OF NEGRO VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

The American Veterans Committee has from its earliest days been among the leaders in the battle for civil rights, cooperating with the NAACP, with the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, and other similar organizations. Only recently we have been honored by being placed as one of the "public enemies of the White Citizens Council."

Back in 1956, AVC conducted an informational, on-the-spot check of the extent of discrimination against Negro veterans in relation to the Veterans Administration and particularly the GI Bill.

We now plan to extend the scope of our original survey and to include a report on the treatment of Negro veterans and servicemen in Veterans Administration hospitals, Defense installations, and regional offices of the Veterans Administration. This is a timely subject, since it is quite likely that Congress will enact a new GI Bill for peacetime servicemen. It is essential that an effective effort be made to expose publicly the type of discrimination that was inherent in legislation administered by local authorities in the South and the North, and to attempt to prevent similar evasions of the law in the future. Results of the AVC Audit will be presented to the platform sessions of the two national conventions in July. In planning our report, we have consulted with our friends and allies in the field of civil rights, and their reaction has been unanimously enthusiastic.

Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the NAACP, stated, "More power to AVC on its survey of the Negro veteranunder the GI Bill." The National Urban League stated they wished to cooperate with AVC in this report. The Southern Regional Council and its Director, Harold C. Flemming, noted that AVC should, "Call on me and the Southern Regional Council for whatever help we can give." Congressman Charles C. Diggs, Jr., stated he "was most happy to learn of AVC's plans to conduct a nationwide investigation of discrimination against Negro veterans in regard to legal rights and privileges under the GI Bill of Rights and in other related areas against Negro servicemen. Certainly, this is a step long over-due." Senator Paul H. Douglas' office stated that "AVC is to be commended for looking into this important aspect of the operation of our democracy in behalf of all of its citizens' equality of opportunity." Similar indications of assistance have come from the American Jewish Committee, the Anti-Defamation League, and many other Members of Congress.

THE AVC AUDITING TEAM

The AVC team in the South will include National Chairman Mickey Levine, National Vice Chairman Louis Warshaw, and perhaps one or two other members of the National Board. They will visit Little Rock, then tour the Mississippi Delta and go on to Tuskegee, Montgomery, Athens, Atlanta, Greenville, Charlotte and Richmond.

A similar Audit will be conducted in northern areas such as California, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Washington, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

SOURCES OF STUDY

The areas to be studied include VA hospitals, VA regional offices, Negro colleges, Defense Department installations, and interviews with Negro veterans in the South.

AREAS OF STUDY

(A) Education - What happened when Negro veterans applied for educational assistance under the provisions of the GI Bill? What percentage were accepted?

(b) Housing - Were Negro veterans able to obtain VA-insured home loans? If not, why not? (What excuses were given?) How did they eventually obtain mortgage assistance?

(C) On-the-job training - Were Negro veterans able to utilize this provision of the bill?

(D) Business and farm loans - Were Negro veterans able to utilize this provision of the Bill?

We will also seek information as to how Negro veterans are treated in the Veterans Administration regional offices. Are Negroes employed as service officers? To what extent does discrimination exist in the attitude of VA service officers toward Negro veterans? We shall visit VA hospitals to try to estimate the kind of treatment provided Negro veterans and to test the hiring policy of the VA hospitals, particularly with reference to administrative positions. Finally, we shall visit Defense installations to determine how far there has been an effective policy of integrating all troops. We will want to know the number of Negro personnel on any base, married and single, those who reside on the base with their families. We will be interested in seeing the kind of facilities offered to Negro servicemen on the base, including housing, PX's, clubs, and off the base, particularly the housing facilities, quality of housing, and the cost; the schools that are available to them, churches, cafes, bars, and recreational and social activities.

AVC ENLISTS YOUR SUPPORT

It is our earnest plea that when the AVC team visits your area that you will be able to overwhelm them with information and statistics, and most important of all, to set up an informal meeting where they will be able to speak to and interview many, many Negro veterans. We earnestly believe that a serious and significant contribution can be made in the veteran area of civil rights by producing a detailed, objective, and yet, incisive report.

AUDIT QUESTIONNAIRE

Veterans Administration Hospitals

1. Are Negro patients segregated?
2. Have Negro patients been forced to travel to "all-Negro installations" which were far from their homes?
3. What are the personnel practices of Veterans Administration hospitals?
4. In integrated hospitals, are Negroes hired as doctors and members of the administrative staff?

Defense Installations

1. Are Negro servicemen integrated into over-all outfits, or are they still serving in separate Negro companies?
2. What type of treatment does the Negro serviceman receive on the base, so far as housing is concerned, clubs, recreational facilities?
3. What type of housing is provided for Negro personnel who are married and living on the base with their families?

Off-Base Facilities

1. What housing facilities are available for married Negro personnel?
2. What is the quality of this housing and the cost?
3. What is the experience of Negro servicemen, so far as other facilities are concerned: local transportation, restaurants, clubs, churches, and recreational sources?
4. For Negro servicemen who are married and have children, what type of schooling is given to their children, both on the base and in the local community?

GI Bill

We are anxious to ascertain if Negro veterans were discriminated against in the educational provisions of the GI Bill, as well as such other provisions as housing, on-the-job training, business and farm loans.

Veterans Administration Regional Offices

1. Is the policy of segregation enforced in the local Veterans Administration office?
2. Does the Negro veteran receive the same treatment as all other veterans?
3. Does the Veterans Administration employ Negro service officers?
4. Are Negroes employed in any other service capacity in the Veterans Administration

My dear Guy:

Always after a conference, I wished for some one ~~who~~ to tell me, just how it went and to evaluate the results. You may not want this but I am going to pass on to you my observations for what they may be worth.

You had the work well organized and so well presented that you were able to arouse full discussion, especially on those items which could well become points of attack by the Negro press. None of these were passed automatically and so no excuse can be offered by anyone present that he did not know what he was voting for. It was especially fortunate that our resolutions covered only the Supreme Court decison and the political campaigns. Otherwise the edge would have been taken off these immediately pressing points.

There were two questions raised which were important and since they were not disposed of they may well arise later. One of them was raised by Forrester Washington in regard to the program. Mr. Reid and Mnsg McNamara hushed him up and, as I recall, there was no general expression of opinion from the group. You will recall that he said the program presented was a case of old wine in new bottles and that he thought committees should be appointed to study industry and employment and the status of civil and political rights. I did not gather from his remarks that he meant that these committees should be official or that they should begin work but that they should be studying the whole field with the purpose of making recommendations to the Executive Committee or the Board as to future procedure. You can refer to Miss Clay's notes to see whether or not Mr. Reid's defense of the program disposed of this subject satisfactorily. If I understand what was in Mr. Washington's mind correctly, then certainly Mnsg. McNamara's dictum of "exceeding our authoirty" did not apply.

We are committed as I believe to the creation of a National Advisory Committee both in our original resolutions passed August 4th last year and in your article in reply to the attack of Saunders Redding- which, by the way, I think is a most excellent presentation of the purposes and policies of the Southern Regional Council. I was interested in the statements made by Mr. Brown, ably supported by Mr. Jaffe. There may have been others who turned thumbs down on such a committee but these two I recall most vividly. Mr. Brown, according to the Negro press, determines the policies of his bank in Richmond, which the Negro press maintains discourages accounts of Negroes. He, also, is the one who, when the question of dividing our funds between the white and Negro banks, suggested that the names of the banks not be designated but that the committee designate "such banks" as they should see fit.

It was late, I know, and it was apparent that opposition to a National Advisory Committee would develop and prolong the meeting but it does seem that it is going to have to be created in line with our policy and that it must be done without creating a rift.

There are other points which offer food for thought but in comparison to these two, they are minor ones.

By the way, in reference to Miss Smith's failure to be invited to the April meeting to which you refer in your article in COMMON GROUND. As far as I can recall, and I have racked my brain on this, no one of the couple of dozen people who sent in ~~nam~~ names suggested that she be invited. It must have been a clear oversight. She had not published her best seller at that time and evidently no one even thought of her. If you look over the names of those that were asked, you can readily see that there was no attempt to get like minded people there. I think that it might be better to let her and the public think she was deliberately left out than that no one remembered her.

You are off to a good start now, especially since you have been able to get Miss Martin as your private secretary. I say this, not because I know Miss Martin but because you tell me that in addition to being able to take dictation, which is quite necessary as a mechanical aid in getting work out, she has a backgound in this field and has worked under you in college so that she knows your ways and your ideas and attitudes. Oridnarily, there is a long and trying period of time consumed in training a secretary in the work even though she may be a most proficient stenographer.

This meeting was an unusual experince for me. It was the first time that I was on the giving end and not the receiving end of an interracial meeting. Always in the past, it has been my job to see that the work voted by others was carried out. It is a refreshing experience, somewhat clouded, however, by the knowldge of the task that confronts you.

Sincerely your friend,

Jessie Daniel Ames

Dear Mrs. Ames:

I understand that you are coming to the church conference on demobilization which is to be held in Atlanta on November 1-2. I want very much to see you, so don't let anything change your plans. There is a lot to talk about.

For instance, I am wondering whether you would be willing to help us on the preparation of a pamphlet or manual for use in state and local groups in promoting our program. But more of that when I see you.

You will be amused at the story of my housing problem. I bought two houses, but of course I have sold one of them. We are living at 95 East Wesley Road, N. E., and we even have a guest room. Benny, by the way, is a freshman at Chapel Hill. He came with us when we moved late in August and spent three weeks here. It was awfully hard for us to give him up.

Best wishes from Guion and me.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

I was glad to have your letter of June 18 concerning FEPC and other matters. I quite agree with you that there is "an astonishing difference between endorsing the principle of a bill and endorsing the bill itself." For trying to be honest in my statements to various individuals to the effect that I had reservations as to the wisdom and enforceability of the Norton FEPC bill, I have been beaten over the head around here lately. I am not at all sure that the majority of the SRC members are in favor of this particular legislation, since there was no discussion whatever of the resolution or of the question of approving a particular legislative approach at the time the resolution was passed at the annual meeting. The memorandum which we sent out was by way of suggesting to members that they can take certain steps if they feel so inclined.

I have read the Norton bill but have written out no analysis of it. My judgment is that it is well written, that it has at least a fifty-fifty chance of being declared constitutional, and that the enforcement provisions are in line with other federal practices, namely, citation to court after non-compliance with a Commission order. My reservations have to do with the practicability of enforcement and with the whole question of whether this is the best strategy for dealing with a problem which is so deeply involved in attitudes and personal economic morality.

I regret very much that I did not get to see Lulu when I was in Austin. I was there only a few hours, and did not get to see more than half the people I had wanted to see.

The Fort Worth meetings were quite well attended and, I hope, were of some value from the standpoint of public education. I sat with the Executive Board on the morning of June 9, and I was pleased with the progress which they made toward closer cooperation with SRC.

I think that there will be some further action in the Prairie View situation. As you know, the suit for admission to the University of Texas has been instituted, and this will probably throw a scare into the legislature. Our clippings show some very good editorials lately calling attention to the importance of making Prairie View a real Negro university.

Guion went with me to Texas and had a visit with her parents and her three sisters. I took two days off and visited my father in Abilene. I had not seen him in nearly eight years.

My dear Guy:

The call for action sent out by you to members of the Board of Directors of SRC came last Friday. I have been wondering whether or not you have made an analysis of the FEPC bill and if so, will you send a copy to me.

You know that there is an astonsihing difference between endorsing the principle of a bill and endorsing the bill itself. Proponents of a measure are usually the last resort to go to for unbiased information. The bill is the thing.

Lulu wrote me that you had been in Austin and that she regretted not seeing you. She was to see Harry later and find out how things look to you in Texas. The Training School is in good hands and will, I think, be the best eelyomosinary institution in the state since it is being handled by a member of the Board of Control whom Lulu has been educating for four years. The two of them put their heads to-gether quite unofficially, and Lulu has squeezed me dry for information and sources.

The Prairie View situation is definitely not good. I am sure you learned about the runaround the Legislature gave that school. It was such an obvious course to pursue that to me the only wonder is, why it was not done sooner.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Thanks for the ballot and for your note about the implications of the Executive Committee meetings.

There are indeed some interesting questions in the background, but they don't worry me very much. Like you, I can watch "with a certain degree of excitement and with no illusions."

Are you doing any writing these days? If you have any time on your hands, why not let us inveigle you into doing a Council pamphlet on the problem of domestic service? I know that this is one of your greatest interests and that you could do a swell job with it.

My dear Guy:

Herewith is the slip with my vote designated.

The minutes of the last two meetings of the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council have been read with more than passing attention. They point to a change in direction of the Council of which I approve though I admit to some apprehension as to the results for the Council.

Drs. Odum, Johnson and Alexander are clever and shrewd but they may be engaging with forces shrewder and cleverer than they are. On the other hand, they may have a complete and frank understanding with the CIO, know what is expected of them in return for money, and plan to grind a few axes of their own.

I shall watch developments with a certain degree of excitement and with no illusions.

Mr. Bulwinkle sent me a copy of the Norton Fair Employment bill. It raises many questions in my mind, none that I feel competent to answer. Was it not another Dr. Johnson who spoke of a state on mind which swings between "conviction and hypocrisy" ?

Cordially yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

My dear Guy:- The reprint did come and I thank you. It now lies smoothly and quietly between the pages of Common Ground so that all three articles are handy and maybe are acting one upon the other. Also the reprint of the 10th man and the compilation of the documents, data and so on setting out the history of the origin of the SRC. Glad to hear that you have a house and that your wife will join you next month. The Charlotte Observer carried a news story from Chapel Hill giving the long-term, new faculty members and "Mr Guy Johnson, assistant professor of history" was among them. I am relieved to find out that this is a mistake. The use of a postcard to acknowledge both the material and your letter is quite deliberate. There are subjects about which one is in danger of saying too much if one speaks at all. So the postcard. I can observe, without space to enlarge on it, that sometime during the recent past Miss Smith either has taken a refresher course in psychoanalysis or has read a book. I had seen most of her letter to you in PM. I am happier now than I have been in years and have had no twinge of regret over my decision last January. JDA.

My dear Guy:

You are right. I am interested in domestic service but my interest ties into a program of action, not so much to improve the conditions of emplyment in this field as to use the field as a means to open up for women in the south the whole problem of race, economics, and religion.

Right now, I am swimming around in a lot of water which, at times, is over my head. I have been asked to do some rather important w writing for the Baptists women which I am viewing with eagerness and reluctance. I may and I may not. Sometime this month we are going to have a small commitee meeting and then I shall decide either to accept the commission or to outline the subject matter, a submit it, and decide whether I want to or they want me to.

Also, I am collecting by way of correspondence and through clipping a considerable amount of material on a phase of the race situation which is interesting me to the point of raisin my blood pressure. I can support my thesis all right with what I have on hand but I am not sure that my thesis is correct. I am in danger of establishing a conclusion and then working up the proper premises to support it.

Dr. Bond, in a recent letter, gave me food for thought and also a source of information that I have to investigate. I don't know that anything will come of this trail I am on and I won't until some time later. But until I run this down to a satisfactory end, I won't be good for any special writing. There are other avenues incidentally, that I am trying to work my way through, connected with the Methodist women and the church organization. I think that in this latter instance my conclusions were reac ed logically from premises first established but I am not sure.

My doctor daughter is spending her vacation with me now and I confess to letting everything go, more or less, while she is here. She has two more weeks to stay and then there will be some other guests through August and I don't work well with my mind when I have to work too much with my body.

If you still want something on domestic service along about the first of the year , and if you still want me to try out something, then let me know and, I hope, I will be in a position to do something

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Thank you for your letter of August 7, which has gone unanswered until now because I have been away on a little vacation for the past week.

I am glad that you liked the SRC pamphlets. I thought the suffrage pamphlet was quite good, but a bit one-sided. Of course, you know that we are interested in fighting all barriers to free suffrage. I continue to believe that the white primary is a much worse problem than the poll tax, but I believe that within the next two years the courts are going to make it pretty hard for the white primary to exist.

No, we have not struck a gold mine. We did get a special grant from the Rosenwald Fund for George Mitchell's work on veterans and we had a sizeable amount left over from one of the foundation appropriations on last year's budget. We would like to lay hands on a financial wizard who could bring in support from many different sources and make us more and more independent of the foundations.

All good wishes.

My dear Guy:

Not until this morning did I get around to reading the supply of pamphlets that the Southern Regional Council mailed out to me sometime last week. They are excellent.

Naturally, the one on the ballot interested me most. I have wondered many times if the forces so valiantly fighting to rid the seven poll tax states of this incubus a re also working to prevent the enactment of discriminatory laws to supersede the poll tax. Usually, reform is fulfilled in one field but reformers fail to to work out measures which will make their reforms reformatory in fact.

I am also interested in the sources of the income which must be pouring in to the coffers of the SRC, if the new staff members are not giving voluntary services. I recall that in January our financial outlook was none too bright and here in less than six months we seem to have money in large quantities.

I have concluded that you have been successful in securing the services of a financial wizard whose identity must be kept secret. I hope this is the situation for I am still of the belief that "whose bread I eat, his song I sing."

Very sincerely yours

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Thank you for y ur note of October 10, giving your comments on the Executive Committee minutes. Your comments are always appreciated. Your surmise about something being "eliminated from the official record of the meeting" is wholly unfounded. If there is one thing we try to do, it is to keep fair and honest minutes. I had hoped that there would be some real discussion of Mr. Wesley's criticism, but there was not.

I know you are very happy in the expectation of seeing your son out of the Navy soon. I hope that six months from now he will be toasting his toes before a cozy fire at the Wren's Nest.

Cordially yours,

My dear Guy:

I have read the minutes of the two meetings of the Executive Committee with interest and pleasure. You know that it delights me that the SRC has found a Public Relations Director more than any other action that you report.

Your report of the criticisms made by Carter Wesley of the SRC made me quite thoughtful. There is more in what he says than the minutes indicated. That doubtless came out in the discussion afterwards which, naturally, was eliminated from the official record of the meeting. I have been, and still am, reading several Negro newspapers and, from time to time, h having some correspondence with both white and Negro persons. It

From my own experience of years in this work of race relations and from the direction in which the SRC is going, I wonder whether or not persons who are in the thick of the problems and who are charged with the responsibility of leading us out of the woods do not miss the forest entirely. The trees cut off the over all view.

This is merely a tentaive judgment. Maybe Mr. Warwick will be able to get the whole picture and devise ways of projecting it before the eyes of the people since that is his one and only job.

I am living right now in twittering expectation of the retirement of my son. He is almost sure, almost qualifies the unpredictable acts of the Navy high ups, that he will be out in another month. Six and a half months is a long time for a man to be idle even if he is a casualty. He is coming to Tryon for a visit when he is out and that keeps me on my toes.

Regina Anderson

Have you an extra reprint of the article you wrote in reply to those by Saunders Redding and Lillian Smith in which they analyzed the SRC ? I think it appeared in the Summer issue of COMMON GROUND, 1944.

I gave some material and your address to a Mrs. Ludlum, or a name quite like that, just as she was about to return to Florida. I could not decide whether she was interested or whether she was drawing me out for no good purpose in regard to my racial attitudes. She said she was going to write the office for more information.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

It was good to have a letter from you. Thank you very much for your check for $2.00 covering Council dues.

I was at Lake Junaluska three days week before last. Just before I left I heard that you were there. I am terribly sorry that I did not even get a peek at you.

Yes, North Carolina does have a long way to go. It has sometimes got more credit than it deserves simply because it has done some things better than most of the other Southern states.

The lynchings in Walton County are the most atrocious thing that has happened in many a year--so bad that practically everybody has been quite willing to condemn the lynchers. Even the Methodist Church at Monroe unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the lynching and calling for the punishment of the guilty. I think it is unfortunate that one of the news stories gave the impression that the whole county has refused to give information about the lynchers. The truth is, of course, that very few people actually know who they were. The G.B.I. and F.B.I. are making pretty good progress. They know who most of the members of the gang are, but they want to get as much corroborating evidence as possible before arresting them. They know that the white farmer, Loy Harrison, and two brothers of Hester, the white man who was stabbed, were in the gang. When they close in on them, they hope to get a confession from at least one person. Otherwise, they will have no direct evidence except the ballistic evidence.

Perhaps you noticed in the newspapers that the Council put up a reward of $1,000. Also, we called Talmadge's hand on his statement that during his three terms as Governor there were no lynchings in Georgia. We are in for a hot time here and we know it.

My dear Guy:

Herewith is my check for two dollars which should have been sent ages ago. I am embarrassed and chagrinned by the delay. I just forgot it and only this morning have I gone to the bottom of my to be answered letter basket.

This spring, having been a resident of this state long enough to lay claim to voting citizenship, I dabbled around abit in our primaries. In the course of dabbling, I worked my way up through the precinct and county conventions to the state convention as a delegate. This in itself is no achievement worthy of comment. It is the sequel which interests me, and should you.

Soon after I came here, the rumor began to cimulate that I was a subversive influence among Negroes. The rumor reached some friends of mine who are also close friends of the Mayor, who seemed to be circulating the rumor. The Mayor is part of the core of the local political machine and in the precinct convention, his side were set down by a group of rebels. I went along with the rebels. At the county convention, there was practiced as dirty a bit of machine politics as ever was done in Georgia.

The county Democratic chairman elected is a low liver who operates a couple of mo nshine stills, so the report goes. He hires Negroes to oversee them. Several years ago, he became infuriated with one of his Negroes and shot him. He was exonerated by the Grand Jury on the grounds of self defense. He operates the county as he is said to operate his stills. All employees of the county are his henchmen, including several women.

The other day, by indirection, he sent me a message by one of these women to the effect that as long as he lived, no Negro would ever vote in this county. None would be able to pass the educational test. He would see to that. In view of the fact that I have not spoken ever of Negroes voting I decided that it might be considered a warning as well as a message.

I am discovering that North Carolina has some way to go before the citizens can claim honestly the laurels that they now place on their brows. This not only in the field of race but also in the field of labor-industry. I am in a position gradually to pick up a great deal of information, some of which I hope to be able to confirm sufficiently to be sure that it is facts.

Some day I am going to have to provide myself with an audience for relief and I have about decided to try out Johnathan Daniels who is as cordially hated by the controlling element as any person I know.

There is nothing to say about Talmadge and the massacre of the Negroes at Monore- except that I am more than suprised that Walton County citizens appear to be as shy as they are with their information.

Cordially yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

My dear Mrs. Ames:

Your letter of August 1, commenting on my column in the Journal and Guide for August 2, is very encouraging. I value your opinion greatly and consider the column well worth while, if it has caused you to give special consideration to the problem.

It was my purpose to stimulate and not necessarily suggest a final solution. Police officers set the moral standards of the South. What they approve may not be right, but invariably becomes the accepted pattern. Whoever, can present pressure to bringing all officers of the law, to enforce the law, uniformly, will do much toward the solution of the problem. I am sure that your judgment in this connection is better than mine.

You say that you have already taken the matter up with one who may be able to introduce it to its top level. I will be grateful if you will write me concerning the results of your efforts.

I see daily evidences of the splendid work that you did in this field of human relations while you were on the staff of the racial committee.

I am eternally grateful to you. With every good wish, I am

This seems to me an ideal letter head to use in answering your letter and thanking you for the extra copies of the ASWPL's last publi-

As we begin our pamphlet inventory for the end of the year, we find that copies of the attached reprint from the Survey Graphic entitled "Ladies and Lynchings" which was published in 1939 are down below the 200 mark, and that due to the fact that they were published so long ago, it is difficult to get distribution on them.

Ladies and Lynchings

by LEWIS T. NORDYKE

The remarkable story of the campaign against lynching which is being carried forward by forty thousand southern women, backed by two million members of social, civic and religious groups. A Texas journalist reports on the promise of better human relations which distinguishes this quiet but determined movement for "self-reconstruction."

MOB VIOLENCE, MASQUERADING AS THE CHAMPION OF SOUTHern womanhood, is petering out below the Mason and Dixon Line. And the weaker sex is largely responsible. Nine years ago a small group of thinking women who had long realized that there was more bloodthirst than knight-errantry in howling mobs, organized the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. Today, backed by women's social, civic and religious groups that have more than two million members in the southern states, the women are massed in one of the most effective social programs ever attempted in the United States and certainly one of the most vital and constructive movements in the South — that of preventing white men from lynching Negroes for any cause whatsoever.

The word "southern" in the association's name is significant, for the program is a native one, conceived, developed and expanded into a South-wide movement by southern-born women. In a strict sense, the movement is part of the final work of reconstruction, the righting of wrongs growing out of slavery and the Civil War.

The accomplishments of these southern women are not widely known, even in the South. The women have worked quietly—very quietly in comparison with the notoriety of lynching mobs bent on murder. Through personal effort, pressure on state officials and peace officers, and with the help of church, social and other organizations, they have greatly affected the South's whole approach to the problem of race relations.

Demolishing the Myth of Mob Chivalry

STATISTICS TELL PART OF THE DRAMATIC STORY OF THE PAtient anti-lynching campaign. In the eight years previous to the founding of the women's association, there were 211 lynchings in the nation. In 1930, the year the association was founded, there were twenty-one lynchings in the South. Records of Tuskegee Institute show that in the first eight years the women were organized there were 105 lynchings, only half as many as in the previous eight years. There were thirteen lynchings in 1931, eight in 1932, twenty-eight in 1933, fourteen in 1934, twenty in 1935, eight in each of 1936 and 1937 and six in 1938, the lowest year on record.

Moreover, the records show that in forty instances sheriffs and police officers, many of them committed in writing to the women's program, prevented lynchings in 1938—saving three white men, forty-nine Negro men and a Negro woman from mobs. In each of these officially recorded cases, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching was on the job, not up front in a dramatic, headline way, but quietly functioning where action counted.

To outsiders the most surprising thing about the anti-lynching drive is that southern women are responsible for it. The remark of one northerner who heard for the first time of the association's program was, "Why, that is peculiar. Isn't the primary purpose of lynching to protect white women?" To this question thousands of southern women have answered for nearly ten years with an emphatic, "NO."

The first thing the association's organizers set out to do was to destroy the fiction that men lynch in women's names. Here is the organization's declaration and personal pledge:

We declare lynching is an indefensible crime, destructive of all principles of government, hateful, and hostile to every ideal of religion and humanity, debasing, and degrading to every person involved. Though lynchings are not confined to any one section of the United States, we are aroused by the record which discloses our heavy responsibility for the presence of this crime in our country. We believe that this record has been achieved because public opinion has accepted too easily the claim of lynchers and mobsters that they were acting solely in the defense of womanhood. In the light of facts, we dare not longer permit this claim to pass unchallenged nor allow those bent upon personal revenge and savage-

What One Woman Can Do To Prevent Lynchings

1—She can study all available material on lynchings and make the information her own.

2—She can present her material to missionary societies and clubs, applying her remarks to the purposes and programs of each group.

3—She can secure signatures of the members of the organizations before which she speaks.

4—She can ask each organization to appoint one member to serve with her in this work.

5—She can take signatures of citizens and, accompanied by one member of her committee, go to the Court House and discuss with the Sheriff, the Judge, and other officers of the law mobs, lynchings, and their prevention. She can ask for the signatures of the officials to a special resolution against lynching.

6—She can visit the local newspaper and inform the editor of the work undertaken by the women, and ask for the sympathy and cooperation of the local press.

7—She and members of her committee can talk to the preachers of the town. She can plan with them some specific projects of education through the Church, Sunday School, and young peoples' organizations.

8—She and her committee can open the way for speakers before the civic, commercial, and service clubs of the men of the town.

9—She can talk over with the School Superintendent the project of reaching young people through the schools, either in assembly talks or in class room talks.

10—She and her committee can list all county wide organizations of men and women, the dates of the meetings, the nature of the work and the program of each. With this information she can identify the educational project against lynching with interests of the organizations before she will try to speak.

ASSOCIATION OF SOUTHERN WOMEN FOR THE PREVENTION OF LYNCHING
710 Standard Building, Atlanta, Georgia

ry to commit acts of violence and lawlessness in the name of women. We solemnly pledge ourselves to create a new public opinion in the South, which will not condone, for any reason whatever, acts of mobs or lynchers. We shall teach our children at home, at school and at church a new interpretation of law and religion; we will assist all officials to uphold their oath of office; and, finally, we will join with every minister, editor, school teacher and patriotic citizen in a program of education to eradicate lynching and mobs forever from our land.

That pledge is not an idle one. Nearly 40,000 of the leading white women of the South have signed it and have fought for the principles involved, including the statement that men do not lynch in the South to protect the flower of southern womanhood.

When, on November 1, 1930, two dozen southern-born women met in Atlanta, some amazing facts about lynchings were placed on the council table. Guarding against possible consequences of acting in haste on what might be a half-baked idea, the small group had made an exhaustive survey of lynching. Here are some things they learned:

Since 1886, a total of 4297 persons had been lynched in the United States, most of them in the South—but only 21 per cent of the victims had been lynched for crimes against white women.

Women had been present at all lynchings of recent years and in a number of cases had participated. Some of the women were mothers with young children who, on several occasions, were actually balanced precariously on parents' shoulders so as to have a better view. Young boys and girls were contributing their numbers to the mobs, both as spectators and as leaders.

From 1922 to that autumn of 1930, there had been 211 lynchings, 204 of them in the South. But only 29 per cent of the victims had been accused of crimes against white women.

Then came the questions that electrified the conference: What did the other 71 per cent of the victims do to provoke the murderous wrath of mobs? Why do white men lynch Negroes? In a tense moment, the women saw what had been traditionally known as southern chivalry stripped down to sadistic barbarism. In the economic, social and racial significance of the problem lay the real challenge.

Under the leadership of Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, today executive director of the association, an even dozen of that pioneer group pledged themselves to do all within their power to prevent lynchings and to change public opinion to abhor instead of countenance mob murder. The women decided they had two jobs. First to carry on an educational program between outbursts of violence; second, to act quickly when a mob formed, or when there was a threat of a mob. The first they considered of greater importance, and they wrote into their minutes:

The time to prevent lynchings is before the mob forms. Investigations have disclosed that no county in the South is free from the shadow of a possible lynching. Because the county is the important unit of government, intensive activities are planned to be carried out by women in each county seat before a mob ever threatens.

And this the women set out to do. Each of the dozen original members was prominent in church work and each knew that in the South church women are beyond any doubt the dominating force. So to the church organizations the women went for assistance. The response was great. Hundreds of southern women offered their aid. Prominent women like Mrs. Attwood Martin of Louisville, who is well known as a novelist under the name of George Madden Martin, joined actively in the work and placed their influence behind the program.

Then the women started work—talking, writing letters, distributing printed circulars, interviewing officers and state officials, addressing organization meetings—with the ambitious goal of interesting every organization of men and women in every county in the South in the campaign against lynching.

There was ridicule. There were threats. Organizations which had made the terrorizing of Negroes their chief business since the Civil War opposed the women, inspired sinister warnings or sent them under their own official letterheads. In no few communities the women were ordered not to speak. In other communities officials demanded that talks be written and censored locally before the women might speak.

"Many of the women were threatened," Mrs. Ames said. "I know women who wouldn't tell their husbands of the threats because they feared their families would insist that the women quit the work. Women went into communities in which there had been lynchings. Many of the people were surly, belligerent. When we take into consideration the fact that some of the lynchings had grown out of politics and crooked business deals, we can understand that the women were by no means safe at all times. They knew of the constant danger, and they didn't forget to pray."

The Momentum of Education

By good chance the women struck at an opportune moment. For years some of the leading newspapers of the South had fought mob murder. Such editors as Grover Hall of the Montgomery Advertiser, Mark Ethridge of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Virginius Dabney of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, and many others had made a strong fight against lynching.

State officials, particularly the governors, in several states had taken a reasonably firm stand against lynching and held sheriffs responsible for lynchings in their counties. In the cities of the South other individuals and organizations, such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had long been waging anti-lynching campaigns. There was a growing awareness of the social and economic implications of the spirit created by lynching. "Outside" criticism had begun to offend the sensibilities of southern people and make them more self-conscious about charges that lynching was the act of barbarians. In short, public opinion was not unprepared to accept the surprise move made by the southern white women. And, from the start, the women gave thankful credit and offered their full cooperation in all anti-lynching movements, except the drive for a federal anti-lynching bill, which, because of the women's program of applying pressure to southern sheriffs, they neither favored nor opposed.

Perhaps the most important part of their work — the part that shocked a large section of the public into a changing view of the lynching problem — was that of gathering and publicizing facts about lynchings. The records in Mrs. Ames' office in Atlanta show that in more than one instance innocent Negroes were lynched on non-existent grounds at the instigation of white men who coveted the crops the Negoes had cultivated.

Here are some of the officially recorded facts the women publicized in newspapers and in printed circulars:

Nine of the 84 mob victims in the 1931-35 period were not accused of any crime and 25 others were accused of minor offenses.

Near Moultrie, Ga., Bo Brinson, an unaccused Negro, was killed at his home by a mob looking for John Henry Sloan, who had killed a white man.

In Baker County, Ga., a Negro killed a white bootlegger at a Negro dance. When the "right man" couldn't be found, two unaccused Negroes were lynched as an object lesson.

In Cheatham County, Tennessee, a Negro was lynched for slapping a white woman who was drinking beer in a Negro store.

At Tuscaloosa, Ala., a helpless Negro paralytic was lynched on the charge of attempted rape.

In Greenville County, S. C., a Negro was shot to death in his home at midnight by a masked mob after he had repeatedly asked for a settlement for his crop.

Revelation of such facts, Mrs. Ames said, aided the association in battering down opposition and winning popular public approval; and this, of course, represented a decided change in public opinion. As a result, the ranks of the women crusaders increased by thousands.

Mrs. Mullino Prevents a Lynching

HOW DO SOME 40,000 CRUSADING SOUTHERN WOMEN WORK?

On Christmas Day, 1934, Mrs. Ames was preparing for holiday festivities. Her telephone rang. An Associated Press editor informed her that a Negro had killed an officer in Schley County, Georgia, and that a mob was forming. Mrs. Ames rushed to the office. She discovered that the association had no signatures in Schley County. But in adjoining Macon County lived a member of the Georgia Council of the Association, Mrs. F. M. Mullino of Montezuma. Mrs. Ames telephoned Mrs. Mullino, who stopped preparation of her Christmas dinner and started telephoning everyone she knew in Schley County, urging each to bring pressure on the sheriff to prevent a lynching.

A short time later, Mrs. Mullino was informed that the Negro was in a swamp in her own county. She called the sheriff and his deputies, and a number of ministers and other public-spirited citizens, urging them to aid in preventing mob action. Until mid-afternoon she stayed at her telephone. Finally the Negro was captured — by officers. That Christmas Day was not blackened by a lynching in Georgia. The law took its course. Had Mrs. Mullino gone to the mob and pleaded for restraint she would have been taunted. She knew that. She knew, too, that a sheriff, even though disposed to carelessness in such cases, couldn't afford to take any chances after dozens of influential voters had demanded that every possible precaution be taken to insure a constitutional trial for the accused Negro.

That is only one of dozens of examples of the women's quick work. Early in their campaign they realized that the sheriff was the key man. It was up to him to handle any mob forming in his county. The women approached practically every southern sheriff, asked each to sign a pledge to do all within his power to prevent lynchings. Some of the sheriffs shrugged off the matter as "just another one of them things." But the women did not stop there. They went about their work of obtaining the signatures of influential persons, of talking anti-lynching in schools, churches and at public meetings, of distributing circulars giving facts on lynchings and asking the public to help prevent mob law.

Southern women know local politics. No strange woman from the central state office called on a sheriff in the counties of the fifteen states. Nothing like that. A woman voter living in each sheriff's own county went to him about the lynching matters, and that is about as firm political pressure as can be applied. Each time there was a crime, or an accusation which might lead to a lynching, the women went into swift action. The sheriff started getting calls from influential voters and visits from prominent men and women who demanded that he protect the Negro, take him to an unnamed jail if necessary. Some of these calls came from governors who had been informed by association members of possible attempted violence. In some southern states a governor can remove a sheriff who loses a prisoner to a mob. In certain instances southern governors have called out the militia to protect accused Negroes.

A Basic Approach to Race Relations

AT THE END OF 1937 THE SOUTHERN WOMEN ISSUED A startling statement entitled, "Where Were the Peace Officers?" It declared: "All eight victims of lynchings in 1937 were in the hands of peace officers. In seven of the lynchings, investigations indicate, officers were either in the mob or were in collusion with the mob."

Here is a typical message sent all persons who have committed themselves to the anti-lynching program: "Do you know your sheriff? Have you talked with your sheriff? If it is an election year, have you talked with the candidates for sheriff? Have you asked each candidate what he will do to prevent lynchings if elected? The voters will decide for or against lynchings this year."

The results have been extraordinary. To date 1229 southern peace officers in fifteen states have written their signatures to pledges to educate against lynching and to prevent mob action.

Many sheriffs have volunteered their pledges. In asking the sheriffs to sign pledges the women do not intend to intimate they think the sheriffs would countenance lynchings. All they want is cooperation, and most peace officers are giving it. A recent issue of the Texas Sheriffs Association's monthly magazine bitterly attacked lynching as murder and urged Texas sheriffs—there are 254 of them—firmly to aid in stamping out all such outrages.

The women have not limited their pressure to sheriffs. They have used the same methods on governors, legislators and other state officials. In Kentucky, 2000 women demanded repeal of the "gallows festival" law, which provided public hangings for men convicted on charges of rape. The law was repealed. The law, which made the crime of rape punishable by hanging in the county where the offense was committed, had been intended to quench the lynching spirit by demonstrating publicly that the law had taken its course, but the practice became distorted and was marked by many shockingly shameful celebrations, at which, as one southern newspaper pointed out, morbid appetite grew by what it fed on.

The women's work has included some activities more strenuous than signing petitions and applying pressure. They have faced howling mobs bent on lynching Negroes. Their pleadings were seldom heeded or even heard, but the women did all they could. Another dangerous job has been that of visiting the scenes of lynchings and collecting the real facts.

In cases — particularly those actually involving crimes against white women—in which the association has stepped into the scene, members have been taunted with:

"What if it were your daughter? What if it were you?"

To these jeering questions the women can reply with facts from the records. In 1936, the seven-year-old daughter of an Alabama woman, who was committed to the program, was attacked by a Negro. The mother, clinging tenaciously to her ideals and principles at a time when it would have been understandable had she succumbed to a profoundly human desire for revenge, prevented mob violence by her appeal that the law take its course.

Two aged sisters, who had only read of the southern women's program, pleaded with a posse of men in a Texas village in 1938 not to attempt to lynch a Negro who had attacked them. The sisters made their plea from beds in which their injuries confined them.

The association has its central council in Atlanta with Mrs. Attwood Martin as chairman and Mrs. Ames as director. There are thirteen council members at large, and each of the fifteen states has an independent council. The women work without pay and have planned their organization so shrewdly that it has none of the drawbacks common in ordinary guilds. They have carefully avoided strict rules of organization. "Much of the ineffectiveness of reform movements," said Mrs. Ames, "arises from the determination of the leaders to set up an organization into which are gathered only like-minded people, thereby cutting them off from making converts." And they have carefully avoided the mistake of getting too far ahead of public opinion. "Knowing at the start," said Mrs. Martin, "that if we went too fast, moved ahead of public opinion in a particular locality, it would be the Negro population that would suffer, we have refrained from overzeal until sure of our support."

And all along, every day of the year, the quiet educational program in which thousands of women have relayed the association's message to high schools and colleges, Sunday schools and churches, social, religious and patriotic clubs has been carried forward. Even the drama has been used in this earnest educational campaign. The association sponsored a one-act play contest, in which the subject was limited to anti-lynching. "Country Sunday" by Walter Spearman, teacher of journalism in the University of North Carolina, and "Lawd, Does Yo' Undahstan'?" by Ann Seymour, teacher in the schools of Palestine, Tex., were the winners. The plays were widely produced by Little Theater groups, and Miss Seymour's play was included in "Representative One-Act American Plays of 1938," which had a circulation of more than 20,000. The women have not been able to estimate the number of persons the message of the plays reached, nor do they have any idea how many thousands their constant flow of printed circulars on lynching and its prevention have affected.

The central office now sends out more than 10,000 pieces of literature upon direct request each year. Requests for information on the work have come from India, China, Africa, England, and the Philippines.

In order to accelerate the work, the association has requested Mrs. Ames to develop a study book of methods on the education of the public against lynching and its prevention. All the methods the women have found in ten years to be successful—ways of carrying on the educational program when there is no mob to combat, and action necessary when there is danger of a mob—will be included in the handbook. In addition there will be factual discussions of the racial problem in the South. With this book in the hands of thousands of women, each worker will benefit by the association's past experience in combating lynching. And the goal of the women is 100,000 signatures and pledges of cooperation from every sheriff in the South.

It is the hope, the prayer, the intention of these thousands of southern women that not far in the future they will look at the first page of their morning newspaper and see an item something like this:

Tuskegee Institute, Ala., Dec. 31 — (AP) — The Tuskegee Institute reported today that for the first time since the Civil War no lynchings occurred during a year in the United States.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

We shall miss you a whole lot at the Civil Rights Meeting. You really ought to make your plans to get here.

The idea is to break the meeting down into workshops and have each get up a list of things to be done in home communities to implement the rights which it will be discussing.

I have seen Mr. Gordon Hancock several times lately and we always go back to your main share in launching the Council.

Mrs. McKoy is sending the leaflets you requested.

Sincerely,

My dear Dr. Mitchell:

I know that the sessions on Human Rights will be good and well attended. Mrs. Tilly has a genius for working up conferences as I know from years of working with her. I wish I lived near enough to catch a street car or bus and come in~~to~~/to them but as it is I would have to count out three full days and I haven't that many days to spend right now.

Whatever decisions the meeting comes to in the way of action, I am sure you will let all of the SRC members know. On the other hand the meeting may be purely educational and so no action will be recommended. Whatever is put out from the conference, be sure that my name is right at the top of those listed to get reports.

If you would have Mrs. McCoy send me a couple dozen of the reprint of Ladies and Lynching I would like it. I have not been able to write her for reasons so if you will just tell her for me and let this letter answer both I shall appreciate it.

Very sincerely yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Thank you so much for your nice note of February 26.

Indeed, we are most happy to send you any pamphlets you wish of which we still have a supply. Connie has made up for you and is mailing today a packet containing one copy of "Lynching is Wholesale Murder," (of which we have only one copy), two copies of "The Mob Still Rides," two copies of "Repairers of the Breach," and two copies of "The Changing Character of Lynching." We have a supply of the latter three pamphlets and will be glad to send you additional copies if you wish. We have been unable to find "Feeling is Tense" but if it should turn up, we will see that you get it.

Our civil rights meeting of the 27th proved to be an excellent meeting and one I am sure you would have enjoyed. I am sorry you could not be here.

With kindest good wishes, and my regards to Lulu when you write.

My dear Mrs. McCoy:

The reprints of "Ladies and Lynching" came yesterday. Thank you.

I have this morning been checking the pamphlets which the Association of Southern Women etc issued during the years of his life and find that I have no copies of the reports on lynchings for 1937 and 1938. These are titled "Lynching Is Wholesale Murder" and "Felling Is Tense".

I know that Miss Clay kept a file of all material printed by the Commission, several copies of each in fact. I thought that since the SRC is a new organization without close relation to the Commission and subsidiary organization, Mr. Mitchell would be willing to complete this file of mine in a piece of work which was my creation.

If there are extra copies of "Repairers of the Breach" c could I have one for my files. I loaned my one copy and the lady departed for Florida without retunring it.

I shall deeply appreciated these contributions if they are available.

26 March, 1948

My dear Mrs. Saxon:

There was no bulletin after number 8 dealing e x-clusively with the lynchings reported and written up . In 1939 the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching held its annual Council meeting and in the program there was a short report on the 1938 lynchings. This program was the "Tenth Annual Conference".

The issues of the Southern Frontier from 1940 through 1944, that is through January of this last year, carried the reports. But "The Changing Character of Lynching" issued in July 1942 was the last formal amd official pamphlet of the Association.

It was Dr. Alexander's conviction that the ASWPL had completed its work and that I should take over the reorganization of the field work of the Commission. Since there were no funds to carry out both projects and since I could combine the work with the organization of state committees, I gave up the ASWPL as a separate organization.

I am not answering the letter from the New York Public Library. I think that library got all the material put out by the Commission in these years of the ASWPL and the Southern Frontier.

Sincerely yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

We received your letter of January 30, 1948, relative to our request for the Bulletin of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. We subscribe to the New South through our agent, The F. W. Faxon Company of Boston, Massachusetts. The publication in which we are interested at this time is the Bulletin mentioned above. We have nos. 1-8 (1932-1938) and should like to know if any issues later than no. 8 were published. If so, may we secure copies? If publication has ceased, will you write us definitely to this effect and also tell us the number and date of the last issue which appeared?

We shall be grateful for any assistance you may extend to the Library.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Thanks for your nice letter of the twenty-sixth. We were very glad that we could find for you the missing reports which you needed to complete your file.

You are so right about the tendency of people with like minds to get together and to agree with each other all over again, and this, though doubtless satisfying, does little to advance an idea or bring progress. To some extent, this may have been true of our own Conference on Civil Rights. The meeting was designed not only to bring people together from all over the South, and give them an opportunity to clarify their own ideas and thinking, but to have as wide a cross section of Southern groups of people as possible to speak out for the record and serve as initiators of similar meetings at the local level. You will be interested to know that a number of such meetings have been held and are scheduled and that we are experiencing a heavy demand for our digest of the report of the President's Committee. Many schools and colleges are using it as well as other groups.

We were sorry that you could not be here, and sorry too, that the location of Tryon makes such a trip difficult for you. With personal regards and good wishes, I am

My dear Mrs.McKoy:

Thank you for the final bulletin on the lynching reorts issued by the ASWPL. My file is complete now and for this fact, I owe you and Dr. Micthell many thanks.

I also want to thank you for the report of the Human Rights Conference and the recommendations passed by it. I have read them with interest.

I should have liked to have been there at the time that it was being held but the getting down and getting back are difficult trips for Tryon is not on the Southern which goes straight through. And I am so very allergic to travel at any time and under the most favorable circumstances that to enjoy anything between the trips means that it must be something in which I am deeply interested and about which I know little. I am the former in Human Rights but I am not uninformed in the latter.

Too, I am busy here in this state, away from home more than I like to be.

I have wondered whether or not there were many people at this conference who were in need of conversion. Too frequently like minded people get to-gether on occasions like this and as they are usually the same people each time, they come to the same conclusions which they have reached on many similar occasions.

Sincerely yours,

In combing through the finance files to see where additional funds might possibly be had for the remainder of the year, I noted that in 1947 the Western North Carolina Conference of the Woman's Society of Christian Service gave $25.00 to the Council, but that this gift has not been renewed so far this year.

Do you think it might be possible for us to secure a renewal of this donation for 1948, and if so, might we look to your own good offices in effecting it? Our budget is exceedingly slender now as you know, and we shall be most grateful for any efforts in our behalf.

My dear Dr, Mitchell:

I have read the reports of the staff of the Southern Regional Council in the latest issue of the NEW SOUTH and the tentative program with the financial statement which you sent out last week. Certainly you have not only conformed with the requirements set down in our last meeting but you have made the year's work and the proposed work for the coming year so clear and definite that no member can claim that they are not well-informed.

It is with genuine regret that I must ask you to have my reservation cancelled at the Piedmont Hotel. The calls on my time have increased to such an extent that I seem to have no opportunity to divert any of it to other calls.

I do wish for you and the Council success in the coming year's work and especially do I wish it in the financial realm. Without enough funds the program can not be expected to be successful.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

I attended last Friday the annual meeting of the Texas Interracial Commission at Fort Worth.

It was a good meeting, with plenty of zip.

In the main address for the evening session, in the First Presbyterian Church, Dr. H. O'Hara Lanier, the new president of Texas State University at Houston, recalled in the warmest terms your invaluable work in getting that movement going in Texas.

I thought you would like to have this evidence that you are still thus closely linked.

My dear Dr. Mitchell:

I know few persons who would have taken time out to write me of the things Mr. Lanier said about me. In fact, if I had to name another, I would have to take time off, too, to recall one. I do appreciate what he said but even more, I appreciate you, yourself, for telling me what he said.

He and I worked to-gether in Texas in the days when he was connected with the Houston public schools. We were concentrating, then, on graduate training for Texas Negroes and securing a subsidy for this training. We had to mow down the principal of Prairie View and the Dean of the Medical School at Galveston in order to get through our appropriation. But we got it anyway, with the help of the Board of Control and against the President of the University of Texas- I should say the interim President before Dr. Rainey came in.

Later I spent a week on the Hampton campus while Dr. Lanier was acting President of that school. We came to know each other right well then. He had been in Texas long enough for us to speak the same language.

It is good news that the Texas Commission is taking on new life. The Commission is more than of age but it still has on it men and women who resent any change from the old ways. They seem to look upon any suggestion of change as a personal reflection on their wisdom and their performance. I gather from your note that either they have lost their voices or are no longer numerous enough to outvote and out talk newer and younger members.

I am sorry that I can not attend the meeting that Mr. Williams is calling in Durham to consider ways and means to secure financial s support in North Carolina for the Council. It so happens that all my time and most of my organizational and planning abilities are consumed by the work of the office I hold in this conference. I shall have this office, barring impeachment, until 1952. By then I hope we will have built such a firm foundation under the program that it will stand regardless of every wind that may blow.

Our Methodist women's organization has a magnificent super-structure but the inspiration and the action does not reach the women who live in small towns and the open country- and these are the women who are the most important. They determine the kind of attitudes our Nation holds toward all social problems.

Agin I thank you for your thoughtfulness in writing me.

Dear Mrs. Ames:

Mrs. McKoy thanks you sincerely for the five dollars. I thank you for welcome advice and for the news that you are coming to the meeting. The date is November 9.

We have tried to bend in the last year or so toward a more popular style with New South. I admit we haven't got far. The Council has not tried to build a mass membership. I have repeatedly said that if we got about 5,000 members, that would be a resting point for a while. We are now at around 3,300. Unless we find money soon, we shan't be able to publish any more pamphlets; and I think it is on the pamphlets, perhaps, that we should push hardest to be more popular.

Perhaps this latest one, Race in the News, is more readable than some of the others. The issues of Time and Newsweek for October 3 gave it grand write-ups. There is really quite a lot that can be done by local groups--most particularly local church groups--in following up with editors the rules laid down in the little green book.

Ed Burrows is a good guy and we all enjoyed working with him this summer and some of last. I have impressed on him the enormous contribution that you have made to the whole cause.

My dear Mr. Mitchell:-

The material gotten out by the Council is good and I like it but I have frequently wished that some of it would be written in a style that would attract the so-called " man in the street". All of it has the effect of presenting incontrovertible facts but they are given in such a way as to leave the impression that they are secured by a research specialist for students in research.

I think that I know fairly well the kind of people, both men and women, whom you want to reach . That is, if you do want to reach the majority of the people in the churches and in the employed groups. If these are not your desired audience then what I have said has no application.

I enclose my check for the purposes named at the bottom.

Unless providentially hindered, as the brethren say, I plan to attend the annual meeting this November if and when you call it. I am free to do this for I have resigned my office in the Woman's Society of Christian Service of the Conference here and so I can, again and for good, maybe, plan to go where and when I want to.

I had an interested and interesting caller this past month, Mr. Burris. He had spent much time during the last two summers in the office there. He is coming over again, this time from Guildford College, to do some looking at my files on this and that dealing with the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. He introduced me to the general idea of something that he called cultural history, I think. Though I may not have the name right, I became quite interested in the idea.

Sincerely yours,

Bessie Pennell Ellis

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York
Plaza 1-0300

A statement by the Board of Trustees of the NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE, made public on Sunday, June 9, 1963, urging a crash program of special effort to close the gap between the conditions of Negro and white citizens.

As justified as are the concerns of the National Urban League over the current demonstrations in the South by Negro citizens seeking elementary and fundamental rights, these incidents are mild in comparison with those on the verge of taking flame in the tinder-box of racial unrest in Northern cities.

In these teeming Northern ghettos, hundreds of thousands of Negro citizens -- struggling beneath the mounting burden of automation, overcrowding and subtle discrimination -- are reaching the breaking point.

These are the unemployed, the ill-housed, the disillusioned. It is they who are seething with the lava of deprivation and denial, out of which violence and bloodshed can erupt at any moment unless swift and realistic effort is exerted to prevent it.

The belated actions by the Federal administration toward solution of the South's civil rights disturbances are commendable in some respects, and insofar as they reach into the agonies of the problem. But obviously they are too little -- and may well be too late -- to offset the inevitable explosion.

The National Urban League challenges the responsible leadership of our country to undertake a massive "Marshall plan" approach program of intensified special effort to close the wide economic, social and educational gap which separates the large majority of Negro citizens from other Americans.

Such special effort, which may appear to be in conflict with the principle of equal treatment for all, is required to overcome the damaging effects of generations of deprivation and denial and to make it possible for the majority of American Negroes to reach the point at which they can compete on a basis of equality in the nation's increasingly complex and fast-moving industrial economy.

The primary justification for such special effort lies in the fact that the nation itself is in jeopardy as long as it has within its body politic a large group of citizens who are socially and economically handicapped, often dependent, poorly educated and unable to assume the normal responsibilities of citizenship. And with the impact of automation, it appears possible that these conditions will become worse before they improve and that we may well create a permanent class of dependents unable to make a useful contribution to our way of life.

The second reason for such an effort arises from the fact that the intense needs and problems which are evident in so many Negro communities around the country are a direct result of past and present discrimination and exclusion based on race. Thus, as a matter of historic equity, compensatory effort is justified and may well be the only means of overcoming the heavy aftermath of past neglect. As the following indices suggest, despite progress in certain areas, a large segment of the American Negro population continues to lag seriously behind other Americans in almost every type of measurement which can be used to determine social and economic well being. And in certain catagories the gap is widening rather than closing.

The median annual income for the Negro family today is $3,233 as compared with $5,835 for whites, a gap of 45 per cent. That the trend is in the wrong direction is evidenced by the fact that the gap in 1952 was 43 per cent. Hence, that one element in the gap has widened rather than narrowed in barely more than a decade.

More than 75 per cent of all Negro workers are found in the three lowest occupational categories -- service workers, semi-skilled, and unskilled laborers and farm workers. Less than 39 per cent of all white workers are in these categories. And these are the very categories which are being most drastically affected by automation.

One of every six Negro dwelling units in the nation is dilapidated, obsolete or otherwise substandard, as compared to one in 32 white dwellings. In 1961 Negroes occupied 47 per cent of all public housing units in the country.

The lower earning power of Negro men and the more frequent break-up of Negro families make it necessary for more Negro than white women to become breadwinners. One in every four Negro women with pre-school children is at work and not at home.

More Negro youth drop out of high school than white youth, the fewer high school graduates enter college. During the 1960 school year, 21 per cent of the school dropouts were Negroes. Of youth graduating from high school only seven per cent were Negro youth.

Unemployment rates for Negroes are substantially higher than for whites at all ages: In 1961, 13 per cent of non-white men were unemployed as compared with 5.7 per cent of whites. Nationwide, Negro young people constitute only 15 per cent of the total youth population between the ages of 16 and 21, yet are 50 per cent of the youth population in this age bracket who are both out of school and unemployed.

To correct the problems indicated by these statistics, the cooperative effort of many social agencies, both public and private, in a massive "crash" attack on the problem is required. Such a crash program, sustained for a reasonable period of time, will realize savings of millions of dollars in the cost of welfare services and public hospitalization. Such a program will reverse the widespread social deterioration of urban families and communities and also help us develop the tools and understanding which will prevent the development of such deterioration in the future.

Specifically, what is involved in this kind of special effort which the Urban League now proposes?

(1) Our basic definition of equal opportunity must be broadened and deepened to include recognition of the need for special effort to overcome serious disabilities resulting from historic handicaps.

(2) Our society must recognize and put a higher value than it has ever before placed on the human potential possessed by Negro citizens. And then it must move positively to develop that potential.

(3) The best school and the best teachers are needed to prepare Negro children and other educationally disadvantaged youth to the point where they will have the desire for excellence in education and will be motivated to achieve and prepare to advance up the economic ladder with full realization of the rewards that will accrue in the process.

(4) Token integration and pilot placement in business and industry, labor and government, are not enough. A conscious planned effort must be made to place qualified Negroes in entrance jobs in all types of employment and in positions of responsibility, including lower and upper management positions.

(5) Affirmative action must be taken to destroy the racial ghetto and open housing opportunities of all types on the basis of need and ability to buy or rent.

(6) Public and private agencies in the health and welfare field must offer to the ghettoized segments of the population the best services, with highly competent personnel who understand the reasons for unstable family patterns, the relation between low socio-economic status and social problems, and what must be done to rehabilitate urban Negro families.

(7) Qualified Negroes should be sought and named to all public and private boards and commissions, and particularly those which shape policy in the areas of employment, housing, education and health and welfare services, the areas in which the racial differential is greatest and the need for dramatic change is most urgent.

To achieve this objective, strong leadership within the Negro community must be developed. This leadership then will be ready to step into the vanguard of the teamwork effort demanded in resolving the smoldering problems involved in civil rights.

(8) Negro citizens themselves, adults as well as young people, must maintain and even accelerate the sense of urgency which now characterizes the drive for first-class citizenship. Every opportunity for the acquisition of education and technical skills must be utilized. Every means of strengthening the social and economic fabric of the Negro community must be employed.

(9) It is vital that government, philanthropic foundations, business and industry reasses the extent of their financial support to established organizations committed to securing equal opportunity for Negro citizens to share in the fundamental privileges and rights of American democracy. It is imperative that all of these major sources of financial support substantially increase their contributions to the preventive programs carried on by established, responsible Negro leadership organizations.

(10) Constructive efforts on the part of Negro citizens must be exerted to carry their full share of the responsibilities for participation in a meaningful way in every phase of community life.

The kinds of action set forth in the foregoing represent the only way in which significant breakthroughs on a broad scale can be accomplished. This is compensatory consideration in the form of inclusion, selection and preference.

The consequences of the "Negro revolt," as it has been characterized are yet to be seen. It, therefore, behooves America's leadership to give serious consideration to a radical new approach by which the democracy we profess to practice is granted without further delay to all citizens.

What supply do you have left? And how much would they cost us?

If you have none left, is it possible that the printer would still have the type and could do a re-run of this; at what cost?

I hope you have a wonderful Christmas.

My dear Dr. Dunbar:

Once more we are in the process of making up the 1963-64 series of Public Affairs Forums which for the past seventeen years have been held at the Butler Street YMCA.

I am now writing you early to ask if you would again, or for the first time, if you have not appeared, be the speaker at one of the 1963-64 series. This particular series will begin September 25th and end May 13th with a two weeks recess during the Christmas Season.

The committee has selected the theme for the 1963-64 series "The Responsibility of Leadership in a Time of Crisis". In order to definitely establish this theme we have arranged with four outstanding faculty members of Atlanta University to take the first four sessions to develop this theme and recordings will be made or copies will be kept and sent to each prospective speaker, to ask the speaker to gear his remarks to this theme. Briefly, the position of the committee, in which opinion I share, is that for the next several years the Negro must point towards responsible leadership, and by responsible leadership is simply meant that the Negro and his leaders, including white men and women of good will, must now plan creatively and sanely, and must not let irresponsible people move in and take charge. The approach here is to be positive and constructive and does not necessarily imply disparagement of any present leadership. However, because of the volitile crisis through which we are going, it is felt that the most dedicated, consecrated and unselfish leadership, that this country possesses, must assert itself, if the gains are to be made lasting, and if improvement and advance is to be made without engendering untold hostility, not only in this generation but in years to come. The theme again is, "The Responsibility of Leadership in a Time of Crisis".

This still means that a speaker has considerable latitude to say whatever he desires but always having in mind, if possible, this great need for constructive, dedicated leadership during this critical time.

Would you be kind enough to use the enclosed card to indicate whether you will be available and give us a choice of dates so that we could fit you into a schedule which is most acceptable to you? We would appreciate an early a reply as possible since we would like to have the entire schedule firmed up by September 1st.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Warren R. Cochrane

ON THE NATIONAL CRISIS

A STATEMENT BY

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

AUGUST 1967

A STATEMENT OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

As an organization of Southerners of both races dedicated to equal opportunity for all, the Southern Regional Council has watched with profound grief and alarm the riots that have occurred during this first half of the summer of 1967. But far more destructive than riots would be the failure of the nation to recognize riots as a symptom of profound failure -- social and economic -- of American society to provide a chance for a decent and constructive life for vast numbers of its people, North and South, white and Negro.

Fully aware of the need for fact and sympathy in doing so, we are compelled as Southerners, out of a knowledge of our own region's tragic history of racial antagonism,to speak to the nation, urging that it act against the causes of the riots and not merely with repressive force to end them. We would also urge the South,as it continues to strive to restructure its society to conform to laws of equality and racial justice, to look upon these riots which have occurred in Northern cities as a severe object lesson in the tragic consequences of not achieving these objectives fully for all citizens.

We are grieved about the damage, destruction, injury and death attendant on riots. But we are even more concerned about the damage physically, mentally and spiritually that has been done to far more human beings over many years by the social conditions out of which the riots have risen. The grave national emergency of the riots at essence involves the conditions that southern organizations like ours have struggled against for years -- poverty and discrimination against Negroes.

As so often we have had in the past to point out that only a minority of white Southerners have engaged in racial violence, so it should be noted that only a minority of Negroes have succumbed to the destructive fury expressed in the riots. But the suffering and injustice which have stirred their fury are borne by many millions more, whites as well as Negroes.

Particularly is this true in the South. However, we can take neither comfort nor any degree of self-satisfaction out of the fact that until this moment, most of the riots and the worst of them have occurred outside the South. We can only acknowledge that historically, the South has exported people of both races not properly prepared for life in a complex modern nation, and with them have developed new variants of the deprivation and racial antagonisms that have so long crippled the South. And we can only look about our own region and know that the same conditions which have exploded into riots exist in many places in the South. The starvation-level poverty in many parts of the rural South is a particularized problem of ours, more severe and punishing probably than any other poverty in the nation.

Progress in race relations and against poverty in the South has been great in recent years. But it has not been enough. While these states have made efforts toward compliance with federal civil rights laws, perhaps to a greater degree than the rest of the nation is aware of, there has been achieved in no area of desegregation the goals of national law and commitment. In the basics of making a living, the South's per capita income has increased at a greater rate than that of the nation since 1950. But in terms of actual dollars, the gap between the South's per capita income and that of the rest of the nation has widened.

In these and other endeavors, the South has been gaining, but not enough.

In 1960, when white violence was the problem, a Southern Regional Council publication, "Racial Violence and Law Enforcement," stated: "Law enforcement is... an essential factor in the progress of race relations. In the continuing racial crises of the South, the police have two basic responsibilities: to enforce the laws with absolute impartiality; and, secondly, to maintain a climate of public order in which constitutional liberties can be freely exercised, by white men or Negroes, by integrationists, or segregationists." These responsibilities remain.

There should be no confusion of rioting with either the tradition of non-violent Negro protest demonstrations or with the honorable philosophical principles of civil disobedience. Unlawful violence by a mob has none of the moral defense or force of these traditions, and such violence must be quelled, just as white mob violence against constitutional peaceful protest has to be. But in both instances, we must be alert to the dangers of excessive, unconstitutional use of police force; we must look with apprehension on any tendency to be satisfied merely with the momentary ending of the system of violence without following through with treatment of the social and economic malfunctionings that are the underlying causes of such violence.

We must note too another grave factor in our current crisis. There now are millions of Americans outside our economic system, neither contributing to it or benefiting from it. This must realistically be seen as a serious threat to that economic system.

The Southern Regional Council supports and urges national efforts to remedy problems of race and poverty. We support and urge similar efforts on the state and local level in the South, public and private. We need to continue present efforts and improvise creative new approaches to solve such regional problems as rural and urban poverty, educational deprivation, and race relations. The South has yet the opportunity to go beyond technical compliance with law to the functioning of a truly equal, harmonious society. And because it has come to basic changes in the nature of American society later than the rest of the nation, the South also has greater opportunity, yet, to avoid mistakes others have made. We, the South, can still avoid in most cities the development of ghettoes. We can utilize intelligent planning to make people rather than things the central factor in industrialization, urbanization, the transformation of agriculture, and the utilization of natural resources and the South's as yet largely unspoiled beauty of landscape.

The Southern Regional Council believes that the good will between the races in the South has not deteriorated in these past years of often tense, total change of the legal framework of relationships between the races. Indeed, we believe that relationships have been improved to the extent that Negro Southerners have gained in self-respect and status in society, and to the extent that they have come to equal footing in their day to day, face to face encounters with white Southerners. We continue in the conviction that for the South and for the nation, the only realistic and moral goal in regard to race relations is the full integration of Negroes and other minority groups into the American society. We recognize and applaud efforts of such groups to develop legitimate methods of gaining objectives of self-interest, economically and politically. But we continue to oppose racism and separatism as antithetical to everything America stands for. It is our belief that Southerners, white and Negro, have moved and are resolved to continue to move toward the kind of society, one of equal opportunity and human dignity, made possible by the Constitution of the United States.

It is toward this high goal rather than to the absence of riots that we must look.

Dear Mr. Myrdal:

Each year the Southern Regional Council holds an annual meeting for three days for its 100 members. During the course of that meeting this year, and on the evening of Thursday, November 14, our annual dinner will be held for our members and staff and for approximately 100 distinguished guests from the region.

This is to most cordially invite you to be our speaker for that occasion. While it is not essential, we would like to request your consideration of our publishing your speech immediately after the event.

In recent years speakers at our annual dinner have been Mr. Roy Wilkins, Governor LeRoy Collins, Dr. C. Vann Woodward, and last year Dr. Kenneth Clark of New York. A copy of Dr. Clark's speech is also enclosed.

I have been told that it is very likely you will be in this country at that time and, therefore, we hope you will be able to be with us.

As you may recall from your research in this region, the Southern Regional Council was formed in 1944 as an outgrowth of the Commission on Interracial Coopeation. The Council is composed of 100 distinguished Southerners. A list of our members is enclosed. A staff of approximately 40 persons carries out the organization's programs in race relations and regional development.

I very much hope that you will find it possible to accept this invitation, and I and the members of the Council are most grateful for your consideration of it.

Sincerely,

Transcription of Presidential Luncheon
1969 Annual Meeting - November 6, 1969
Paul Anthony, Presiding

Paul Anthony:

First, may I remind you of what Dr. Wheeler mentioned before the last session broke up. Namely, that you will be able to check out of the motel before we go into the next session, and we do hope that session will begin on time. There remains a great deal to be done. I think you would appreciate this little piece of information -- I do, When we went over the menus and planned the meals, we decided that folks don't need desserts -- there's no use giving them those sweets they aren't going to eat anyway, because they cost money. And, yesterday we were almost ready to start the proceedings at lunch and one of the men serving alerted Jim Wood to the fact that you all better not start yet, we've still got to serve dessert. And, Jim said, "We didn't want any dessert." And, he said, "I'm sorry it comes in the package." So, you have dessert in spite of everything we did.

This is a rather important occasion for many, many reasons. It's a very important occasion for me because this is the President's lunch, and you will hear the President's address. And, most appropriately, while you've met them and know them, we have two of our former presidents -- Mr. Dabbs and Mr. Wright -- here to share the honor with Mr. Wheeler.

We have next to me Dr. Benjamin Mays -- among other things, newly elected member of the Atlanta School Board, President-Emeritus of Morehouse College, Life Fellow of the Southern Regional Council, and innumerable other things. But, probably most important of all President-Emeritus to so many of us. We are honored to have him with us.

One of the unorthodox things about the luncheon is that I pulled rank and requested permission to be the chairman. I did so becuase while you very properly paid your deep respect to John Wheeler last night, I wanted an opportunity to do so, too, both for the staff and particularly for me. I was thinking during lunch of an incident that happened in Durham about seven years ago. A bunch of up-start kids picked up placards and started picketing downtown, and that was the reaction of down-town Durham -- a bunch of "up-start" kids. John Wheeler walked out of his bank and picked up one of those placards and walked with the kids. Suddenly, Durham knew they had something serious going there.

John Wheeler has not only picked up one of our placards, he picked it up and he has led us, he's led us beautifully, strongly. He's a very busy man, he's the head of a very big bank, he's more involved in more organizations than I can think of, and he's involved in them because they represent things to which he is very devoted. Yet, no matter how busy he's been, John Wheeler has always been available, and John Wheeler has never done anything or gone anywhere since he's been president of the Council, that he didn't think of the Council and represent it. I can't express to you adequately how important this has been to me and how grateful I am for it. John, thank you.

The other unorthodox thing about this luncheon is a staff member will introduce the speaker. We aren't trying to inject the staff in here, though several people have complained, "Why are you hiding them so?" But, as close as John has been to all of us, I have observed for a long time that a deep, almost father-son relationship existed between John Wheeler and Vernon Jordan, and it's been a beautiful thing to observe -- a good thing. And, I thought it only appropriate because John pushed this man, he's led him, he's inspired him, he's hit him, and he's cussed him out. And, he's helped him greatly. I thought it only appropriate that Vernon Jordan introduce our President for the presidential address.

VERNON JORDAN:

That's right, Paul, he's done everything except loan me some of the Mechanics and Farmers Bank money!

This is really a great privilege for me, and I'm in bad shap for the reason that after last night there's nothing for me to say. Certainly, I cannot match Harold Fleming in his wit and his prose. Clearly, I cannot compete with Mr. Wright in his courtroom eloquence. So, I'm left here to just say it as best I can. I had really planned, and had told the staff, that since I was going to have to introduce John Wheeler I could just write out an eloquent statement about John Wheeler. Well, Harold Fleming, Mr. Wright, and Les Dunbar and all of them have forced me to change my mind. And, so, I don't have a written introduction.

Clearly, John Wheeler is many things. A lawyer, a banker, a college trustee, a Presidential appointee, he's ambassador, a layman in his church, he even sings in the choir, a musician, he's a father to governors, even when the governors don't want to listen. But, I suspect more than anything else, that John would like to be remembered as a banker and as a friend to people. It's interesting that those of us who see John, like I do, and talk with him -- I never talk to him about banking because I have a habit of not talking to people about things I don't know anything about. But he is a banker -- that's his daily trade -- and I've been to his bank on any number of occasions. Not only is he a banker, he's a pioneering banker, and the Mechanics and Farmers Bank, which he heads, has probably made more equal opportunity laons than any other bank in this country. But, in addition to that, Mechanics and Farmers Bank makes innumerable low-income housing loans. Right now to the tune of about $8,000,000.00, and has taken its experience in this area and pushed the larger banks of North Carolina and of the South to do likewise.

But, most important to me is that John is a friend to people. And, he has especially been a friend to young blacks like myself. He's been an inspiration to us, and he has always been one to whom we could go for advice and counsel. I always like to think that I'm kind of special with him, because when he can't go to some of those Presidential commissions or some of those meetings he sends me in his stead. Indeed, that's a great honor. But in addition to that I find it necessary, periodically, to seek him out, to find him, wherever he is. Sometimes at his bank, sometimes in his hospital room, oftentimes at Capahosic. Once he even met me when I was driving to Boston on the highway where we had lunch, and we talked. And I learned, and I was instructed, and I've been guided. And, I'm just one of many young blacks, indeed, young whites, who have sought John Wheeler out for inspiration, for advice and counsel. And, indeed, greater respect and affection can no man have for any man than I have for John Hervey Wheeler. Therefore, I am proud to present to you, my friend, and a friend to people, and indeed a friend to the Southern Regional Council, John Hervey Wheeler. Thank you.

JOHN H. WHEELER:

Thank you Vernon, and also thank you, Paul. And thank each one of you, as I said last night, for letting me share with you this experience in which we tried to make our country the kind of nation that it ought to be.

You know, there is one aspect of my not being President anymore which some of you may be pleased with, and that is you'll only be bothered with one of those Wheeler boys from now on. We are still brothers, though, and I suspect I can be as close to him as anyone, and I don't know about being Vernon's father. I sought of look to him the other way, because he's a person of great wisdom, a person of great vitality. It's true, I've asked him to appear for me at times when we were working on the Kaiser Commission. And, when I would go to the next meeting they'd look at me in a disappointed way and say, "Where's Vernon?"

Vernon impresses people everwhere he goes. It's not because, particularly, of his fine looks, stature, but because inside is a great, deep friendliness for all people.

I heard Paul's statement about getting checked out and back into session before two o'clock. I shall not try to burden you with too much. I jotted down a few things last night of what I wanted to say, and came into session this morning -- well, Les whittled away a few of them when he spoke, then this morning I found a few more of them whittled away. Just the same, I think this may indicate that some of us are having some second thoughts about what we're doing today, and about where we are going. And, I do hope that no one will construe anything which I will say as being an effort to say to the new administration what it ought to do. Simply as a Council member, I'm expressing to you some of my views as to where we are going and what some of our responsibilities will be.

First of all, it is my hope that the Council will in the future go beyond the mere reaffirmation of its conviction that lasting progress and economic development and human relations cannot be achieved until we are able to make of ourselves a truly integrated society of equals committed to the eradication of discrimination and prejudice based on race, education, religious beliefs, or economic status. While it may be true that since the turn of the century many young democratic practices of our society have been eliminated, it is just as true the forces of injustice, oppression, and special privilege have never ceased to invent new and insidious devices for control of American human and material resources. And this control has been attempted by the favored few. They have caused trouble throughout human

They brought about the Reformation, they brought about the whole Christian movement during the time of the Roman Empire. And, they even before that, brought about the experiences of the Jewish people. In fact, we seem to develop an unique capacity for turning away from the great moments in our history. This periodic flight from greatness is, indeed, difficult to explan. We observe, however, that it has occurred time and time again during periods which appeared to foretell a new and better way of life for all.

So, like the fellow who was trying to teach me to jump my horse one time -- having been born in Kentucky where people either know how to ride or they try. And, I learned how to ride fairly well, but I had never jumped. This fellow was trying to show me how to make my horse jump the barrier. He did it a couple of times, and the horse turned away a couple of times, but the next time he went over. He said, "You have to be very careful because if the horse turns away, and you're not firmly set in the saddle he'll throw you off. You'll go off sideways." I said, "How can you tell when he's going to turn away?" He looked at me and said, "Only the horse knows."

I think that's the way it's been in the history of our country, and in the history of our struggle for a better way of life. Every time we've tried to move into new and higher ground, we've seemed to almost reach our goal only to be set back by some unpredictable event or set of forces. And, this single characteristic of American life has shown itself in periodic resurgence of the forces of reaction. It's shown itself in the present negative national influence. It's showing itself now and it has many times before in the loss of commitment, the vision of equal opportunity to learn and to perform as an integral part of this important, free society. Then it has shown itself, too, in the abuse of opportunities for legislative and administrative reforms. For, instance, now, the punitive nature of the Congressional attacks upon foundations in the name of tax reform which those with the greatest power have used the cry for tax reform to enact even more repressive measures upon the general public and the great masses of people of this country. Then it shows itself in its refusal to appropriate funds to implement programs even after they have been enacted by Congress and some of these include the programs for low and middle-income housing, programs designed to beef up and provide for more nearly adequate community welfare, and for Title I programs affecting our schools.

As we've looked at this see-saw battle, as we've looked at this ebb and flow of the public conscious when it rises up to noble heights and the tides seem to ebb away, I think we can recognize that it's only one of the natural phenomena of human history. And, for this reason we should not be too discouraged as we face new battles and that we now have some new problems. Just after 1861 we rose to new heights, passed the civil rights act of 1866. This, in many respects, is still valid today. Then we moved on a little bit and before we could get any further we took a great set-back in the Slaughterhouse Cases, and the decisions in those cases which declared that the police power of the state was used justifiably to maintain certain conditions of inequity. Then we debated, very furiously, for three years more in the Post-Reconstruction Period. And 1875, due to the impetus of some very learned black congressmen, particularly those of South Carolina, we passed the Civil Rights Act of 1875. This marked a new pennacle in our efforts for social justice when in 1883 the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional. And, little by little between that time and 1896 when the Supreme Court handed down its decision of Plessy vs Ferguson there was a whittling away of all the gains we had made. And those who would fight for a new order found themselves by 1900 completely helpless, disfranchisement, there had been the Hayes-Tillman Compromise, so similar to the present legislation proposed by the Nixon government, having to do with federal tax-sharing with the states. So that we see great similarities in these patterns. I have the greatest respect for those patriots in our country who between 1800 and the early '30's fought for a new way of life. They had no tools, they had no Supreme Court, they didn't have the vote, they didn't have the voice in Congress. But still they were inventive to problems beyond the extent to which many of us are inventive today. They managed to do a holding action, and by some strange coincidence this Council's prosperity and its usefulness has seemed to coincide with the end of each national and international conflict.

Following World War I we had a great surge for identity by Negro people throughout the country, and then we had a counter-surge to stop that search for identity -- the Ku Klux Klan rode the South, the Commission on Interracial Commission came into being to try to offset some of this. Martin Luther King's grandfather about that time was running a boycott against the Atlanta Georgian, trying to put it out of business, because it was the paper in Atlanta that was trying to reverse the feeling generated during World War I that "we'll all be brothers after we fight to save democracy." And, I was old enough at that time to visit the hospitals with groups who entertained the soldiers. There was no separation, as I recall, in the hospital at Fort McPherson here based on race. We entertained the white soldiers, black soldiers, and they all talked about a new way of life after the war.

But, you know the story of what happened in the '20's. The young black men who came back from France and who had understood what it meant to be real men began to stand up and make their own decisions. I recall Jim Nabrit, a very radical person in college, couldn't get out fast enough so he could get into law school so he could get out and bring some of the law suits. And, he and two other men brought the first case having to do with the Texas Primary in 1927. And, Justice Cardoza, on the Supreme Court and deciding with him, pointed out to the people of Texas how they could rewrite that statute so they could still have a lily-white Texas primary. There was another case which we lost.

Then there was a pretty steady roster of cases in which the Supreme Court helped develop the framework for a new kind of life. Before that we had one case, just one case, between 1900 and 1927, and that was the Atcheson, Topeka, and Santa Fe Case in 1916, having to do with the right of the Negro person to ride on the pullman car. But, following 1927, there was the Gaines case in 1935, the Sweat vs Painter in 1949, we had the Brown case in 1954, and the long succession of cases thereafter having to do with a great number of civil matters. And then in 1964 the Civil Rights Act, the V oting Act, and in 1969 a reaffirmation of the '54 decision in the Mississippi Case.

And now tax reform. Some of these were pluses, some of them were minuses. The tax reform bill is a minus, very definitely. But regardless of our successes, we would do well to reassess and reappraise ourselves in the light of changes w hich are taking place around us. The more basic truth are things which are necessary for the achievement of universal brotherhood to be one of our objectives. And, as we look ahead with Les Dunbar, as he spoke last night, to the ultimate achievement of a society of equals, a society for human purpose, I would hope that we will reassess ourselves, re-evaluate ourselves, take a second look at where we are going and why. With this, then, let me please submit to you an incomplete laundry list of the programs to which we may address ourselves.

I think we should have greater involvement of individual Council members in specific, unofficial, projects. One of these is the almost one-man project carried on this year in the North Carolina Legislature by Marion Wright against capital punishment. Then, Aaron Henry has not been a one man, he's been a real team person, but t ere is no question about the fact that he's been a great leader in political reform and advancement in Mississippi. And our own Raymond Wheeler was a pioneer in establishing the authenticity of the effect of hunger upon so many of our people.

Then, too, we might look at some of the real partnerships that we can estanlish if we really mean what we say. You know, politically we have been looking at phantom programs. People who run for office and promise the world, who want your support, but who don't want to give anything in return. They don't want to support your candidates. This is particularly true in the South. This means that we have almost reached the point of political bankruptsy. Now on the white side of the picture, I think the whole of this responsibility rests, because a great volume of Negro voters who are registered in the South have been supporting more white candidates than they have black candidates. But in return there has been absolutely nothing.

Then, in the field of economic development we need to look at who the planners are and who we bring up to be the city planners, those who determine the use of the tax funds and the direction in which development shall occur. We don't see enough administrators at the top level, nor enough even being trained as interns. We don't see enough contractors in the contracting game. This is one ~~aaaa~~ of fierce competition, but it is also one in which there is great protection for a favorite few. There is no reason why a black contractor shouldn't have the opportunity of "making it." There is no reason why some of our colleges shouldn't do as Benjamin Mays did when he was at Morehouse College -- look up the black architects. And he fought with his Board of Trustees to see that a black architect got a chance to build and to design some of the buildings on his campus. And from the day he designed the first one, a black architect has designed every building on the campus of Morehouse College. How many are there Benny, seven or eight? Nine.

Where does the insurance business go for these outlets? Who are the lawyers preparing the applications to HUD for domitory and student unions? We just have not seen any of our black colleges using black lawyers. We have not seen them using the black architects, neither have we seen them using black contractors. You know, some of this starts at home. And there are black and white trustees on the boards of all of our southern colleges.

Then, we haven't had adequate financing made available to persons who are black. So, we made in our own bank a loan to a young man who was burned out. He won the second most lucrative contract for dry-cleaning at Ft. Bragg. The next night his plant was burned down. We finally joined with the First National City Bank of New York and theAmalgated Bank of Savings in Chicago to lend him $350,000 to build his plant back. He now has what is considered to be the most modern plan of its kind in the whole Southeast. He employs around 50 people. One of the things we discovered was that the great bank like the First National City, with all it's been saying, had never made an SBA loan before. This was a great surprise, not only to us, but to a great many of our friends.

And, then, on the question of black separatism. I think that this is what we're talking about. We've got to be given the protection, encouragement, and the opportunity to do our own thing just as well as anyone else can do it. And, I think if the black separatists have missed any point, it is that in our zeal we are missing the great urgency of training in-depth and for burning the midnight oil to develop the competence necessary. But part of this competency comes from practice.

When the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, under Kennedy, began to operate one of the first cases that came to it came from the Employment Security Commission of the District. And, the Director's position was opened and as a Georgian-born man of twelfth grade education was applying for the job. Another was a black man who had been there for thirty years and was a graduate of Cornell. The job went to this white Georgian employee who finished high school. The reason given, when investigated, was that he had had great experience, and even though he had less formal preparation, he was better prepared to do the job than the black graduate of Cornell. Well, this is true, I'm sure, because the black graduate of Cornell had been isolated in his employment from everything that would have equipped him for advancement. But, nevertheless, the President at that time did replace the fellow, and the black man who had worked there for thirty years became the director of the Employment Security Commission. This is what we mean by making up the past errors. And I'm sure we have had a great many of them.

We need to take a look at the urban crisis and what our role may be in helping to solve some of the problems of the urban crisis. How we can stimulate the construction of low-income housing and make sure it is put in the proper place where it will have a chance to be integrated, and where it will have a chance to survive, and where those who live in it will learn respect for one another. This is an area, too, where black architects and contractors should have equal opportunities, and the black lawyers, also.

Since last year when we talked about this, Section 237 of the Housing Act of 1968 has not been funded. And, I sincerely hope that the Council will consider the possibilities of becoming an adviser to those persons who want to buy Section 235 individual family homes, but whose incomes are too low or their credit is too poor. They can buy these homes if they are buttressed by an approved adviser. And, we can be doing this in almost every one of the towns in which we operate on a counselling basis.

Then, the Council, in my opinion, has not yet spoken adequately to an evaluation of the Nixon proposals. First, for the drastic revisions of the system of welfare payments administered, as of now, by the several states. Secondly, as to the delivery of health services based upon individual need. Thirdly, the Nixon proposal for federal revenue sharing with the states, and fourthly, OEO reorganization to allow for new and innovative programs. We don't know what they are. The one with reference to job incentives, the family assistance programs, and for assistance to the aged, the blind, and the disabled. Only one of these recommendations is being pushed vigorously by the Administration and that is the program of unrestricted federal revenue sharing by the states. In my opinion, we do need to speak to this. The remainder may turn out to have been a mere exercise in rhetoric of deception to which we have become accustomed.

Then we need to look to the means by which we may revise and change the system of administration of justice. In this respect let us not relax our vigil as a Council, because with absolute certainty there will always be a George Wallace waiting in the wing.

As we leave you I would just like to recount our experience of a few days ago at the meeting of the American Bankers' Assocation. The Governor of Hawaii spoke to the convention of about 12,000 Americans from the mainland . These are the people coming in to change the customs, create class divisions, create certain situations of disadvantage on the island. He said, "We are delighted to have you here because this is a marvelous state. So many people have said that Hawaii is the melting pot of nations where all people of all ethnic origins learn to live together in peace and harmony. I want to tell you that that is not true. Hawaii is a place, instead, where all people are Hawaiians, and no one stops to look back to see what you ethnic origin or your religion may be."

In time, I hope we may achieve this point. Thank you.

PICK YOUR TARGET

ONE comment is made again and again by young people who are active in the fight for change: "It isn't going to happen overnight." The statement is resigned but not despairing, for it clearly implies: "But it is going to happen."

And politics can make it happen — at least that's what many student activists are trying to prove in this election year. Their aim is simple: to fill as many elective offices as possible with men and women who hold the same views as they do on such issues as Vietnam, race relations, poverty, and urban decay. They're working for candidates on all levels of government, from Congress down to local school boards.

MLB

However, political action doesn't have to involve campaigning for a particular candidate or cause. One non-partisan way to help make the system work is to persuade all those who are eligible, to register and vote. That's what "Youth in Politics" did in White Plains, N. Y., this summer. The group was part of a program for high school students called Encampment for Citizenship (see "Train for the Job," page 4). For two days each week, the teenagers pitched in and helped local residents with a voter-registration drive.

In the process they learned a lot about the grass-roots level of politics. Their job — unglamorous but essential — was to go from apartment house to apartment house, ringing doorbells and asking tenants whether they were registered to vote. If the answer was no, the students tried to convince them they should register soon. They took down the names and addresses of the people they talked to, for later follow-up calls by the Urban League and the League of Women Voters.

When they grew weary of ringing doorbells, they took to the streets. In our photo, George Stubbs and Audrey Broner take down information from a passer-by. For Audrey, this wasn't the first experience in practical politics, and it wouldn't be the last. When she got home to Boston, she said, she would be campaigning for Father Robert Drinan, a Jesuit priest who is seeking the Democratic nomination to the House of Representatives.

The students all agreed that the work was physically tiring and often emotionally frustrating. For one thing, at least half of the people they tried to call on were not at home. For another, many of the residents seemed totally unconcerned about the upcoming election. White members of Youth in Politics had an extra problem: they felt self-conscious about seeming to interfere in the affairs of this predominantly black community. And even the black members felt that being from out of town put them at a disadvantage.

During their break for lunch on one especially hot and tedious day, several students said they were disappointed at their failure to accomplish anything significant. They had registered only a few voters, they complained. Harcourt Tynes, a representative of the Urban League, tried to encourage them. "Even if we get only 500 names to follow up on, that'll be an accomplishment," he said.

Then the teenagers raised another question: Why hadn't there been an educational campaign to lay the groundwork for their efforts? EFC director Douglas Kelley had the answer to that one: "If they could solve all their problems by themselves, they wouldn't need us!"

TRAIN FOR THE JOB

"I'D LIKE to do something to help, but I don't know how to begin." There's a special place for teenagers who talk that way: the Encampment for Citizenship.

At the EFC, a student can get basic training for social action. At three different sites this past summer, a group of about 80 young people (more than half of them on scholarship) went through a work-and-learn experience that most agreed was worth at least a year in school. In White Plains, N.Y. (near the Encampment's New York City headquarters, at 2 W. 64th St.), campers pounded the pavement in a voter-registration drive. In Tucson, Arizona, they studied the impact of growing population on the desert wilderness. In Great Falls, Montana, they helped build houses for low-income families (see photo above).

Since each encampment includes teens from a wide variety of backgrounds, there is almost sure to be someone who can explain how a black ghetto child feels about policemen, or why population control is a religious issue. Thus, the campers learn from each other.

They also learn from guest lecturers and workshop leaders. In fact, a camper's choice of workshop — several different ones are available — helps decide what social action he's likely to take when he gets home.

Phyllis Benjamin, who reported on the Great Falls encampment for Voice, explained why she joined the Indian Heritage and Social Change Workshop: "I had always felt that the Indian was misrepresented in history books, and I wanted to find out the truth." One of her fellow workshoppers was Jim Breiler (at bottom in photo), who is part Okanagon and part Flathead Indian. "I joined the workshop to find out how much non-Indians know about Indians," he said. Both expressed the belief that people of other races must become aware of the problems of Indians before true social change can occur.

A Record of Achievement

Encampment for Citizenship

Eighty-five young persons returning this weekend to homes in 18 states (and one foreign country) leave behind a record of solid achievement during their six-week stay in Great Falls.

They were members of the Encampment for Citizenship, which now has been held here three successive summers. In contrast to insinuations last spring in Great Falls City Council that it consisted of subversives, or worse, the group made a highly favorable impression on townspeople for alertness, attitude and ability.

The schedule included seven staff-led workshops from which campers could choose. Workshops dealt with community development; environment and resources; youth in politics; American Indian heritage; black heritage; tutoring and headstart, and educational reform. Each workshop met two afternoons a week and devoted two additional days a week to related field work in the community.

In connection with their community service projects, the campers:

Helped 10 low income families build houses; planned and built a playground on Hill 57 with the help of local firms and people and the Indian youngsters themselves; tore down empty Mount Royal houses which had become eyesores; gathered up old car junk scattered around an area south of Great Falls; marked a trail at the Farmers Union camp in the Highwoods, and researched, wrote and distributed pamphlets setting forth what the average householder can do about pollution and drug abuse.

In addition, campers worked in day care classrooms and helped set up tutoring programs at Opportunities, Inc.; presented an original black heritage program of songs, dances and poetry reading at the Public Library and Malmstrom; maintained an Encampment booth at the State Fair; and did a community survey of the area around Heisey Memorial, where they were housed.

One weekend field trip took campers to farms and ranches for first hand experience in rural life after a weeks study of agricultural issues, problems and practices. Another trip took them to Glacier National Park, Two Medicine and Browning, where they visited the Plains Indian Museum and attended the Indian Days celebration; and a third took them camping in the wilderness with the Montana 4 x 4 Patrol as hosts.

It was an exercise in understanding which benefitted both encampment members and residents of the community. Once described as an experience in democracy for leaders of tomorrow, the Encampment for Citizenship provides something this country must have much more of if it is not to pull apart into myriad pockets of prejudice, fear and intolerance.

A chance to learn how an individual can make a difference in politics, social service and social change. A chance to make lifelong friends among youth of nearly every racial, religious and economic group in America. That's Encampment for Citizenship (EFC).

Great Falls, because of its western and American Indian culture, was selected to host one of the three EFC summer training programs in the nation this summer. Others were in White Plains, N.Y., and Tucson, Ariz.

The 85 teen-agers here were from 18 states (including two from Montana). Two came from Israel, one from Guam and several from Puerto Rico. The boys lived in the Heisey Memorial, Encampment center, and the girls, at the school next door. The staff of 15 was headed by Dr. John A. Andrews, University of Buffalo counselor.

The Encampment's method emphasized learning by participation—seeing, doing and discussing, as well as lectures and films. Topics were ones of relevancy in every community—educational reform, environment and resources, youth in politics, Head Start and tutoring, Black Heritage, Indian Heritage, Community Development.

Nonprofit, nonpartisan and nonsectarian, Encampment for Citizenship was founded by the American Ethical Society. For 17 years Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt chaired its sponsors' committee. New York Mayor John V. Lindsay is now sponsors' chairman.

FACTS ABOUT THE 1970 ENCAMPMENTS FOR CITIZENSHIP

Three Encampments for Citizenship were held during the summer of 1970 (July 5 through August 15): at the Southern Arizona School, outside Tucson, Arizona; the Heisey Memorial Youth Center, Great Falls, Montana, and the Westchester Ethical Humanist Society, White Plains, New York.

Two hundred forty-one campers from diverse backgrounds described below were enrolled. Eleven of them were second-year campers taking part in an experimental Encampment alumni project attached to the Arizona Encampment; 230 were first-year campers in the 15 through 18 age bracket.

Of the 46 staff (18 in Arizona, 15 in Montana, 13 in New York), 18 were Encampment alumni and 19 were experienced Encampment staff members. All but 7 were adults, most of them teachers or social workers. Sixteen of the staff had master's degrees (two of them Ph. D.s), and 7 (including two Catholic sisters) college or university teaching experience. There were graduate nurses at two of the Encampments, a student nurse at the third. Only two staff members were over 35 in age.

Staff members included ten returned Peace Corps Volunteers, 3 former members of the Teacher Corps and one former VISTA volunteer. More than a third of the staff were non-white: 6 black Americans, 1 African, 3 Puerto Ricans, 3 Mexican-Americans, 3 Indian Americans and 1 Japanese-American.

About half the campers at each site were from the New York City area; the other half represented 28 other states, Washington, D.C., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, Mexico and Israel. In terms of income background, there were approximately a third each of campers of upper middle, lower middle, and low income families. Although no study has been made of religious affiliations we believe there were about 30% each of campers of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant backgrounds and about 10% with Ethical Society or Unitarian-Universalist affiliations.

The first Encampment to be held in the Southwest was directed by Arthur Dobrin (Leader of the Long Island Ethical Humanist Society; former Peace Corps Volunteer in Kenya, East Africa; 1969 Montana Encampment Director). Assistant Directors were Miss Sue Ward (year -'round Encampment Alumni Program Coordinator; former Peace Corps Volunteer in Peru; now completing M.A. degree at Univ. of Arizona) and John Wandless (former Peace Corps Volunteer in Venezuela; New York Encampment staffer in '68; just completed M.A. program in community development at Univ. of Missouri).

NON-SECTARIAN, NON-PARTISAN, TAX-EXEMPT; FOUNDED IN 1946 BY ALGERNON D. BLACK AND THE AMERICAN ETHICAL UNION.

"The Encampment for Citizenship has been an effective pioneering project in citizenship education. . . . It has helped train people for all walks of American life. Our Government, and now the Peace Corps, have reaped the harvest of your work."

—President John F. Kennedy

"The Encampment for Citizenship . . . has established in the hearts and minds of thousands of young people enduring adherence to fundamental democratic principles. The Encampments have done much to build citizens, not only of this country, but of other countries of the world, and this achievement cannot be underestimated. They have been a distillation of democracy, and their work in carrying the cause of freedom to the young will gain increasing numbers of friends as time passes."

—Mayor John V. Lindsay

John Wandless was in charge of the alumni unit of the Arizona Encampment. Aided by staff member Wanda Small, a Northern Cheyenne Indian alumna of the Encampment, he led a group of 11 Encampment alumni who devoted a month to volunteer social service (mainly tutoring and recreation leadership among Indian elementary and high school-age youth) on the Papago Indian Reservation, some 60 miles west of Tucson.

The 11 members of the alumni unit were ages 17 through 21; they were from 8 states and included 3 blacks, 1 Indian, 1 Puerto Rican (from N.Y.) and 6 whites.

The 87 first-year campers were from 16 states, Washington, D.C., the Virgin Islands, Guam and Israel. There were 43 males and 44 females. In terms of age: 17 15 year-olds, 30 who were 16, 25 who were 17, 14 who were 18, 1 who was 19. Racially: 50 whites (including two refugee Czechoslovakians), 21 blacks (including 1 from the Virgin Islands), 5 Puerto Ricans, 5 Mexican-Americans, 4 Indians, 1 Chinese-American and 1 Guamanian.

Montana Encampment -- Heisey Memorial Youth Center, Great Falls, Montana

The third Encampment to be held in Montana was directed by Dr. John Andrews (then an Asst. Prof. at Univ. of Buffalo; trained at Yale, Harvard, and National Training Lab, Bethel, Maine; Encampment alumnus and former staff member). Assistant Director: Herbert Raffaele (then a Long Island high school teacher; former Teacher Corps interne in a Gary, Indiana inner city high school; Encampment alumnus).

The 86 campers were from 16 states, Washington, D.C., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam and Israel. There were 40 males and 46 females. In terms of age: 30 15 year-olds, 28 who were 16, 24 who were 17, 3 who were 18 and 1 who was 19. Racially: 55 whites, 21 blacks (including 1 from the Virgin Islands), 3 Puerto Ricans, 6 Indian Americans and 1 Guamanian.

White Plains, N.Y. Encampment -- Westchester Ethical Humanist Society building

The 25th Encampment to be held in New York (the third, in White Plains) was led by Co-Directors Sister Kathryn Rutan and Douglas Kelley. (Sister Kathryn Rutan teaches political science at the College of Great Falls, Montana; she has taught high school civics and social studies and was the '69 Montana Encampment Asst. Director. Douglas Kelley is year-'round EFC Executive Director, is an Encampment alumnus, and was formerly an Asst. Prof. at Michigan State Univ. and a Peace Corpsman in Washington, D.C. and West Cameroon.)

The 57 campers were from 16 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Israel and Mexico. There were 27 males and 30 females. In terms of age: 12 15 year-olds, 21 who were 16, 19 who were 17, and 5 who were 18. Racially: 25 whites, 23 blacks (including 3 from the Virgin Islands), 3 Puerto Ricans, a Cuban refugee and a Mexican, 2 Chinese-Americans, 1 Indian American and 1 Guamanian.

The educational program and other activities at the three Encampments are summarized in separate mimeo sheets available from the Encampment office.

In an evaluation questionnaire filled out anonymously, campers were asked "Would you recommend the Encampment to a friend, someone like yourself?" 170 checked "yes," 7 "no," and 23 "maybe" --depending mainly on the friend's interests.

These campers and staff members in one of four 1969 Encampments for Citizenship represented 20 states, plus Guam, Puerto Rico and Israel. Led by Director Neil Riordan—former Peace Corpsman in Iran now teaching college sociology—they spent six weeks learning to understand each other, and to understand racial, poverty and international problems and what youth can do about them. Now they've joined more than 4,000 Encampment alumni involved in constructive social change activities in their own communities.

They will go into the field for volunteer work on community service programs of local agencies. Each Encampment has specialized workshops—one for every ten campers, on topics like Practical Politics, Tutoring & Head Start Volunteer Work, and People & Environment—and each workshop devotes two days per week to related practical work.

In New York, where 50 campers will spend six weeks learning about democracy in action, learning that everyone can contribute ideas and solutions. Weekly fieldtrips at each Encampment include visits to street academies, drug addiction treatment centers, governmental institutions, business and labor-sponsored inner city projects, community action and conservation programs—with recreational breaks at parks and beaches.

In Kentucky, where 80 campers will work on voter registration, tutoring, learn about efforts to solve urban racial, poverty, and pollution problems, then take a week's fieldtrip to Appalachian rural communities. For many campers the two days per week of volunteer work are a first work experience. For others who work to help support their families, it is an introduction to the concept of volunteer service. In all Encampment workshops, staff members with related teaching or social work experience seek to teach practical skills.

A unique youth leadership training program which every summer prepares hundreds of promising youth of all backgrounds for constructive community involvement.

The Encampment for Citizenship

The Encampment for Citizenship is quite different from both academic summer schools and traditional-style woodsy camps. It's a non-partisan, nonsectarian effort to prepare alert young people for constructive involvement in social service and social change. Teenage participants come from every part of the country and from every economic and religious background. They're black, white, Indian, Mexican-American and Puerto Rican.

The six-week program at an Encampment is as diverse as its participants. Many media and methods — speakers, films, and role-playing, discussion groups, how-to-do-it workshops, sensitivity sessions, community service work, fieldtrips, dorm life and recreational and cultural programs—contribute to an educational program with proven impact. Campers of all colors acquire a life-long appreciation of diversity, and a personal commitment to civil liberties and equal opportunity for all.

Where do campers come from? Eighty campers in a typical Encampment come from 20 or more states. Jewish, Protestant and Catholic campers are about equally represented. About one third are black. Less than half are youth whose families can pay the $700 cost; most campers must have scholarships. Farm and small town youth, Indians, Spanish-speaking campers and those from abroad, while few in number, contribute a great deal from their differing life-styles.

Staff Members work and live with the campers in the same dorms for six weeks, and say it's the experience of a lifetime. Like the campers', their colors, creeds and bank accounts vary widely, but they're all personal examples of constructive involvement in public affairs. They know how to communicate with youth. Most are under 30; many are themselves Encampment alumni, and many have served in Peace Corps, Teacher Corps, VISTA or similar programs of full-time service.

At right, David Rothenberg, EFC '53, listens as one of his Fortune Society panel members, Charles MacGregor, speaks to a 1969 Encampment. MacGregor spoke movingly and from personal experience of the horrors of drug addition. Rothenberg, a theatrical producer and press representative, founded the Fortune Society, the widely recognized new prison reform organization.

Among Encampment Alumni

More than 4,000 alumni of the 49 Encampments for Citizenship held since 1946 are at work on public affairs problems in all 50 states and in over 25 countries abroad.

Of five hundred Encampment alumni whose activities have recently been studied, over 90% are active participants in some aspect of public affairs. There were 46% active in politics, 43% involved in programs to aid disadvantaged youth, 40% in civil rights activities, and 33% who were active on international issues.

Scores of examples could be cited. Here are ten —black, white, yellow and red Americans who learned well the Encampment's lesson that democracy needs more than lip-service from all of us:

Miss Margaret Bucher, Education Director, Montana Farmers Union, and all-time champion recruiter of Encampment participants.

Dr. Edgar S. Cahn, attorney and recent editor of OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER: THE INDIAN IN WHITE AMERICA (World, 1969); former Special Asst. to OEO Director Sargent Shriver.

Miss Maria Canino, member of New York City's Commission on Higher Education; former Asst. Director, East Harlem Tenants Council.

Mrs. Joyce Lee Conrad, 1968 candidate for the North Dakota State Senate; State President, United Nations Assn.; Chrmn., North Dakota Parks Advisory Council.

Miss Ada Deer, Director of Upward Bound program for Indian Youth, Wisconsin State University.

William Haddad, Board Chairman, U.S. Research & Development Corp.; former Assoc. Director under Sargent Shriver at Peace Corps and OEO, and member of New York City's Board of Education.

Congressman Allard K. Lowenstein, who "probably has greater standing among the nation's youth than any other member of Congress" (N.Y. Times); key figure in 1968 Presidential primaries.

Arnold J. Malone, 1968 Conservative Party candidate for the Canadian Parliament; Asst. Director of 4-H Clubs in Alberta.

Lawrence S. Okinaga, Adm. Asst. to Hawaii's U.S. Congressman Spark Matsunaga; organized Moiliili Community Center program for hard to reach youth.

Charles Patterson, Vice President, World Airways; former Urban League staff member and Associate Director of Peace Corps.

Who says The Encampment gets results? The campers do!

An 18 year-old Midwesterner: "The Encampment brought together exciting and talented people from all over the country. Each was unique, but deeply involved in the urgent social and political problems of modern America. The Encampment provided few easy solutions, but all of us left with greater determination and ability to cope with those problems wherever we find them."

A 17 year-old Arizona Pima Indian: "EFC made me realize that other races and other religions are people, and I've gotten to realize myself as an Indian. When I go back home I plan to teach others what I've learned. I've become responsible in many ways I've never known. I learned that everybody has the right to express himself right or wrong. I'll respect people as human beings."

A 16 year-old from Kentucky mountain country: "The Encampment enriched my life in many ways. It aroused my interest in finding out more about my own Breathitt County than I had cared about before. It has made me realize the social and economic conditions that families are in, even in my own community. I've gained a sense of responsibility to help my people. I have learned respect for other peoples' different ideas. I have gained the ability to respect Negroes as equals with all others. I hope I can convert others to my new point of view."

A 15 year-old from Harlem: "Today I tried two places for jobs. At one of them I found myself looking at the white people in the office, and saying things like 'She thinks she's something because she has the job, and I'm sitting here asking for one.' Then I thought about the Encampment, and how I learned to like the white people there, and suddenly I began to look at the girl in a different way. Instead of as white, just as another person sitting behind her desk doing a job. To me the Encampment was like a new life."

The 17 year-old niece of a recent Pennsylvania Governor: "It was the most wonderful experience of my life. I intend to keep trying to give to others as much as possible of what I learned from people of all colors and creeds at the Encampment. For my Encampment summer and for the future it opens I thank you eternally."

A 16 year-old Puerto Rican New Yorker: "I was born in East Harlem. I had never been out of Harlem—I thought Harlem was the world. I thought only Harlem had problems. Taking part in the Encampment for Citizenship for six weeks opened my eyes. During those weeks I got well acquainted with people from every kind of background, from all over the country. It really hurt, at the end, to have to say goodbye to people I hadn't wanted to shake hands with, when I got there. Now I'm on the steering committee of the anti-poverty coordinating group in my neighborhood, trying to put into practice some of what I learned at the Encampment."

A 16 year-old Ohioan: In the Encampment I learned that to get anything done, one has to get out and work for it and not just talk about it. I have learned that it isn't bad to be 'square' because 'squares' get things done."

A 17 year-old Massachusetts camper: "I learned the importance of trying to change things that need changing. I also learned there are differences between people and one should love those differences."

Their Parents do!

A rancher's wife in Victor, Montana: "Attending the Encampment last summer was worth as much or more than a year at college to Jessie, and I am sure it will be equally a shaping and learning experience for our son this year. It's hard to give our youngsters enough knowledge about their world and enough feeling for the people in it, bringing them up in the rather isolated environment of Western Montana, and therefore we are everlastingly appreciative of the opportunity the Encampment offers."

A St. Louis mother, herself an Encampment alumna: "Out daughter Susan was fifteen when she went to the Montana EFC. It was definitely a case of the right girl in the right place at the right time. We think Susie derived immense benefits from all aspects of the program. I have not heard one unfavorable remark from her about any part of it. The tradition of variety among the youngsters is undiminished. Because we delivered Susie and picked her up, we met some of the staff and were favorably impressed, and two of the young couples among them we have seen since and visited with. It seems to me the staff was admirably chosen and must have had excellent preparation. There was quite a bit of human stress, but it was used very creatively. To me, this is the single most vital element."

University Evaluators do!

Columbia University's OEO-sponsored evaluation of two Encampments: "Studying and working and living together, the campers—blacks, whites, and Indians; Christians and Jews; believers and non-believers; young people from farms, from city slums, from manicured suburbs; students from boarding schools and students from one-room schoolhouses—had intense reactions to their six weeks at the Encampments. Never bored, often excited, sometimes disturbed, they believed their experience had been of great value, though perhaps 'not long enough.'

"Changes which trainees most frequently saw in themselves were increases in tolerance and understanding, in maturity, in independence, and in activism. Friendships to an extraordinary extent cross-cut class lines."

Prof. Herbert Hyman of Columbia University, in presenting results of an earlier four-year evaluation of Encampments: "I can inform you with full confidence that the Encampment for Citizenship is a rare and successful experiment in democratic education."

It began 25 years ago...

In 1946 Algernon D. Black, Mrs. Alice K. Pollitzer and others in education and social welfare recognized that there were very few significant opportunities for young people to further their knowledge of other racial, religious, and economic groups and to learn about the problems and issues facing each group. Mr. Black and Mrs. Pollitzer also recognized the alarming lack of clarity among young people about the meaning of democracy, and that these young people had little understanding of how they might help bring about solutions for pressing social problems.

Under the sponsorship of the American Ethical Union and its affiliated societies, the Encampment for Citizenship was launched. 128 campers came to New York's Fieldston School from every part of the United States, and from other countries too, to take part in what the founders termed "a pilot project in democratic education." Black, white, Indian, Japanese-American, and Mexican-American, North and South, Protestant, Jew, Catholic, farmer, office worker, factory worker, miner, veteran, student—all were represented.

For a period of six weeks each summer since 1946 this training for an informed and responsible citizenship has proceeded under the guidance of that same group of dedicated founders. Now more than 4,000 young people have attended a total of 49 Encampments in such places as New York, Puerto Rico, Kentucky, Montana, California, and Mexico. Now in its 25th Anniversary year, the Encampment for Citizenship is re-dedicating its program to educating youth to face and meet the distinctive problems of the 70's, to lead the march for community progress.

In this 25th Anniversary Year, the Encampment for Citizenship pays particular tribute to the 100th birthday of its Honorary Chairman, Mrs. Alice K. Pollitzer. "Nanny," as many generations of Encampment graduates call her, counts her work with the Encampment and with Walden School—where she was a much-beloved staff member—her "greatest life work." She has also been a local school board member on the East Side, a volunteer in political reform movements, and active in dozens of civil liberties and social service causes. She was one of nine in the first graduating class of Barnard College, in 1893, and helped start its Alumnae Association.

This year a special Alice K. Pollitzer Scholarship Fund has been created by the Encampment to honor the personality who has given vitality and strength to its program since its beginning. Contributions to this special fund will provide more youth, in whom Nanny places such faith, the opportunity to participate in what independent evaluators have termed "a rare and successful experiment in democratic education."

Encampment for Citizenship co-founders Algernon D. Black and Mrs. Alice K. Pollitzer, making the announcement in 1964 that, after 18 summers of college-age Encampments, a high school-age (15 through 18) Encampment was being launched. The need for such leadership training and social service opportunities for high school students has grown rapidly. For summer, 1970, four high school-age Encampments are planned.

Expansion in the 70's

The Encampment for Citizenship is an idea whose time has come. Never was there a greater need for genuine communication among youth of differing racial and economic backgrounds. Never was the need for teaching constructive ways of participation in social change more urgent. No other agency or program so clearly serves these needs.

If an additional 80-camper teenage Encampment can be started each summer for the next ten summers, then during the decade of the 70's the total of Encampment alumni can be more than doubled, from over 4,000 to over 10,000. By the end of the 70's there would be more than 10,000 Americans who had shared an Encampment experience and the inspiration to constructive action it imparts.

Expenses per camper in 1969 were $720, for 284 young men and women. Funds are needed for full scholarships, and to match half scholarships offered by Urban Coalitions, local school boards, and minority, farm, labor and church organizations.

Who makes it possible?

The Encampment for Citizenship is sponsored by the American Ethical Union and directed by a volunteer Board which meets monthly in New York.

Abraham P. Kanner (vice president for finance at Maidenform), is chairman of the Encampment Board. Vice Chairmen are Simeon Golar* (New York City Housing Authority chairman), Mrs. Michael Elbert (manpower executive), Morris Kellner (radio-television association executive), Mrs. Jean Kotkin (mother of two Encampment alumni), David Rothenberg* (theatrical producer and founder of the prison reform organization, The Fortune Society), and Miss Althea Simmons (National Training Director, NAACP). Secretary of the Board: S. Arthur Dembner (Vice President and Circulation Director of NEWSWEEK). Treasurer: Mrs. Albert Mannheimer, long a devoted Encampment volunteer worker.

Honorary Chairman of the Encampment Board, and still nearly as active as when she was Board Chairman, is Mrs. Alice K. Pollitzer (Her 100th birthday will be observed in conjunction with the Encampment's 25th at the Plaza Hotel, New York, May 18.)

Businessmen Barnett Berch, Paul W. Fink, Milton Goldstein, William F. Haddad*, Alan Kalmus, Lawrence S. Mayers, Raymond Marcus, Martin Racine, Shy Raiken, George Shettle, and Robert Stein; Educators, anti-poverty and social workers Miss Sally Bowles, Miss Maria Canino*, Raymond de Vera, Mrs. Carl Goldmark, Jr., Dr. James Gutmann, Dr. Anna Lee Hopson, Steven Jervis, Miss Judith Katz*, Dr. Lucile Kohn, R. Left to right are Mr. Baldwin, Encampment Executive Director Douglas Kelley, the Encampment Board's Honorary Chairman Alice K. Pollitzer, Encampment Board member Congressman Allard K. Lowenstein, and Board Chairman Abraham P. Kanner. Congressman Lowenstein, an alumnus of the 1947 Encampment, was Director of the 1965 New York Encampment—whose alumni include presidents of student governments at Harvard, Stanford, and the University of North Carolina, and a recent president of the U.S. National Student Association.

The Encampment's year-'round Executive Director since 1965, Douglas Kelley, was a camper in the first (1946) Encampment. Prior to '65 he was Assistant to Michigan's Senator Philip A. Hart, an Assistant Professor at Michigan State and with Peace Corps in Washington, D.C. and Africa. In The Complete Peace Corps Guide he is credited with being one of the initiators of the Peace Corps idea, in the 1950's.

Encampment Scholarships, without which the unique economic, racial and religious diversity of the Encampments would be lost, are made possible by individual contributions of alumni and friends of the Encampment.

Dear Mr. Myrdal:

It has just come to my attention that you are to be in Atlanta in early November. We would be more than pleased to have you visit with us while you are here, or to allow us to, in any way, assist you in your visit.

It would be a rare priviledge for our staff to have you meet with them and discuss any observations you have about race relations in the nation and the region as you see them now, compared to the time when you did your extraordinary study on that subject.

Also, the annual meeting of the Council, when our one hundred members from throughout the south are assembled, is to be held in Atlanta on November 17-18. It would be an honor for us to have you attend, and participate in any portion of that meeting. If modest financial considerations would make a difference in allowing you to say over, and meet with the staff or the full council, I am sure arrangements could be worked out.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Dear Sir:

As of January I will be on an outreach project which is an independent study program through our college.
Would you know of any programs that I might be able to work with either in the Appalachian (Kentucky, West Virginia, North Carolina) area or the Mississippi Delta Region in the areas of education, social service or community work (similar to Upward Bound, Head Start or Teachers Corps)?
Thank you for you assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Anthony,

Thank you very much for sending me so promptly the copy of SOUTH TODAY in which you printed an article on the Orangeburg situation. Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of the book and some letters you may find interesting.

Unfortunately, with reference to the refusal by Atlanta's main department store to stock the book, there is no way I can get you formal evidence to support the fact; this is indeed a pity as it would give considerable impact to an article in SOUTH TODAY. I hope that,in spite of this lack of documentation, the relevance of Jack Nelson and Jack Bass' book will still reach your readers.

I enjoyed talking with you the other day; if you have any questions or suggestions, please do not hesitate to call - if I am not here at the time, Mr. Gervasi, the director of publicity, will be delighted to speak to you.

Cordially,

Dear Sir:

The better leaders in the U.S.A. have stated from the time the Union was formed the fact that the White and Black races could not live together.

Your organization as well as the Universal Negro Improvement Association and African Communities League have for years agreed to this fact, and have worked diligently toward obtaining the separation of the two races. Over the years the situation demanded serious consideration and presently the problem is momentous on both sides. We dislike the idea of the government forcing citizenship (so called) upon us, something we as African descendents never have asked for. You, on the other hand, have to accept or fight your government for their action.

However, we who are members of the Universal Negro Improvement Association feel at this time that we are in a position to gather together the many intelligent minds of the race and steer them along with the majority of the Afro-Americans toward repatriation. Your race brought the problem (slavery) to your shore several hundred years ago, therefore, you must at this time put forth some sort of aid to relieve yourselves of that problem. The aid we need for repatriation is currency from you and your government. We have formulated a plan by which you could free your country in short order.

Can you afford to delay this forward move forever one more day? If not, you should discuss the matter with your division heads, and come up with a positive answer. We of the U.N.I.A. await your answer with a last word, "Remember Senator Bilbo".

Respectfully yours,

Thomas W. Harvey

Dear YMCA Friend:

The Butler Street YMCA is presently engaged in its Annual Membership Enrollment Campaign. The actual tip-off is scheduled for March 1, 1971, however, the staff is working feverishly to prepare the required materials and to notify our friends of our plans.

We are fortunate to have Senator Leroy Johnson as General Chairman and the leadership of Reverend Andrew Young and Mr. T. M. Alexander as Divisional Leaders. We have also been offered the services of Mrs. Geneva Haugabrooks, Mrs. Lottie Watkins, Reverend W. J. Stafford and Reverend Jasper Williams as assistant Divisional Leaders.

Though we have such excellent leadership we will need your help if we are to reach our goal of 5,000 members and $70,000, therefore we are again asking you to either renew your membership or to sponsor the membership of some underprivileged boy or girl.

The Butler Street YMCA serves more disadvantaged boys and girls than any other Community Chest institution throughout the Metropolitan Atlanta area. More than 10,000 youngsters, 85% of them unable to pay for YMCA membership, were served during 1970 because interested persons like you secured memberships during the 1970 Membership Campaign.

You will be contacted by one of our workers in the near future. Please think of the many youngsters who need the guidance of the YMCA when you greet them and give generously.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

We talked once a few years ago when I was directing a study of the poverty program for Senator Clark's subcommittee. A year and a half ago I organized the Center for Governmental Studies, and since then we have been concentrating on action oriented research related to administrative decentralization and community participation. We are now broadening our interest to look at a number of national issues, among them policies of national growth, including concentration of urban growth.

Although I hear of activities of the Southern Regional Council from time to time I am not up to date on the full scope of your program. For my background information I would appreciate receiving material about what you are doing. In particular I would be interested to know whether issues of urbanization in the South comes within the scope of your activities.

Dear Sir,

In the summer of 1967, I worked briefly in the Southern Rural Research Project (S.R.R.P.), which investigated poverty and malnutrition among black farmers in the Alabama black belt. The project was headed by a civil rights lawyer, Donald Jelinek. It was based in Selma. For the past few weeks, I have been trying to locate the program's director, Mr Jelinek, but so far I have been unsuccessful. I believe that the Southern Regional Council was one of S.R.R.P.'s sponsors. Would you have any information concerning the fate of S.R.R.P. or

James V. Allday has asked me to let you know what I think of him. We have had eight or ten conversations. Jim strikes me as an unusually perceptive person and a dedicated champion of social progress. He has a fine eye for the critical elements in a situation, an ability to express his ideas clearly and succinctly, and a grand sense of humor. I would be surprised if he did not write as engagingly as he talks.

Jim has had a rough time of it and deserves a break. But even without that side of it, he does seem to have the open-mindedness, resolution and energy to make a good writer.

Dear Paul:

I have just received and read Vol. II, No. 6, January-February issue of The South Today. I want you to know that I enjoyed reading it and look forward to receipt of each issue. The colorful tabloid is an attention getter which makes individuals read.

My reason for writing this letter is because there are some errors in the report in the second column on page 2. In listing the number of lawyers in a state and the number of Negro lawyers, the figure for South Carolina is in error. There are ten (10) lawyers in Columbia, South Carolina, and many others scattered over the state. I am not taking the time to check my information, but I am certain that there must be twenty-five or thirty lawyers in the state. About 1965 we had a meeting of lawyers and I know twenty-two were present at that time.

As a former member of the Board I am interested in your work and I do not want any southerners to discredit all of your work because one error is made. I am sure you know how they work and this error will be passed along as an example of the erroneous reporting of The South Today.

Paul--

I have wrestled with this for several days, and wish my decision could have been otherwise. The regional housing corporation is too important an effort to jeopardize, and I simply don't have the inner resources I feel necessary to deal with it yet. Perhaps time will have its healing powers--I don't know.

I hope that SRC will go ahead with this effort. It's an experiment and should be tried. And you should be able to find staff who can handle the undertaking. Just make sure that everything is done at all levels during that year to make delivery possible at the end of the organizational year.

Again, thanks to all of you.

Dear Paul:

Thank you for inviting me to visit with you and some of the staff of the Southern Regional Council to discuss a proposed regional housing development corporation and other possible housing and planning efforts of the Council.

I think that the regional housing corporation is an extremely exciting proposal, and the effort to undertake its organization is a worthwhile challenge. Such a corporation may be what is needed to move the Southeastern Region into meaningful development of low income housing programs.

I regret to say that I shall not be able to participate in the development of a regional housing corporation, at least in the foreseeable future. I would nonetheless hope that the Southern Regional Council would undertake this project, as I believe that the Council is the right vehicle for this effort. The organizational staff will both have to be thoroughly familiar with the region, and will have to rely heavily on the Southern Regional Council staff for information and contacts. A thorough knowledge of the region and access to its leaders at all levels and in all fields will be critical to the success of any organizational effort. Without this combination, I doubt that the projected timetable is realistic. The questions I raised regarding manpower training and revolving fund availability, as well as several other questions, will also have to be answered.

I wish my answer could have been a positive one, as I deeply respect the Southern Regional Council staff and its work. Best of luck in this undertaking and in all the rest of the SRC program. I shall get in touch with you when I know I am going to be in the country for more than a month or two at a time.

My very best regards to Emory, Jim and Moreland, and my thanks to all of you for a pleasant and provocative day at SRC.

The Hunger Crusader

In the last issue of THE CRUSADER this page was devoted to the story of one "hunger crusader," Mrs. Myra Dreifus, who has been actively involved in the School Lunch Campaign in Memphis, Tennessee. In this issue, we have an article about Ron Pollack, a crusading young attorney. Our hope is that these profiles will serve as an inspiration to our readers. Let us know about your own hunger crusade—we'd like to be able to put your story on this page in the near future.

Ron Pollack is a 'Hunger Crusader' from "way back." Only 26 years old, he has been deeply involved in and committed to the movement to eradicate hunger and poverty from this country since his student days. Although he grew up and was educated in New York City, he spent a great deal of his early manhood as an organizer in the South. While studying at Queens College and later at New York University School of Law, he was deeply involved in efforts to bring civil rights and welfare rights to the disenfranchised people of Mississippi.

After law school, a plan to return to Mississippi as an attorney did not materialize. Ronnie did the next best thing—accepted a job as a Staff Attorney with the Columbia Center on Social Welfare Policy and Law, where he remains today. Through the Center, he helped to bring about litigation in almost every state to the benefit of the poor people to whom he had committed himself in the Delta country years earlier.

Increasingly, the kinds of cases that he became involved in were concerned with hunger—commodities programs, food stamps, school lunches. And it became clear to Ron that feeding the hungry was the most basic and necessary kind of anti-poverty program; that it had to be the prerequisite to ensuring the health, the educational aptitude and the employability of the very poorest segments of our society.

Because of the enormity of the hunger problem in America, and in order to coordinate lawsuits with community organizing efforts, Ron Pollack has received a substantial grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity (which also funds the Columbia Center) to establish the Food Research and Action Center (FRAC). As Director of FRAC, Ron supervises a staff of fourteen, mostly organizers, who are assigned to work with community groups in various regions of the U.S., developing an organized constituency for school lunch and similar programs and, if called for, a possible support movement for a lawsuit.

Ron brought the first food program law suits filed in the U.S., working alone at the Columbia Center but contacting sympathetic lawyers around the country. One of his earliest achievements at the Center, using this outreach method, involved filing 26 similar suits in 26 states on the same day, against the U.S. Department of Agriculture and local welfare departments. The suits were filed locally by attorneys in each of the states, armed with technical assistance and strategic advice from Ron: a model for bringing test cases which he still uses. Ron's services are also available to the local attorneys around the country who call his office about the implementation of food programs in their areas and who may want to initiate their own suits.

Because of his past experiences in the South and because of his belief in "people power," Ron feels strongly that litigation should not be used instead of direct organizing as a tactic. Legal measures, this young lawyer feels, should only be resorted to when all other efforts have failed or should, at least, be utilized as a tactic in concert with community organizing. He is convinced that sound organizing strategies have longer lasting effects than litigation; too often, court orders have been circumvented.

"Washington, D.C. is issue-oriented, not people-oriented. When President Nixon talks about eliminating hunger, he means eliminating it as an issue."

—Ron Pollack

It is important that lawyers not attempt to bring litigation unless they have grassroots backing and involvement in the development of the suit, Ron feels. Thus, if a conscientious legal services attorney finds that the school lunch program in his locality is discriminating against eligible children, his first step should be to speak with those being discriminated against or, probably, their parents. If there is a local Welfare Rights Organization, he would approach its membership. These groups are generally knowledgeable about their children's entitlements through the "School Lunch Bill of Rights" prepared by Ron Pollack and distributed through the National Welfare Rights Organization and the Crusade Against Hunger.

The local W.R.O. may already be involved in a school lunch campaign of its own; the lawyer may be most helpful to them at this stage by helping to enlist the involvement of other middle income people in support of this campaign—professionals, church groups, civic organizations and the like. These efforts should also be accompanied by an effective public relations campaign, so that many segments of the community would be aware of the problems either through community meetings, newspaper articles or rallies.

If, at this point, the school and state officials fail to respond to community demands, an effective suit might be brought showing how the legal rights of local children have been violated. In this way, enough segments of the community have been involved in the process to hopefully ensure a favorable climate for change, and to act as watchdogs to see that the law is upheld. If it works out, it would also represent the first step towards a very necessary coalition between different ethnic and economic groups working together to make social changes beneficial to all.

Another food issue to organize around, and against which Ron has filed many lawsuits, is the Food Stamp Program. Unlike the School Lunch Program, there is no clearcut strategy applicable in every community. Ron sees it as basically an "asinine" program: an admission by Congress that welfare programs are inadequate for feeding people. But until there is something better, this program must be made to work. By creating a situation of full utilization of the program—through organization and litigation—Ron's hope (and that of NWRO) is that these kinds of piecemeal and temporary programs will have to be replaced by an income distribution system that is not only less cumbersome and more efficient but which more adequately meet the needs of poor families.

Ron Pollack has a very close working relationship with the National Welfare Rights Organization. In addition to providing legal and technical information, he has addressed local WRO's around the country about their legal food rights. He feels that, though many such organizations of poor people may know what the problems are in their communities, they do not always easily find a "handle" around which to organize. Often, a lawyer can be most helpful in finding legal loopholes or entitlements not readily apparent to laymen.

He totally endorses, the NWRO's goal of "adequate income" for all Americans and sees that hunger programs are a primary "handle" for getting at this or at some sort of redistribution of income. An organization like NWRO helps poor people to attain the kind of power that they need.

How can non-poor people who believe that there must be a more equitable distribution of our country's resources participate in this kind of movement? By working in local school lunch campaigns, for one thing, Ron feels. Most middle-income people do not really understand the hunger problem in the U.S., because they do not really look at its source. The basic injustices which account for the massiveness of this problem might be affected if poor people had more power and if middle income people helped to contribute to this empowerment. Ron feels strongly that we must all see that it is in our own self interest to improve the world we live in.

He feels that it is significant that the National Council of Churches is sponsoring the Crusade Against Hunger, since the goals of the school lunch campaign are so intrinsically a part of what the role of the church has always been. This campaign is not only a good organizing tactic, but the ideal vehicle for bringing together organizations of poor people, church members and other concerned community people to work together for the common good.

Unkept Promises

The following press release and background fact sheet were issued by The Children's Foundation, Washington, D.C., on November 23, 1970. They reaffirm what Nick Kotz had asserted a year earlier in "Let Them Eat Promises": that the government has neglected its commitment to hungry children.

Seventeen national organizations, representing millions of concerned Americans, sent President Nixon a telegram on November 23, asking him to make good on his promise to provide free or reduced price lunches to all the nation's needy school children.

The text of the telegram read:

"Last Christmas Eve you promised to provide free or reduced price lunches to every needy American school child by Thanksgiving 1970. That time has come. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare's estimate that there are potentially 14.7 million economically disadvantaged school children indicates the enormity of the problem. We believe millions of these children are going hungry at lunch, since the U.S. Department of Agriculture reports that an average of 4.2 million free or reduced price lunches were served during September. Your promise has not been fulfilled for those children who still come to school hungry and try to learn while they are hungry and go home hungry. We urge you to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that all needy children will be fed."

BACKGROUND

"I think what is being said here is that the 6.6 million needy children will get a free (or reduced price) school lunch by Thanksgiving 1970, and that it will cost what it costs."

The White House, Dec. 24, 1969

The Thanksgiving promise raises three questions:

1. Did 6.6 million children get a free or reduced price lunch by Thanksgiving?

2. Is 6.6 million the number of children who are needy (i.e., eligible to receive a free or reduced price lunch)?

3. Did all needy children receive a free or reduced price lunch at Thanksgiving?

The answer to all three questions is no.

The White House statement was a pledge to reach all needy children with a lunch program by Thanksgiving. It assumed that there are no more than 6.6 million.

1. No one knows whether the school lunch program will reach 6.6 million children who are needy. On the basis of the Department of Agriculture's (USDA's) own data, it is highly unlikely. In September, the USDA reported that free and reduced price school lunches were served daily to more than 4.1 million children, or over a million fewer than in April, the peak month of last school year. The USDA reports that free and reduced price lunches were served to 5.2 million children each day in that month.

In order to achieve at least 6.6 million, the USDA will have to increase participation by more than a million children just to get back to the peak levels in the 1969-70 school year, and then add another 1.5 million children.

2. The prior question is somewhat irrelevant in view of the fact that there are more than 6.6 million needy children in school. Rep. Carl Perkins, chairman of the House Education and Labor committee, asked state school lunch directors to estimate the number of children who would be eligible for free or reduced price lunches. He was told that the number of needy children would be at least 8.9 million. Since this figure was based on income eligibility levels which are below the income eligibility standard established by the USDA in August, Rep. Perkins placed the eligibility level at more than 10 million.

In a related action, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare recently published an estimate of 14.7 million children who are economically disadvantaged, using criteria applied under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

In addition, the USDA survey of how states were performing in the school lunch program cast serious doubts in the 6.6 million figure. In April, 14 states were serving free or reduced price lunches to more children than the USDA had estimated would be eligible. Florida, for example, served 196 percent of the number of needy children used by the USDA, and Alaska served 208 percent.

3. Regardless of the debate over numbers, it is abundantly clear that all needy children were not reached this Thanksgiving with a free or reduced price lunch. Of the 52 million school children, over 10 million attend schools which do not operate a national school lunch program. It is likely that as many as 1.5 million of these children would be eligible for a free lunch.

In addition, many states are not implementing the school lunch program as the law requires. They have no data to indicate whether all the needy children are being fed, because there is no data to indicate how many needy children have even requested a free lunch, because there is no procedure spelled out for them or their parents to use.

Pennsylvania and Massachusetts will not know until December 1, if then, what standards or procedures school districts will use to reach needy children. In Maryland some schools only this week are distributing forms to parents. In New Hampshire, the state does not intend to follow federal regulations until January 1, 1971.

In West Virginia the state director was forced by the USDA to withdraw the program standards which had been distributed at the beginning of school, and the action has thrown program operations into a state of near collapse. Similar confusion has been created in a number of other states, such as Alabama and Mississippi, which attempted to comply with the law by issuing instructions early in the fall only to have them apparently countermanded by new instructions from USDA regional offices sent out belatedly in mid-October, well after the school lunch programs were supposedly in operation.

W. Virginia Plan Rejected

The National School Lunch Act amendments of 1970 were to have taken effect partially by September and totally by January 1, 1971. Those dates have both elapsed, and many states have still not adopted the new required procedures for feeding hungry children. There is widespread confusion, some of it due to community and state governmental inaction. But the U.S. Department of Agriculture has compounded the problem. A case in point is the West Virginia situation alluded to in the above fact sheet and reiterated below, in a report from the CNI Weekly Report.

The USDA has told West Virginia that its plan to provide free lunches to all children who qualify under federal income guidelines and to extend reduced price lunches to all other children is unacceptable.

State Superintendent of Schools Daniel H. Taylor said last week that the West Virginia plan "was developed over a period of some months following the passage of the new act. State personnel met with USDA personnel and developed the plan according to our interpretation of the guidelines."

Taylor told the State Board of Education that the USDA had said that pupils must be individually qualified for reduced price lunches. He said the USDA had informed the state that a school can qualify for serving reduced price lunches to all students only if the "number of children qualifying is near 100 percent." Taylor said the ruling is a change from earlier interpretation and past practice under the previous Act.

"Despite the President's announced intention of feeding 6.6 million (needy) children by Thanksgiving." Dr. Taylor said, "the USDA has ruled the West Virginia plan for providing reduced price lunches to be unacceptable."

As a result of the USDA action, Dr. Taylor has asked school districts to revert to lunch policies in effect prior to Oct. 1, and to follow these procedures until the state can clarify USDA policy and issue new procedures.

The state plan called for school children in West Virginia to pay no more than 15 cents for a school lunch; over 100,000 children were to be served at no cost, according to news reports from the state.

Under a program announced by the state Department of Education, children in families with incomes which meet the USDA August guidelines were to receive free lunches. A private agency in the state estimated recently that 107,000 children live in poverty families.

The remainder of the state's 400,000 school children were to be served lunches for a maximum price of 15 cents.

The new standards had been announced to West Virginia families through letters sent to parents of school children.

Translate These Figures Into Action!

What this chart shows:

Column A. There are approximately ten million children in schools with no School Lunch Program at all. It is estimated that 1.5 million of these children would be eligible for free or reduced price lunches.

Column C. The poverty standard used in the determination of eligibility in 35 states was less than the prescribed $3,720. This means that the true estimate of needy children is probably closer to 14 million. It should be pointed out that families above the mandatory guidelines are eligible as well if they can show need. This may happen during periods of long layoffs from jobs due to illnesses, strikes or cutbacks. Also, many states are setting eligibility levels higher than the mandatory $3,720 which automatically increases the number of eligible children. (Welfare Rights Organizations have been demanding levels of $5,500.)

Column E. This does not include $230 million worth of food commodities distributed to the states. For fiscal year 1971, the Congress has appropriated an additional $300 million plus an increase in commodity distribution, bringing the federal share of the NSLP to over $1 billion. However, this amount of money was based on a USDA target population of just over 7 million children. There will be a need for additional federal funds when the 7 million mark is passed. This should not deter citizens groups from organizing since major Congressional spokesmen are on record as saying that Congress will appropriate whatever it takes to meet its obligations to the NSLP.

Column F. The figures in this column were taken from a report, "Why Child Nutrition Programs Fail," by Rodney E. Leonard, Community Nutrition Inst. It is based on the fact that in 1968, $45 million of "Perkins money" (named after the Congressional sponsor, Rep. Carl Perkins of Kentucky) was allocated to states for the express purpose of providing free and reduced price lunches. Through the use of a formula explained fully in his report, Mr. Leonard found that 1 million additional lunches should have been provided instead of the 460,000 reported by state school lunch directors. He concluded that 54% of the money allocated for this purpose was not used to provide free and reduced price lunches (F/RPL).

Column G. The figures in this column will become increasingly important because, under the School Lunch Act of 1970, every state will be required to contribute state funds to the SLP. Less than 20 states do so now. This is why it is important that local School Lunch Committees begin to plan statewide coalitions. (See "Hunger in the Classroom," Readers Digest, April, 1970, for how Illinois and Maryland citizens organized to get funds from their legislatures. This article, in reprint form, may be obtained from the Crusade Against Hunger office.)

Food For Thought

We know that there are at least 5 million children still going hungry at lunch time in America. One recent estimate has put that number as high as nine million. The National School Lunch campaign has one goal. To close the hunger gap at lunch. Looking at the above figures it may seem that the gap has widened. What has happened is that the number of needy kids has increased. In state after state, citizens have begun to raise the chant of "Free Lunches now." These citizens' efforts around the country have met with many successes; active informed School Lunch Committees have been carrying their "School Lunch Bag" to the offices of principals and school superintendents and to meetings of their local school boards and state legislatures. In many of these states, guidelines have been adjusted to reflect more realistic poverty levels than those set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). These more realistic poverty levels coupled with an economy that creates increasing unemployment means that there are many more needy children. Backed up by technical and other forms of assistance from such national organizations as the Food Research and Action Center (FRAC), the Children's Foundation and the Crusade Against Hunger, School Lunch Committees have won many battles; but they must now intensify their action.

On January 1st the unrealistic poverty levels set by USDA become mandatory in every state. (See report on West Va., p. 3) Discrimination is still rampant in many school lunch programs. Many school boards begin planning their budgets for the Sept. '71 - June '72 school year early in the Spring. Will they use all the federal funds available? Will they request additional funds? Unlike its role in many other social programs, Congress has said it will appropriate whatever school lunch funds are needed to fight this War on Hunger.

What about schools still without equipment? Have they looked into the non-Food Assistance programs? Have they looked into private caterers who can provide good nutrition "airplane" type food to as many as 300 children in less than an hour in spaces no bigger than regular class room. Have you seen your state plan to bring a nutritious meal to every needy child (See Mass. story p. 4-5)? Many legislatures will be meeting this spring. Is your state one of those that do not provide state funds for school lunches? Attempts have been made for three years in Michigan to have the state legislature appropriate $10 million for school lunches only to be defeated each time. Yet the last legislature voted to build a $100 million State Capitol. Where are the priorities of our nation, of our states, of our communities? That is the job we have—changing the priorities from guns and bricks to people.

May 1968, saw the publication of a book which documented the 22 years of failures of school lunch. (Their Daily Bread).

May 1969, President Nixon said the time is at hand to put an end to hunger in America for all times.

May 1970, the President signed the School Lunch Act of 1970 which set as its goal a free lunch for all needy American children without discrimination.

May 1971???

(You can write the next chapter in the War that must be won for, as the President stated at the White House Conference on Hunger," A child ill fed is dulled in curiosity, lower in stamina, distracted from learning. The cost of medical care for diet related illness; remedial education required to overcome diet related slowness in school; institutionalization and loss of full productive potential; all of these place a heavy economic burden on society as a whole."

What You Can Do

1. Take this test. (see below).

2. Form a school lunch committee. This committee should be broadly based and should include representatives of the poor. (Write NWRO for information about the Welfare Rights Organization in your community.—1419 H. Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005).

3. If your community has a school lunch committee or is about to organize one—plan your agenda around a Spring Program for Action.

a) Jan. 1st mandatory poverty levels came into effect;

b) Getting good Free or Reduced Price Lunch program in your community without discrimination.

c) Starting school lunch programs in schools that do not have them;

d) Find out about your state plan of operation;

e) Organize citizens action to get funds from state legislatures.

f) How about a Victory Day for Hungry children May 14?

3. Write the National Coordinators for support in your school lunch campaign.

(For description of what kind of help each provide, see back page.)

SCHOOL LUNCH TEST

(This test is being used by the United Presbyterian Women in their National School Lunch Campaign. Please fill it out and return it to us, so that we may disseminate this information.)

There are 13 numbered spaces on the questionnaire. Here are two steps to apply in analyzing the way you have filled them out:

STEP 1 - If no.'s 6, 8, 10 and 12 are blank, you do not know, for sure, the policy on school lunch in your community. Ask to see the written material and check the answers against requirements of the legislation.

STEP 2 - If you can check only 8 or fewer blanks, your community program is inadequate, and you have a problem that requires immediate attention.

(If each question can be answered yes, put an X in the numbered space.)

Does the school which the children in your neighborhood attend serve breakfast? ----(1)

lunch? ----(2)

milk break? ----(3)

Do all schools in your school district serve meals to children? ----(4)

Does the school board in your community have a plan developed which states the child nutrition needs for the community and contains a timetable and financial program to meet those needs? ----(5)

Have you read this plan? ----(6)

Did the school board send a letter to all parents this year to tell them that lunches would be served free or for 20 cents or less to children whose family could not afford the regular price? ----(7)

School Lunches Nationally

The first lawsuit filed under the new school lunch act and the Sept. 4 regulations was filed recently in Arkansas.

The action, brought by the Arkansas Community Organization for Reform Now (ACORN), was filed in the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

The suit asks that needy children in North Little Rock public schools be provided a free lunch, that parents be notified of the availability of the program, and that school officials be prohibited from participating in hearings on appeals if their action led to the hearing.

ACORN, an organization of Arkansas low income families, contends that school officials are withholding food service from children who are eligible, and cite that children in the same family are provided with free lunch while brothers and sisters are denied the same benefits in other schools.

The organization also contends that school officials have failed to tell parents about the program, and that the same person who has denied lunch to a child also rules on appeals made by the parents.

The ACORN group is being represented by Ron Pollack, a lawyer with the Center on Social Welfare Policy and Law. Pollack is actively engaged in about a dozen lawsuits related to child feeding programs. Most recently he obtained consent decrees in Detroit and Milwaukee where the school boards agreed to changes sought by local groups which will improve the program in the community.

All 20 Butte, Montana, schools are offering hot lunches to their 10,000 students. Before, only one school had been in the lunch program. With help from USDA's nonfood assistance program and the Model Cities Program, the school district was able to equip two junior highs and one senior high with food service equipment and facilities. Meals are prepared at these schools and transported to the other "satellite" schools. At the Taft School in Billings, Mont., students participating in a hot lunch program last fall showed significant weight gains and an increase in classroom attendance. The school is one of three on a "satellite" program of hot lunches for disadvantaged students in Billings. Before the program, teachers report that some children brought almost nothing for lunch or a bread and butter sandwich; one child bought only a bag of popcorn each day.

Brookline, Massachusetts. Older folks come back to school for lunch in Brookline and 9 other Massachusetts communities, as part of a new and growing program to provide nutritious noon meals for the elderly in school lunchrooms, with special authorization in the Massachusetts State legislature. USDA-donated foods and funds from the State Commission on Aging help to underwrite the cost of the meals, for which the elderly pay 50 cents. For some it is their only decent meal of the day, and for everyone a real event—a chance to socialize with their contemporaries, enjoy entertainment, and learn about community services they may need.

Massachusetts chalked up a "first" when Gov. Francis W. Sargeant signed a bill recently that will result in a lunch program in all public schools by 1973. Needy children will get lunches free under the newly enacted law. Parochial and nonprofit private schools also will be reimbursed for lunches served to children. Single session schools will be required to provide lunch service by 1972, double session schools by 1973.

The District of Columbia has focused on getting food to children in schools which have had no food service, because they had no place to prepare the food. Available kitchens at other schools are used to prepare the food, and it is trucked (in insulated containers) to the kitchen-less schools. In some, the food is served in classrooms; at others, in corridors. Through such innovations as these, meals served to needy children have climbed 83 percent in the District—from 24,200 last October to 44,200 this October.

In Georgia, 1,847 public and private schools take part in the National School Lunch Program. Throughout the State, only one school—because of its remote location—does not have food service of some type. State Department of Education officials report that over 50 percent of the pupils in some 31 key Georgia school systems are receiving free or reduced-price school lunches.

Chicago public schools are feeding needy children at an unprecedented rate—about 125,000 free lunches daily and about 60,000 free breakfasts. There are 325 schools served by regular lunchrooms, 44 schools feeding children cold lunches from a central kitchen, and 38 schools receiving hot lunches from 11 production kitchens scattered around the city.

At the same time, the Archdiocese of Chicago is operating the Nation's largest non-public school lunch program originating in a single kitchen. Starting in September, Type A lunches are now reaching more than 11,000 youngsters daily in 38 of the Archdiocese's 112 elementary schools in the inner city, with expansion planned. Over half of the meals are being served free or at a reduced price to needy children.

All of the 113 schools in Oklahoma City are now participating in the National School Lunch Program, and 27 are also in the School Breakfast Program. This is an increase of 67 schools in the lunch program. Free and reduced price lunches have increased to about 5,500 per day and the principals are receiving many new applications.

Rich Square Elementary School's lunchroom (in Northampton County, N.C.) seats only a third of the student body but they manage to serve breakfast to more than half of the students each morning. The simple menu provides for presweetened cereal, milk and juice to meet USDA breakfast standards. For added calories and essential nutrients, a sandwich was also served. It requires no cooking or dishwashing, a necessary boon considering the school's small kitchen. A teacher's aide and three fifth-grade girls serve about 200 of these breakfasts in half an hour, with no loss of classroom time and no teacher supervision. Those who could afford it pay some or all of the 15-cent cost. Needy children get their breakfast free. Teachers report a marked improvement in the student grades as well as an increase in attendance.

In Atlanta, Georgia, radio station WSB and the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs conducted a special fund raising campaign that brought in over $20,000 to help Georgia schools provide lunches to the needy.

Also in Atlanta, volunteer workers with Economic Opportunity help distribute application cards for free and reduced price school lunches and follow-up with the families to help see that needy children are enrolled in the program.

Fifteen schools in Roanoke, Va., joined the school breakfast program this fall, serving free breakfasts each day to 1,200 of their 8,300 students. At least 27 other Virginia schools will join the program, bringing the State's total to 131 participating schools. Last year, 89 schools in Virginia served an average of 9,200 breakfasts daily, with 53 percent free or at a reduced price.

Indianapolis scored a major breakthrough to get school lunches to children in typical core city situations by developing a central kitchen to serve several surrounding schools. The city received $125,000 to buy necessary kitchen equipment from USDA's Nonfood Assistance Program. The School Board bought a suitable central kitchen building which had been a soft drink bottling plant. The owner sold the building to the school system for about 15 percent of real value. The central kitchen is geared to serve at least 27 schools with lunches for about 15,000 children.

Over 28,000 youngsters are served Type A lunches daily in 102 Indianapolis public elementary schools and one parochial school. This is 43 percent of the average daily attendance of 64,000. During October, 32 percent of the meals were served free and 2 percent at a reduced price. The 103 schools include 39 inner city schools which receive meals from a central kitchen and 64 others that have individual unit kitchens. Also in October nearly 9,000 free lunches were served in 11 Indianapolis high schools.

Project 93 will combat hunger in Nebraska, with help from an OEO grant. A citizens' organization which emerged after the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health, Project 93 will inform Nebraskans about existing and new food programs and increased emergency food and medical services. Representatives from low-income families make up a third of the 34-member governing board; other members come from State agencies and civic organizations.

California school officials will be required to provide lunches in every public school in the State, if the federal court accepts a petition (GSL C-70 1800) filed August 25 by California Rural Legal Services.

The suit, brought as a class action in the Northern District of California for organizations representing Spanish speaking citizens, charges that 150,000 children will go unfed this school year solely because of where they go to school.

Failure to provide lunches would result in the loss of all State and Federal funds to the particular school under the action requested in the suit.

Modesto, California public schools are serving nearly 1,900 children with free or reduced price lunches this school year. The information is significant for a number of reasons, including these:

1. The number of lunches is four times as great as in the last school year, and over 10 times greater than in he 1968-69 school year.
2. The program represents an expansion of 250 percent in the amount of local school board funds made available for school food service.
3. Last May "experts predicted that any effort by Congress to enforce uniform and adequate free lunch standards would drive school boards across the country" to follow the example of Modesto and drop out of the school lunch program.

These were the points made by two attornies from the California Rural Legal Assistance program in testimony before the Committee. Daniel H. Lowenstein and Philip Neumark are the attornies who in February won a court action which forced the Modesto school board to provide free lunches to every needy child.

As a result of that decision, the Modesto schools dropped the National School Lunch program, an action which many persons suggested at the time would be the result of efforts to obtain a greater compliance with program objectives.

The California attornies quoted a statement made by Dr. Bert C. Corona, superintendent of Modesto schools, that "The continuing financial participation by the state and Federal Government is absolutely essential to the maintaining of the (NSLP) in the Modesto City Schools," and adding that the Modesto experience "shows that school boards will willingly participate in a program that will feed every needy child, so long as Congress provides the necessary funds."

All children in families with income below the USDA August guidelines will receive free lunches in Connecticut Public Schools.

Reduced price lunches will be provided to children in families with $5,600 or less gross annual income, for a family of four. Adjustments of $600 per child will be allowed.

The criteria for free and for reduced price lunches appy statewide, according to announcements from Mrs. Edith M. Blakely, director of school lunch and nutrition.

Schools were required to submit local policy statements and have them approved by the state Department of Education before Nov. 1, 1970. Once approved, school authorities will publicly announce the new policy.

The policy statement and the procedures for public announcement are the same as in the Sept. 4 USDA regulations.

Other Food Programs

In addition to such programs as those for school lunches, food stamps and commodities, the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) sponsors several important but lesser-known programs which, if implemented, can help to feed hungry children and adults. The following descriptions of four of these programs are edited from literature distributed through USDA. Most of these programs will not be implemented unless eligible people in communities around the country find out about them, look into what their own communities are doing about them and, when necessary, demanding that they be implemented.

Special Food Service Program for Children

Children need good food every day —at home and away from home. USDA's Special Food Service Program helps children in day-care centers and in summer programs get good meals.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture helps State and local communities to provide meals for preschool and school-age children in public and private nonprofit institutions. USDA gives some money and food for the meals and some money to buy or rent food service equipment.

Day-care centers, settlement houses, and recreation centers that provide day-care for children from low-income areas or from areas with many working mothers can join the Special Food Service Program. Summer camps and summer recreation programs can also join. Also, only those places which accept children without regard to race, color, or national origin can get Federal help. They must give children nutritious meals.

Children who can pay for their meals do so. The other children get their meals at a lower price or free. Those who do must not be openly identified, or discriminated against, in any way.

Supplemental Foods for Health

Low-income mothers-to-be, new mothers, babies, and young children who need extra food for better health can now get it. The United States Department of Agriculture's Supplemental Foods for Health Program helps children from birth through the pre-school years get foods they need for early growing and learning. The program also helps mothers, during pregnancy and for 12 months after giving birth, to keep good health.

When doctors find that new mothers, mothers-to-be, babies, and young children need extra food in their diets to grow healthy and strong, they authorize food orders for them. These extra foods are donated by USDA to local health centers or other local storage and distribution places near the health center. The orders for extra foods are filled at these locations.

The extra foods given are of the kinds that women and children need for good health. They include evaporated milk, corn syrup, nonfat dry milk, canned fruits and vegetables, scrambled egg mix, iron-fortified farina, and various canned meats.

Who Can Get Foods For Health?

Mothers-to-be, new mothers, babies, and young children:

1.) who are eligible for free or substantially free medical care.
2.) whose doctor or nurse say they need more food, and
3.) who have an authorization from the doctor showing the kinds of food they need, can get supplemental foods for health.

They may also get the extra foods whether or not they are participating in other food help programs.

Families should ask about food help at the local health clinic or center. If families ask about the Supplemental Foods Health Program, the local health office will know food for health is wanted in the county.

The Supplemental Foods for Health Program is sponsored jointly by:

1. United States Department of Agriculture
2. Department of Health, Education and Welfare
3. Office of Economic Opportunity

Local health officials can get in touch with the nutrition service of their State Health Department to ask for help in setting up the program. The State official who runs the USDA donated foods program in the State should also be told.

School Breakfast Program

Children who come to school hungry find it's hard to learn. The School Breakfast Program helps give children a healthy send-off for the day's lessons.

This breakfast program is a lot like the National Lunch Program. Participating schools can serve a nutritious breakfast every school day which pupils can buy at a reasonable price. If children do not have the money for breakfast, the schools usually can give them breakfast free or at a lower price.

To help schools, the U.S. Department of Agriculture gives them some money and food. The local programs are run jointly by State and district school officials.

Because Federal funds for the School Breakfast Program are limited, the number of schools participating must be limited. Schools are selected which have many needy pupils or many pupils who must travel great distances from their homes.

To be in the School Breakfast Program, public and nonprofit privates schools must agree that any money obtained from running the breakfast program be used for the program. Schools must give pupils nutritious foods.

The breakfast menus are planned to give children a healthy start toward their daily food needs. They must include milk, fruit or vegetable juice or fruit, bread or biscuits or muffins, and cereal. The Department of Agriculture urges schools to include such protein-rich foods as eggs, meat, fish and poultry, cheese, and peanut butter whenever it is possible.

Each school in the breakfast program must offer breakfast to all its children, regardless of race, color or national origin. Schools are also required to provide breakfast free or at reduced rates for pupils who, local school officials find, are unable to pay the full price, which usually ranges from 10 to 15 cents. Children getting free or reduced price breakfasts must not be openly identified, or discriminated against, in any way.

If someone is treated unfairly in the School Breakfast Program, a letter telling about it should be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Special Milk Program

The U.S. Department of Agriculture gives money to schools, camps, and homes for children, to help them buy milk. In schools where the children buy milk, the Federal money helps to lower the price that the children pay—often to just a few pennies. In camps, settlement houses, and other child-care institutions where milk is given to children, the Federal money helps give the children more milk to drink.

All public and nonprofit private grade schools and high schools can join the Special Milk Program as well as nonprofit summer camps and homes for children. Only those camps, private schools, and homes which accept children without regard to race, color, or national origin can get Federal money for milk.

When milk is served with the help of the Special Milk Program it is for all children. No child can be assigned to a separate table or served at a different time or in a different line because of race, color, or national origin. If any child is treated unfairly in the program, a letter telling all about it should be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

An agency of the State government pays out the money. To find out which office does it in your State, write to Food and Nutrition Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

The following examples show how some communities around the country utilized funds from the USDA for carrying on their own special food programs.

SUMMER FEEDING. The Special Food Service (Vanek) Program has provided Federal funds and USDA-donated foods in many feeding programs last summer. Plans in the District of Columbia were for an average of 70,000 meals per day over a 10-week period. Philadelphia planned summer recreational feeding in low-income areas of the city. It proposed to provide lunches for over 5,000 children. At Offutt AFB, Omaha, they expanded the highly successful AFB program to include additional inner city children in Omaha. With help from churches and charitable organizations, the Base tried to reach 5,000 children per day for 10 weeks last summer. The Portland, Oregon, School District expanded last year's summer food service to reach 18,000 children in 20 schools for a period of 11 weeks this year. Migrant children feeding programs for the summer were indicated for four counties, and possibly two others, in Maryland. In New Jersey, 18 schools for migrant children operated feeding programs throughout the summer.

What It's All About

A Brief History

The Crusade Against Hunger, an outgrowth of the Committee on Domestic Hunger of the National Council of Churches, began its work early in 1970. Its purpose is to enable various denominations and community groups to coalesce around such demands as a decent school lunch program. The Committee on Domestic Hunger is chaired by Rev. Ian McCrae, who played a vital role in the Religious Action Task Force of the White House "Hunger" Conference. The Crusade is under the direction of Hulbert James, formerly the Associate Director of the National Welfare Rights Organization (NWRO).

The Committee and Crusade are ecumenical undertakings in every respect; committee members include both ordained and lay representatives. They cooperate in providing educational material, organizational and other technical assistance to incipient School Lunch Committees around the country.

In addition to a focus on the School Lunch Campaign, the Committee has promoted "Live On Family Assistance Week" (in cooperation with NWRO) and coordinated hunger projects which resulted in the shipping of 15,000 lbs. of food to the Delta Ministry.

Demonstration projects the Committee has funded include: Welfare Rights Organizing Projects in West Virginia sponsored by the Council of Southern Mountain, and Citizen Action to Stop Hunger, a student-staffed project to develop citizen action in Michigan sponsored by the Ann Arbor Council of Churches. Other grants have been made to the National Council on Hunger and Malnutrition and Council on Religion in Appalachia.

FEED HUNGRY CHILDREN NOW!

Why A Crusade Against Hunger

The continued existence of poverty-caused hunger and malnutrition in this land that overflows with milk and honey is a national shame and a moral wrong. It must not be permitted to persist.

We have for too long passed by on the other side of hunger and malnutrition. We have blinded our eyes and deafened our ears. But the comfort of ignorance can no longer justify our indifference. We have eaten of the tree of knowledge, and we know hunger to be wrong. Upon that knowledge, we must act.

While we must not forget that hunger is a world problem, and that population control must play a major role in its solution, our concern is to begin to heal the divisions in our society by righting its injustices.

The curses that afflict our society stem not from hunger and malnutrition but from our own irresponsible indifference.

How We Work

Developing coordinated ecumenical efforts at the local level to:

A. Support national remedies to the problem,

B. To address the problem of hunger locally by determining the extent of local need and mobilizing resources to meet that need,

C. To investigate in detail the administration and effectiveness of Federal food delivery programs at the local level, and,

D. To participate in the administration of these programs where such involvement may be required to make these programs effective.

These efforts must in no way interfere with the independence of the poor to determine their own destinies. To this end, all programs must include the poor in the planning and development of these programs.

Dear Mr. Gillies:

Thank you for the information in your recent letter. We will be pleased to place you on our mailing list to receive all publications.

Growing out of our sponsoring the book "Still Hunger in America," we created a special hunger fund, described in the enclosed document. To date we have given over $20,000 to local groups. This morning, for instance, I saw a report from a group in Mississippi in which a $500 grant had enabled them to give emergency food grants to families, which resulted in the acquisition of over $5,000 in food.

We continue to get more of these request than we can handle should you have any interest in considering them under your program.

Under separate cover we are sending several documents.

Sincerely,

How your money can begin to attack root causes of hunger

How much should you give?

Of course, you're already "giving" through your taxes, which in part foster development and fight hunger. Hopefully, you're also giving to this cause through the benevolence program of your church.

Many persons feel they can and must do more.

Some persons set aside 1% of their gross annual income -- and distribute this "over and above" amount to agencies of their choice.

Some families impose a voluntary "self-tax" in a slightly different way. They save their cash register tapes of food purchases, total these periodically, and "tax" themselves 5% of this total -- distributing this amount to agencies of their choice.

How much you give is ultimately up to you, of course.

Suggested channels for your "over and above" giving:

HUNGER HIKERS

HUNGER HIKERS

Action-oriented youth not only study about world hunger; they do something about it, as these photos from Mexico, Mo., show. Young people volunteered to hike and signed up sponsors to pay them for each mile they walked. Money collected, almost $3,000, was turned over to CROP, (Committee for Rural Overseas), an agency of Church World Service, for relief of hunger throughout the world.

Initiated by Presbyterians and sponsored by six different denominations and the Student Council of the high school, the project was aided by newspaper and broadcast publicity that explained the purpose of the Hike: to visibly call attention to the urgent need to be aware of world hunger and to raise funds to be administered in the name of Christ by a recognized worldwide agency.

Spirits were high as the boys passed a football up and down the line and the girls led some singing. The hikers were encouraged by waves from windows and doorways along the route and a mobile unit from the radio station gave "live" broadcast reports with personal interviews with hikers along the route.

ON THE COVER:
Hikers check in at the six-mile check point where their cards were validated. Pay off by sponsors came at the end of the hike when the validated cards were presented (right).

The ten-mile hike began with a police escort. Every hunger hike seems to begin also with rain.

Hot chocolate provided at each check point helped to provide another spurt of energy.

Nearly 250 hikers set out from the courthouse the morning after Thanksgiving to climax six weeks of study, planning, committee work and organization. But, says Rev. Robert Collins, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, "even these photographs cannot capture the spirit of youth concerned for others and visibly demonstrating their compassion."

A tired pup was sponsored and made the ten miles (with a little help from his friends!)

MAYBE WE NEED A SLOGAN

By Reese Cleghorn

Hunger. We prefer that word, or "malnutrition," to a harsher word: starvation. We do not want to believe there is starvation in America. Something in the mind balks; or perhaps, just something in our own special kind of middle-class mind, the kind that exists in the heads of most of us who bear the label "Presbyterian." Why is it we, and the country, find it very hard to take the matter seriously, even when we try? Ours is a middle-class world. It has no starvation.

"These children go to bed hungry and get up hungry and don't ever know nothing else in between." Words from a Mississippi mother to a team of doctors in 1967. Words from the doctors themselves, after investigations in six counties: "We saw homes with children who are lucky to eat one meal a day .... They live on starches – grits, bread, flavored water .... In almost every child we saw we observed one or another parasitic disease .... These children would need blood transfusions before any corrective surgery could be done. . . .The teeth of practically every child we saw were in awful repair .... Now, at 7 or 8, their knee joints or elbow joints might show the 'range of action' that one finds in a man of 70, suffering from crippling arthritis."

To the doctors the word to use for what they saw was "shocking." Children suffer brain damage because of lack of proper nutrition before they are born, and afterward. Teeth are ruined. Bones are weakened. Some die. These middle-class doctors, reporting for their middle-class readers, knew that not many would understand. They said they found "poverty so extreme as to be – in an era of comparative national prosperity – beyond the comprehension of middle-class America."

Beyond the comprehension. When the doctors testified in Washington about their findings, Mississippi's two senators scolded them, saying no such conditions existed in Mississippi.

Beyond the comprehension. Others of us, non-Mississippians, tend to say such conditions may exist in Mississippi but not where we are. But in my state of Georgia, clear evidence is there. And I suspect that everywhere there is a Presbyterian Church the health of children not far away is being damaged for life by hunger.

What of the Church, then? Does it comprehend? The name of John Calvin does not get thrown around much these days in places where people discuss such problems as starvation of children in a wealthy land. But he understood something about the uses of public policy, of government and its extensions, to take care of the basic welfare of the people of Geneva. It wasn't a "dole," with the benevolent giver and the lucky recipient; it was a fundamental obligation of government and the Church. Even in the Dark Ages, the Church recognized a mandate to satisfy the basic needs of people in distress, not with an alms-giving attitude, but with the knowledge that the Church's duty was to feed the hungry. "Feed the hungry." In fact, hadn't somebody spoken those words as a command even before the Dark Ages? We have to come to our own time to find a widespread churchly concept that one must be very, very cautious about doing such things, lest there be "free-loaders."

The stress that Presbyterians are now placing on the hunger problem – the starvation problem – is a wonderful thing to see. On paper. I read the booklets, the letters, the programmatic outlines, the descriptions of the task forces on hunger, the lists of supplemental readings. I like the tone of what I have read, and the sense of urgency. Unfortunately, out there where the churches are, non-comprehension sometimes sets in. Not the dumb kind, but the kind that the team of doctors understood. In this middle-class country, it is difficult to believe anyone starves.

It is also hard – and this may be a greater difficulty – to persaude people who are at least reasonably comfortable with the functionings of their government and their school system to take up causes that require them to confront, to irritate and to insist, for good causes that do not directly affect them. We like to be gentlemen and ladies, we middle-class folk, and we don't want to seem self-righteous, or be "bleeding hearts," or be too presumptuous when we hear that there are perfectly good budgetary and administrative reasons why children who need school lunches are not getting them. But for the interests of hungry children, at least, maybe we could risk it.

For 20-plus years, I have watched governmental bodies at work, perpetually astonished at how effective a small band of insistent people can be, at a zoning hearing, a school board meeting or a city council committee session. If somehow these Presbyterians, this small minority within a minority, could be mobilized for action to feed the hungry, no other force would be required.

If within every church a group as determined as a building committee would consistently work at it – see what is happening with school lunch programs and follow through insistently from school board to congressman and senators, and follow through again; check on government food programs to determine whether they are really reaching the people; press local and state health officers for action; report their findings with a Who's Who of governmental helpers and foot-draggers – well, the job would be done.

And a good many people who today are indifferent to the Church might say: Well, that one seems to have found out that this tough country we live in, which hasn't stopped long enough to take care of its hungry children, doesn't operate by charity basket.

Of course, someone would have to provide a slogan for the campaign. Something new, snappy, punchy, possibly with an odd kind of personality to deliver the message in the ads.

Maybe a bearded man, not looking at all charitable, pointing a finger as if he has just been angrily chasing some money-changers, and saying: "Feed the hungry."

The Green Revolution . . . and Beyond

By Richard Dickinson

Where do we stand today in the war against world hunger? Has the green revolution altered the responsibility of the churches? Let's focus on these two questions.

For years we have been reading of the desperate situation of the poorer countries – the worsening food deficit, burgeoning population, massive rural under-and unemployment, disease, hunger, starvation. Upon this dreary scene in the past three years has flashed a shaft of hope, called the "green revolution." Because of the agricultural revolution, based primarily on technological break-throughs in high-yielding cereals – wheat, rice and corn – it is now possible to imagine victory over hunger. The change in attitude has been dramatic – probably more dramatic than the situation warrants, and undoubtedly more dramatic than actual performance to date. There is reason for encouragement. East Pakistan, a chronic food deficit area in recent years, has moved swiftly toward self-sufficiency in rice. India and Indonesia have made impressive gains in food production. Lysinic corn appears to dramatically improve diets of Colombian children. It is a sign of hope that some farmers are able to multiply their yield many times over.

But the green revolution will prove to be a curse if it lulls us to complacency. Despite heavy fertilizer use, soils are being depleted by the extra drain upon them. Despite family planning programs, populations in the poorer countries will double in the next 20-25 years. More wheat and rice mean more calories for hungry people (if distribution is equitable), but basic protein deficiencies remain.

Then, too, there are more subtle problems in the green revolution. Dramatic increases in rice production are possible when the new seeds are combined with heavy use of costly fertilizers and abundant water, but many farmers cannot afford such costs even when the fertilizer is available, and much land is not irrigated. Experience so far suggests that it is the richer farmers who benefit most from technology. Thus, without land reform, the revolution tends to generate even more imbalance and injustice in the social fabric. A healthy agricultural sector depends upon more than fertilizer and high-yielding seeds. It requires as well an infrastructure of markets, storage, transportation and distribution systems. Further, it is not certain that new strains will prove disease resistant over the long term, a fact which makes heavy reliance upon only one type of seed risky.

The green revolution, then, is an occasion for cautious optimism in food production. The years of research which make it possible have opened up a small lead in the hectic race between food production and population. But it is a tenuous and possibly only temporary advantage; if it leads to euphoria or apathy, it will be disastrous.

There are some who believe that the crisis of large-scale famines can be averted by other means, in conjunction with the green revolution. Food from the sea is frequently cited as a potential source of badly-needed proteins. Even at the present time much of the protein foods taken from the sea is sold to materially developed countries to feed livestock, but even were it kept in the poorer countries, it would not go far toward solving protein deficiencies. Perhaps in the future technological developments will make a greater "farming" of the sea possible, but the plain fact is that we do not now possess that technology, and such break-throughs are usually tedious and infrequent. Others base their hopes on developing chemical processes, such as the use of petroleum base materials, to produce food. Here, too, technology is only at its initial stages, and it would be unrealistic to hope for any large-scale success in the foreseeable future. In short, there are a number of innovative techniques for accelerating food production under study, but none seems on the threshold of any more than very limited and experimental application.

The other panacea is population control. It is significant to note that a large number of poorer countries are opposed to such population control, either because of traditional values, because of expanses of land to be filled, or because of suspicion that population control mooted by Western countries is an effort to maintain the hegemony of the West. Even in those approximately thirty countries where programs of family planning have been pursued by government, there has not been notable success. India, with a population the size of Sub-Sahara Africa and South America combined – a fact which skews all aggregate statistics on the materially poorer countries – has had an active family planning program for approximately fifteen years, but has experienced only very modest success. While the World Bank and other organizations, including the United States Government, have made family planning a key element in their foreign aid programs, there is little evidence to date to suggest that there can be dramatic success in such programs during the 1970's, the Second Development Decade. Plainly, we have to face the issue of world hunger without resort to illusions, and without being captured by despair.

What does this changing situation mean for the churches and their responsibilities in the fight against world hunger? Clearly, it does not diminish the responsibility one iota. Yet it does throw into deeper relief just what those tasks are. One feature of this deepened perspective is the impossibility of a charity-centered, relief-type operation alone. Important as emergency relief is, important as feeding the starving is, if the desperate cycle of starvation is ever to be cut, churches must also orient their efforts to resolving the structural imbalances and problems of society which perpetuate poverty and inequity. It is much easier to raise money among the churches for emergency relief than for long term assistance; the need is obvious and compelling, with few theoretical problems. The danger is that the churches will be satisfied with these simple, but important, acts of charity. Genuine caritas demands much more.

Another feature of the deepening perspective is that we have tended towards a simplistic view of the dynamics of the economically poorer countries. It has been popular to think that physical and material problems were primary, that if basic physical needs could be met, other problems could be resolved. This half truth hides the reality that increased Gross National Product, per capita income, caloric consumption are inadequate indices of development. They are inadequate for several reasons. One reason is that they say nothing about equity of distribution – whether the masses get a greater share in the new wealth generated. Development is not only a question of production, but also of distribution and participation. Another reason is that the psychological dynamics of the developing countries are not reflected in such statistics, any more than to talk about the material well-being of middle class black families in the United States says much about the basic impulses and aspirations of large segments of the black community. For development has as much to do with attitudes and values as with physical well-being as such. That is why it is more meaningful to speak of humanization and liberation, than development, as goals of justice.

A third by-product of the green revolution is a forced re-interpretation of what the churches aim to do through social service. The churches are confronted again with the meaning of mission, and the relation of service to mission. It is relatively easy to justify feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and healing the sick. But it is more ambiguous to talk of liberation and humanization, and to relate these to a theology of mission. It is more complex to reflect on the role of the churches in helping to create a just society. These open up explosive issues which emergency relief work never raises. These issues are explosive whether one is speaking of liberation at home or abroad.

They are tearing apart many of our churches. Yet we have discovered that we cannot be impartial external observers. Development and humanization are not only for the poor and unchurched. The rich need liberation at least as much as the poor, perhaps more, because many of them are oblivious to their need. We see this fact more easily for individuals than we do for nations and churches. Humanization is not something one does to or for another, but with another. Humanization is discovered through and in engagement, mutuality and reciprocity. For churches, to be involved in the kind of inter-cultural engagement beyond charity raises profound questions about the nature and destiny of man, about American and Western society, about mission. In this sense, for the churches to lose themselves is the precondition for them to constantly re-discover their power and their true nature.

What does this mean for future church efforts in development? Undoubtedly, there will remain practically unlimited opportunities for charity and emergency relief. Beyond that, however, the churches must cultivate a new style of service and mission – a style of openness and sharing which takes seriously the fact that God has not left himself without a witness anywhere in the world. This style of openness is related to the deeper mission of being, witnessing, at the growing edges of life where the most profound questions, affirmations and issues are alive.

Let's be honest; it will be extremely difficult for the churches to develop this style, despite their heritage of being a pilgrim people in a strange land. It is difficult for affluent and successful people to be pioneers; they have too much furniture to carry with them. It is difficult for Western Christians to be pilgrims in the new land that God is creating, working among us to make all things new. All groups, including the Christian community, need to institutionalize and regularize their corporate life. That is how we express both corporateness and creativity. At the same time, however, these same groups become imprisoned in these same institutions as they become stiff and arthritic. It is an expression of our egoism and sin that, as individual Christians and as churches, we try to keep the world on our terms by preserving those forms which we can manipulate for security.

A new age of mission is upon us. It does not come only from an inner impulse in the Christian community, but from being confronted by the world in new ways. Part of that new confrontation comes through the green revolution, which reminds us that our theology of mission may have become sterile and shallow. That new age of mission does not grow so much out of the inner life and impulses of the churches, as out of the dynamics and cross-currents of world scene. It is an age in which some of the most cherished traditions of the churches, and of Western society, will be challenged by other cultures and other religions. The central question for the churches is whether they have enough risk, enough hope, enough faith in a God who is in history making all things new, to venture into new forms and styles of witness and ministry.

The struggle to feed the hungry has not been won. For the churches a major task is to act as a conscience of the people to see that the struggle is won, for all men and not only the rich. But in the midst of the struggle, the special task of the churches, and their special privilege, is to be a sign of man's high calling. It can be that sign if it chooses to live sacrificially in his name – for liberation, for koinonia, for humanization.

Opportunities to Invest in People

WOMEN'S BIRTHDAY OBJECTIVE
By Lucy Hestir

The 1971 Women's Birthday Objective is to be an investment in people.

It will establish Christian centers for servicing families in change as a response to an expressed need. In Congo . . . especially in Kinshasa; in Korea . . . especially in Seoul; in Taiwan . . . especially in Taipei.

It will provide a series of person-centered programs which will help families adapt to a new way of life as they move to the cities. It will teach them how to buy in the market place and how to prepare the foods they buy so as to prevent malnutrition.

It will teach women homemaking skills.

The centers will tell all who come of Christ's love for them and enable them to read about Him as they become literate. The centers will help people halt hunger wherever it exists among them.

Change! adapt! be mobile! urbanize! These are household words with the American public. All the voices we hear beat upon our ears with these words. It is the American way of life. But it isn't just the American way. For instance in Kinshasa, Congo, a city of 4,000,000, new "communes" (governmental districts of the city) are springing up almost faster than they can be organized for servicing the people who move there. One of our missionaries, Christina Barnes, writes, "It is a slow process to start a skill training program, because we have to stop to teach reading and writing to the women and girls, who have not had the same kind of education the men have had, before we can begin a skill training program. Only as we comply with these vital needs of the women and girls can we gain a step in halting hunger."

It has been estimated that one of every thousand persons now living on this planet lives in Seoul, Korea. By 1972 the government hopes to have settled one hundred thousand families, or nearly five hundred thousand people in high-rise, low-cost housing on the hills surrounding Seoul. A high level of general services was planned for the resettlement areas, but this level has not been achieved. Many of the families who have moved from rural life or even slum areas of Seoul pose unique problems in high density living. They do not know how to buy in the market, how to prepare the available food, or even how to use the available equipment for preparing it.

In Taipei, Taiwan, where many tribal people from the isolated mountain villages and the tribal communes of the plains follow their young people to the city, there exists an almost insurmountable language barrier. It is said that it often takes five persons, each bilingual, just to carry on one conversation! Imagine bargaining for your family's supper under those handicaps . . . or calling a doctor! The adjustment to a commercial society has forced many of these families to sell their security . . . their land. When it is possible these immigrants tend to group with others like them for strength and security. They need our help in adapting to a way of life which will enable them to survive in the city.

Change in our country, and for our church people, may be uncomfortable and even unpleasant but it does not pose the threat to our very existence as it does for many. We can help eliminate world hunger, among other things, by helping other families through this Birthday offering.

IN AFRICA
By Sue Nichols

Dr. John K. Miller has won a bold battle against kwashiorkor, lack of dietary knowledge and his medical colleagues. Dr. Miller is a Presbyterian U.S. missionary in the Congo and kwashiorkor is the malady that befalls those who are dying of starvation. Its incidence is so high in children in the Bulape area of the Congo that a youngster under 5 has only a 50 - 50 chance of reaching adulthood!

Two years ago Dr. Miller set out to combat it. He's not the flaming crusader type but, obviously, in his quiet way, knows how to stick to his guns against uneven odds. He laid out a plan based on what he thought were simple, even self-evident, principles. Seeing to it that they were not violated became another story!

The first principle maintained that the foods used to combat kwashiorkor must be limited to those normally available to and known by the people concerned. No powdered milk from abroad or foodstuffs brought in from another region. The second principle held that teaching must have priority over therapy. In this, Dr. Miller had to run herd on the hospital staff to prevent them from giving vitamin pills and blood transfusions. (These were given, of course, where death might occur.) Mothers of starving youngsters had to be convinced that a faulty diet was the cause of their children's illness and that a corrected diet only – not hospital magic – could make them well again. And keep them well. This could only come about through a program focused primarily on teaching the mothers, not on keeping temperature charts on the children.

The third principle contended that the program must fit the area where it is used. To that end Dr. Miller set up his "kwashiorkor unit" in a building apart from Bulape Hospital. At one end of it was a kitchen, similar to the ones the mothers knew in their homes with village style cook-fires and pots and pans.

The main food the mothers cook is one that Dr. Miller concocted himself. It has no name but it consists of two foods in the area, cornmeal and peas. Separately the amino acids in these two are incomplete but, when mixed together, they combine to form an almost complete protein. In a no-meat, no-milk community, any protein food emerges as a kind of manna.

"Then," says Dr. Miller, "the educational aspect began. We had to teach mothers that this combination was better for their babies than manioc pap."

The mothers brought their listless, red-haired (a kwashiorkor symptom) children to the Hospital without the faintest idea what was wrong with them. They did not suspect the diet, because the children were well-fed with manioc. And manioc has been the basic diet of the young for years and years. And for years and years the young have died, because manioc has such low nutritional value. But the mothers, lacking scientific insight, didn't make the connection. Thus, some of them thought their children were victims of witchcraft.

Any mother who brought manioc into the Kwashiorkor Unit was fined. Once the child was admitted, a regimen began. The mother was required to follow the menus prescribed by the staff and the staff was required to work chiefly with the mother. Four meals, rather than the usual one or two, were prepared and served daily. In addition to the corn-pea mixture (always mixed together) each child received half an egg, manioc greens and fruits and vegetables as available in season.

Essentially, little else was done. No health lectures, slides, movies of flannel graphs were used. The women could not take them in. But "only an idiot" as Dr. Miller says, could fail to get the lesson as sick, swollen children began to return to normalcy.

Mothers and children stay at the Kwashiorkor Unit from four to eight weeks. At first the child's hemoglobin count goes up and, then, slowly his weight. His hair reverts to black and his lively spirit returns.

When they return to their villages, the mothers tell the other women in the village what they have learned. As the word spreads and more and more families begin eating a more nutritional and balanced diet, Dr. Miller predicts that the terribly high child mortality rate will fall. A reduction is already apparent in a 50 mile radius of the Bulape Kwashiorkor Unit. It bespeaks another victory in the fight to eradicate world hunger.

IN BRAZIL
By Charles R. Hughes

After a respite of 12 years, history repeated itself in 1970 for the little community of Umari in northeast Brazil. The summer rains were sparse. The crops failed. The river ran dry. The people suffered.

"The last time there was no water in the river was in 1958," PCUS missionary Charles Alexander explained to me when I visited the drought-stricken area on a hot and dusty day in November. "There was mass hunger then just as you see now."

Trees and branches are cleared from the land so that crops may be planted.

Life has never been very affluent for the small farmer in northeast Brazil, nor in the rest of Latin America where two-thirds of the 260 million people exist on an average daily diet of 1,200 calories, as compared with 3,100 in the U.S. Thus, when the rains fail, existence itself becomes problematic.

Despite the similarities between 1958 and 1970, there is a significant difference – this time the river in Umari is not entirely "dry." Two wells have been dug in the river bed's sandy bottom. The wells are part of a developmental project which Alexander and fellow missionary Bill Wylie hope will change the course of history for the marginalized people of the area.

"It all started when we brought a truck load of food to distribute among the families here who were faced with starvation. Now it has become a full scale attempt to develop a better way of life for the community, which is a legitimate part of the Gospel we preach," Alexander said.

Wylie described what happened that first day when they handed out food:

"The men crowded silently around the truck. Some opened their shirts and patted their stomachs to emphasize their hunger. One man said, 'Friends, you have brought us a fortune.' I never thought of a bag of beans as being a fortune. I guess the reason is that I've never been a hungry man."

As the two missionaries talked about the project, which is being carried out with funds from the Easter Offering and food from Church World Service, I surveyed the scene around me.

From one well, a line of men carried water in tin cartons to an open area about 100 yards away where a group of Brazilians were engaged in making and stockpiling bricks. The second well served as a source of water for a similar group who were manufacturing clay tiles to be used as roofing material. Both operations employed simple, even crude, methods yet they were carried out in a highly professional style.

A third work force was stationed in the river bed, laboring with picks and oversized hoes, digging out the foundation for a massive dam.

In the distance, as far as I could see, others with machetes were working to clear scrub trees and underbrush from a 400-acre tract of future farmland.

Despite the overbearing heat and monotonous labor, morale among the workers seemed unusually high. Work is motivated by a double incentive.

Each man is paid two cruzeiros (about 40 cents) a day, which is used to buy beans and rice, the mainstays of the average Brazilian diet. In addition, he receives a weekly food supplement of flour, cornmeal, powdered milk and oatmeal. It's not much by most nutritional standards, but sufficient at least to ward off the immediate threat of starvation so prevalent in the area.

Moreover, there is the hope that what is being accomplished through the development project will result in long-term benefits.

"We are working against a deadline," Alexander said. "When the rains come this summer (January-March), we must be ready for them. The dam should give us sufficient water to irrigate the fields which are being cleared. And with the constant warm climate, we should be able to produce three crops a year, something that has never been done before in this area."

And what about the bricks and roofing tiles?

"We have already started construction of 25 duplex houses," Wylie explained. "Fifty families will be housed in them to carry out the farming experiment."

Both missionaries acknowledge that the project is not without certain problems, one of which was facing us as we talked. In addition to the workers already employed, approximately 100 other men had come to seek jobs. Each one had a tale of hardship resulting from the enforced drought. Some had brought their families with them to emphasize the need of employment.

"We started out with 100 workers," Alexander explained. "Then 100 more were added. Last week 50 more came, so we put them to work, too. Now there are about 100 more and our budget can't stand any more. What can we tell them?"

The Brazilian representative of Church World Service, Jose Sandoval Mendonca, who was also present, was quite moved by the scene.

"We are expecting another shipment of food in December. I'll see that you get enough food to take on the extra men, if you can get the money for their wages," he said to Alexander, with a nod in my direction.

It was an obvious case of "blackmail," but what can a person do in a situation like that? I nodded in return. With the assurance that the Board of World Missions would somehow cover for his overspent budget, Alexander told the men they could report to work the next day.

A far more complex problem involves management of the project once farm production has begun. The agricultural products will have to be marketed. An organization, probably some type of "Co-op," must be devised to extend the project to other areas, equally as destitute, in the surrounding community.

Alexander and Wylie are fortunate in having technical assistance from a group of agriculturalists from the University of Arizona. The Arizonans are in Brazil on an exchange program connected with the University of Fortaleza, located about an hour's drive from Umari.

Among other things, the missionaries hope to experiment with the growing of "Rockefeller rice," a high-yield variety developed in Mexico and used with good results in India.

The tract of land on which the project is being developed originally belonged to George Barr, a North American who formerly lived in Fortaleza, Brazil. He donated the land for the experiment.

The Board of World Missions has invested about $14,000 in Easter Offering funds in the "Umari" project. It has already proved its value as a relief measure, providing a small income and food for some 350 families in an otherwise desperate situation. Whether or not it proves decisive for the future, remains to be seen.

It's the kind of risk that has to be taken to make the Gospel relevant in today's world.

Hungry men appear on the scene and ask for work; missionaries Charles Alexander (at the left wearing cowboy hat and dark glasses) and William Wylie (at right wearing sunglasses) hear their tragic appeal.

"Come back tomorrow," the men are told, so they leave the area with hope. The "man from Nashville" has consented to see if and how the budget can be stretched to include additional families.

POLITICS AND NEED: A CASE STUDY

By David M. Ackerman

The gross national product of the United States will pass the one trillion dollar mark within the next year. We spend $15.6 billion each year on alcohol, $9.7 billion on tobacco, $3.8 billion on jewelry, $1.5 billion on movies. Yet in 1967 a group of doctors, after touring several counties in the Mississippi Delta, reported to the Senate Subcommittee on Poverty:

We saw children for whom hunger is a daily fact of life and sickness, in many forms, an inevitability. . . . Malnutrition is not quite what we found. . . . They were suffering from hunger and disease, and directly or indirectly they were dying then. . . .

In 1968 a citizens board of inquiry concluded in its study Hunger USA,

. . . we face a (hunger and malnutrition) problem which, conservatively estimated, affects 10 million Americans and in all likelihood a substantially higher number.

In 1969 the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs concluded after extensive investigation,

Millions of American poor and near poor risk suffering the effects of serious hunger and malnutrition for one overriding major reason: lack of enough personal and family cash income to purchase the food necessary to provide themselves an adequate diet.

Nevertheless, despite public awareness, despite the stark nature of the issue, despite irrefutable reports that hunger and malnutrition exist in this land of affluence on a widespread scale, the government has responded more with rhetoric than with programs to feed people. Hunger has from the beginning been a deeply political issue. It has had to run a political gauntlet made up of Presidential ambitions, Congressional prerogatives, and bureaucratic infighting. The chronicle of how the political structures have responded to the hunger issue is, on the one hand, a case study of how our political system has failed, and continues to fail, those most in need. It is, on the other hand, a continuing example of the impact that people who care can have on the political system, and of the crying need for their persistence.

Congressional Politics

The very structure of Congress has made it difficult to obtain adequate legislative authority to deal with hunger. The Federal government has three main food programs – school lunch, food stamps, and commodity distribution. In the House these programs, with the exception of school lunch, fall under the jurisdiction of the Agriculture Committee, chaired by Rep. W. R. Poage (D-Tex.). Appropriations for all the programs must pass through the ever-watchful Agriculture Appropriations Sub-committee, chaired by Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D-Miss.). On the Senate side of the Hill the food programs are controlled by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with Sen. Allan J. Ellender (D-La.) as chairman, while the appropriations have been under the jurisdiction of the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee, headed by now-retired Sen. Spessard Holland (D-Fla.).

If these committees were responsive to the needs of the hungry, the nation probably would have heard little of the issue. The orientation of these committees and their chairmen, however, has been and is toward the farmer and his income, not toward the social problems of the poor and malnourished. These committees developed their power and built their bureaucratic empire (the Department of Agriculture) during the Depression, when farmers still constituted a quarter of the population and farm income was absymally low.

After World War II, they devised the commodity distribution and the school lunch programs not for the purpose of getting food to the malnourished but for disposing of the agricultural surpluses that the Agriculture Department buys off the market to keep prices from falling. Not until 1964 did these committees establish a program – food stamps – with a primary focus on the nutritional needs of the poor. But this has been meagerly funded, and each time the program has come up for renewal it has proved difficult to get the House Agriculture Committee even to report the bill.

Surprisingly, the chairmen of these committees have made little effort to conceal their indifference and outright hostility to the hungry. Rep. Poage, for instance, during hearings on the food stamp program in October, 1969, said,

Why are you "so concerned with maintaining a bunch of drones? You know what happens in the beehive. They kill those drones. This is what happens in most primitive societies. Maybe we have just gotten too far away from the situation of primitive man."

Rep. Whitten, often described as the "second boss" of the Department of Agriculture because of his power over its appropriations, has maintained that no one in this country is unavoidably hungry "except when there has been parental neglect through drunkenness or mental illness."

The only effective Congressional leadership on hunger has come from the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, created two years ago "to study the food, medical, and other related basic needs among the people of the United States." This committee, under the able chairmanship of Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.), has thoroughly explored the shocking inadequacies of the government's food stamp and school lunch programs. Bipartisan cooperation among members of the committee has enabled it not only to be a forum for bringing the hunger issue to the attention of the public, but also to forge a strong coalition in the Senate in support of expanded and reformed food programs. Despite the fact that this committee has no direct authority over the government's food program, in September, 1969, a coalition of Senators under its leadership successfully substituted a strong food stamp reform bill for the weaker version reported by the Agriculture Committee. In February, 1970, the coalition successfully added to a school lunch reform bill a series of amendments removing most of the legislative and financial barriers to participation in the school lunch program by all needy children. In July, 1970, this coalition increased the appropriation for the food stamp program for fiscal 1971 from $1.25 billion to $1.75 billion.

Yet even these successes have been able to be subverted or at least modified by the Agriculture Committees and their chairmen. The House Agriculture Committee simply refused to act for nearly a year on the strong food stamp reform measure passed by the Senate in September, 1969. The $1.75 billion food stamp appropriation passed by the Senate was whittled in House-Senate conference to $1.42 billion. Only the school lunch reforms were not modified, and this was due in large part to the fact that the House conferees were drawn not from the Agriculture Committee but from the more liberal Education and Labor Committee. Indeed the bill that finally was signed into law by the President on May 15 makes extension of free or reduced price school lunches to every needy child a matter of local administrative implementation and no longer of legislation.

But the power of the Agriculture Committees remains. Reforms have been made and appropriations increased only when these committees have been outvoted or outmaneuvered. Congressional reform may help to some extent, but the basic power still lies with these committees.

Presidential Politics

Soon after coming into office, the Nixon administration moved quickly to preempt the hunger issue as its own, both out of moral conviction and a desire to undercut Sen. McGovern as a possible Presidential opponent. With the eloquence of impatient compassion the President said in a message to Congress on the issue in May, 1969, "The moment is at hand to put an end to hunger in America itself for all time." The eloquence continued through December, 1969, as the President opened the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition, and Health by saying, "Speaking for this Administration, I not only accept the responsibility (to end hunger in America) – I claim the responsibility." Yet less than two months later mention of the hunger issue could barely be found in his State of the Union address to Congress.

The history of this Administration's response to hunger has been one of initial public commitment quickly muted by budgetary realities. Like President Johnson in Vietnam, President Nixon quickly discovered to his dismay that the battle against hunger could not be quickly and cheaply won. The Senate Select Committee has estimated the food income gap of the 25 million poor in this country – the difference between what they have and what they need to obtain an adequate diet – to be at least $3.3 billion and more likely $5 billion. More than that, hunger is but the tip of the iceberg of poverty. Poor housing, poor sanitation, poor health, lack of jobs and job skills, poor educational opportunities – hunger is not an isolated problem.

Unlike President Johnson in Vietnam, however, President Nixon chose to de-escalate his brief battle against hunger. Unwilling to commit the necessary funds, he has found himself in the anomolous position of trying to maintain his public commitments while opposing key reforms in the food stamp and school lunch programs when those legislative battles have been fought in Congress. Consequently, the primary leadership on the issue has continued to be exercised by Sen. McGovern. Indeed, the Administration's attempt to preempt the issue not only served largely to reinforce Sen. McGovern's leadership but also opened a credibility gap between promise and performance of major proportions.

Nevertheless, the Nixon Administration deserves credit for what it has done. Its predecessor refused even to admit the existence of hunger, and hid behind legalistic justifications of its inaction. The Nixon Administration has at least improved the timid administration of the food stamp and school lunch programs by the Department of Agriculture. It has substantially improved the cost-benefit ratio of food stamps. It has gotten either a food stamp or commodity distribution program established in nearly all of the 3,100 counties and independent cities in the nation. It has, with its sponsorship of the Family Assistance Plan, shown its willingness to move toward a system of cash income maintenance.

Some Myths About Hunger

By John Gillies

Good food builds strong bodies and minds.

Not necessarily. Malnourished children might develop strong bodies with better food, although those bodies may well be stunted in growth. But malnourished infants – according to the best evidence now available – may suffer irreparable brain damage, particularly where protein is deficient, which no amount of better food can remedy.

We can grow all the food we need.

We can grow a lot more than is being grown at present. Hybrid and new "miracle" strains of seeds will double or triple harvests. More land can be cultivated, through development of water resources or use of fertilizer. But there are definite limits. At some point, population needs will surpass our ability to supply food demands.

The population explosion is the root cause of hunger.

It is a major root cause, but only one of many. People are hungry because of a lack of food. That lack is caused by inadequate or insufficient production of food by transportation and distribution problems, or by too many mouths to feed.

There is no excuse for large families.

The present "technology" of contraceptives is best utilized by a literate and fairly sophisticated clientele. In poverty pockets, domestic and overseas, superstition, fears, tradition, and ignorance all conspire against responsible family planning. And a simple, medically-safe, and effective contraceptive has yet to be found.

People can eat if they will work.

Would you say this about older people, nursing mothers, and children? Many people would like to work – but work may not be available, or the people may be so malnourished that they cannot work without further damaging their health.

Preach the Gospel first, then feed people.

How do you preach to starving people? Jesus fed the five thousand first, then preached to them (they probably weren't starving; they were just hungry).

What You Can Do – Some Handles for Halting Hunger

By Faith Pomponio

A Mini Fable on a Maxi Theme

Once upon a time, there was a very wealthy land that was filled with many people who lived as lords and ladies, compared to their poorer neighbors in the countries to the south and far east of them.

The prosperous people were proud of their hard-earned good fortune, and very often shared it with others. Although fairly generous, they were not totally aware of the desperate needs of those around them. For had not their gifted advertising merchants carefully taught them how to pursue the good life in split-level comfort, surrounded by gleaming machines of magic that cleaned, polished, cooked, washed, disposed, made music, showed pictures, transported them and even brushed their teeth? Could Aladdin's lamp have produced greater marvels?

In the midst of all this goodness, it was not easy for the prosperous people to realize that as their refrigerators and freezers bulged with food 50% of the world's population was undernourished.

As health spas sprung up in all directions to help the overfed lose unsightly excess weight, how could the prosperous people comprehend that every 24 hours another 15,000 human beings starved to death somewhere on their planet?

Perhaps the hardest to grasp was the fact that at least 15 million of their own countrymen were hungry. Children, the aged and those too sick to work made up the largest part of this invisible army of severely undernourished in the richest country in the world.

How embarrassing! Hadn't the prosperous people given huge charitable donations to the poor over many years? Conditions couldn't be that appalling, could they? They could, and they were, and it was clear that within a few short years a devastating famine might easily sweep over the earth, affecting everyone.

Slowly the prosperous people came to realize that although their charity and existing self-help programs were very necessary, they did not go far enough to enable their fellow men to live, let alone happily ever after. So they wisely set about finding additional avenues of service, for now they knew that whatever they allowed to happen in the world community would have a direct bearing on the lives of their children and their children's children.

The End – or was it just The Beginning?

Pinpointing Root Causes

Some experts predict a world-wide famine by 1975, others by 1985. Still others believe it is possible, but that the situation could be reversed if all-out precautionary measures are taken right now. They call for a penetrating look at the complex root causes of hunger at home and overseas, including: population growth, economic-social-political factors, food production and distribution and even ecological balance.

Combatting hunger is such a massive undertaking that no one sector of society can cope with it in isolation from the other.

Christians have traditionally heeded the call of their Saviour to feed the hungry. Today, there are many challenging ways to do it. This article will attempt to spell out some of them. As your synod or presbytery or congregation or community develops even more possibilities, make a point of sending them to the editor of Survey, so they may be shared with others.

One word of caution at the outset. There are many "handles" listed here. Don't attempt to get involved in a number of things and risk doing them superficially. There are too many lives at stake. Carefully study the entire list and select those few areas where you feel that you can make the most meaningful, in-depth contribution. Good luck.

Too Many People

Overpopulation, colliding with under production of food, is pushing the world toward widespread famine. It is everyone's problem. Presbyterians at the synod, presbytery and local church level can join with others to help alleviate the population crisis in a variety of ways.

1. Establish continuing educational programs to help clergy and laity, adults and youth to understand the consequences of overpopulation in the world (mass starvation, perpetual war and revolution and even genocide) and how the United States contributes to the growing problem.

2. Request ministers, doctors, family counselors, parents and others to advise young married couples and those planning marriage on the need for voluntarily limiting the size of their families. Financial ability to care for a large family does not change the moral imperative to limit family size. It is now possible for people to have much longer life spans than they did in the past. To maintain a humane balance between annual birth rates and decreasing death rates, a zero population gain is considered necessary. This can be achieved if couples have no more than two children of their own. For those who desire larger families, adoption of additional children is suggested as a more moral alternative.

3. Work toward having family planning clinics in every county and major city that are open to all people of the community. Congregations can look into the need for family planning clinics and either make room for this in their church buildings or put their support behind existing facilities.

4. Help establish family planning and counseling units with services available to all people in every major hospital in the United States and in all our mission hospitals overseas. Stress the fact that identical approaches should be made to all races and classes, including whites.

5. Keep up with legislation on population control and communicate your concern to government leaders.

6. Contribute financially to worldwide population control efforts. In this connection, the following organizations are recommended for your consideration:

PLANNED PARENTHOOD-WORLD POPULATION, 515 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. PP/WP supports family planning programs in 101 countries and has 472 clinics in 38 states of the U.S. It required $24.5 million for PP/WP to fund its domestic and overseas work in 1969. You may contribute either to the New York headquarters or the PP center nearest to you.

ZERO POPULATION GROWTH, 367 State Street, Los Altos, California 94022. ZPG works through tax legislation reforms and through communication media to encourage Americans to limit the size of their families to two children. You can join ZPG by paying $10 annually. You can also work to organize a ZPG chapter in your community.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD PROGRAM, Church World Service, 475 Riverside Drive, New York, New York 10027. CWS is the coordinating agency which supplies information and contraceptives through 1,200 mission-related hospitals around the world.

Not Enough Money

There are many who feel that hunger is basically an economic problem that can only be solved through economic means. They consider poverty the primary cause of hunger and malnutrition among the poor. There are a number of interrelated economic, political and social steps that can be taken by churchmen in this area of concern.

1. Use every means available to urge your government representatives to help bring about legislation that will enable the giving of at least 1% of our gross national product to developing countries to speed their development and to help people help themselves. Other developed nations of the world are moving in the same direction. Some already are giving a higher percentage of their gross national products than the United States is for this purpose.

2. Ask the officers and directors of companies in which you own stock to invest in projects in developing nations. Ask them to reinvest as much profit as possible within such countries so that the long range interests of both company and people are served.

3. Plan with your family to give at least 1% of your monthly income to help bring about a change in conditions for some others who are now having to live on $100 per year. For a detailed list of suggestions on how you can let your money begin to attack root causes of hunger, write to: Task Force on World Hunger, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. 37202.

4. Carefully explore the possibilities of bringing about the guarantee of an adequate income for all Americans. Write to your congressmen and senators urging their support for welfare reform legislation that could make this a reality. People who have been without incomes will then need to be educated in the wise use of their funds, but they can't utilize this knowledge until they have some money to use.

5. Study the inadequacies of the present welfare system and work for its reform. To assist you in this effort, contact your local office of the National Welfare Rights Organization, since one of the best ways to learn about welfare is to hear from people who must live with it. If there is no Welfare Rights Organization in your community, contact the national office for information: NWRO, 1419 H St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005.

Also request from NWRO a reprint of The New York Times magazine article "Now It's Welfare Lib," by Richard Rogin. The article, which appeared September 27, 1970, gives a penetrating account of the welfare system.

6. Your synod, presbytery or church may want to sponsor a welfare dinner to dramatize hunger as a top priority and to reflect on its meaning for personal and corporate witness. Determine how much your state allocates for food allowances to those on welfare. In PCUS areas, it is often only 14 cents per meal! Then prepare a typical welfare meal, not to exceed your state's welfare food allowance per portion. Dinner could consist of collards, fatback and grits, or similar food. Invite several people who actually live on welfare to come and speak to you about welfare problems. Recognize that even though you have eaten a welfare meal you can not really comprehend what it means to exist on a welfare diet every day of the year. Donate the difference between what you spent for the welfare dinner and what you would normally pay for a dinner to a local hunger project.

7. Enlist and provide volunteers for various services needed by local welfare groups.

8. Organize a CROP Community Hunger Campaign to collect cash for overseas hunger and self-help projects through Church World Service. Contact: National CROP Office, Box 968, Elkhart, Indiana 46514.

9. Help start a literacy program in your area. A recent Harris poll shows that illiteracy is far greater than expected and it exists to a high degree among those classified as rural, Southern, black or poor. Illiteracy is an economic deterrent which perpetuates hunger. To get started on a literacy program, write for the new leaflet, "How to Fight Illiteracy," available for 15 cents from the Board of Women's Work, 341 Ponce de Leon Avenue, N.E., Atlanta, Georgia 30308.

10. Thoroughly investigate the possibility of establishing a low-cost day care center to look after children whose mothers must work. Often these children must be left untended. Either that or an older brother or sister must stay out of school to care for them. For information and consultation, write: The Day Care and Child Development Council of America, 1426 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005.

11. Help to keep young people from dropping out of school and into the twin traps of poverty and hunger.

12. Keep informed about legislation under debate and when it would be best for you to speak or write about them. Consider making a generous contribution to the Easter Offering as one means of dealing with hunger and human suffering.

Too Little Food

The U.S. produces more food than it can consume, yet millions of Americans go hungry, as do 50% of the world's population.

Matching up hungry mouths with available food supplies presents complex problems, not the least of which are political and economic. Hunger is called "the most devastating curable disease," and there are numerous ways that Christians can participate in an all-out effort to bring it under control.

1a. The national school lunch law became mandatory January 1. (1971) This legislation requires every school receiving federal funds to serve a free or reduced price school lunch to each needy child, regardless of race or national origin. You can learn more about the new law and new instructions and explain them to others. You can also form a school lunch committee to improve school feeding programs. Write today for The School Lunch Bag, a community action kit prepared by The Children's Foundation, which explains the legislation and regulations and suggests forms of local action at: The Children's Foundation, Room 309, 1026 Seventeenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036. Or write to the Crusade Against Hunger, 475 Riverside Drive, New York, N.Y. 10027.

b. Federal funds and U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) donated foods are available for a School Breakfast Program in schools that have many needy pupils or many who travel long distances. Your presbytery or local church can do much to urge your school board to initiate a School Breakfast Program in your area. If one already exists, you can provide volunteers to assist in serving the food, thereby easing the financial burdens of the local food service program.

c. Church groups that maintain day-care centers, settlement houses and recreation centers providing day-care for children from low income areas or sections with many working mothers will want to look into the Special Food Service Program for Children. By adding a feeding component to its program, any of these institutions can receive federal cash reimbursements up to 15 cents for breakfast, 30 cents for each lunch or supper and 10 cents for each supplemental food served between meals. Additional aids include: financing of up to 80% of operating costs in cases of severe need, USDA donated foods and technical assistance and guidance to establish and operate a program. If a local church initiates a summer recreation or cultural enrichment program for children from low income areas, it would also be eligible for federal funds to provide meals for these children.

For further information about items 1a-c, write: U.S. Department of Agriculture, Food and Nutrition Service, at either 1795 Peachtree Road, N.E., Room 302, Atlanta, Ga. 30309, or 500 S. Ervay Street, Room 3-127, Dallas, Texas 75201.

2. Study the administration of the Food Stamp or Commodity Food Program in your county to determine which of these is available to help feed the poor and how it is administered. Probe the extent of hunger and poverty in your location. Are all of the poor benefiting from either of these programs? If not, why not? Learn why existing legislation may not be implemented and work toward improved programs of distribution and welfare.

3a. Seek out people in your community who need food and help them know how to benefit from these food programs.

b. Organize transportation pools to assist the poor (who have no transportation) to get to the center where they purchase food stamps or pick up their food commodities. Contact your local welfare department for assistance on this.

c. Help preserve the dignity of aid recipients.

d. Provide picture labels for surplus food items for the non-reader.

4. Organize a summer program for low-income children which includes a feeding component.

5. Offer use of church facilities as food distribution and collection centers where needed.

6. Set up survey teams to investigate retail marketing practices in low income areas; work for fair distribution, pricing and services in such locations.

7. Help organize food buying clubs or cooperatives in low-income neighborhoods. Make church facilities available for this purpose.

8. Set up a "meals on wheels" program for senior citizens after determining nutritional needs of this age group. Begin with members of your own church. For further information write: Board of Women's Work 341 Ponce de Leon Avenue, N.E., Atlanta, Ga. 30308.

9. Organize a "hunger hike" or "march for development" and use the funds raised for foreign and domestic food projects. For details contact: American Freedom From Hunger Foundation, 1717 H St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006; Walther League, 875 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill. 60610.

10. Train women from low income areas to teach their peers how to shop wisely and prepare a balanced diet with low incomes. Use church kitchens, schools and other facilities for nutrition classes, particularly in areas where there is malnutrition or imbalance in diet.

11. Urge families to have at least one sacrificial meal each week or to regularly use less expensive foods in order to share the family food budget with hungry people, or both. Money saved could be brought to church on the first Sunday of the month to be dedicated and sent to "Halt Hunger" or other hunger alleviating agencies.

12. Support research into overseas nutritional projects being conducted by land-grant colleges, a good many of which are in the South. Contact these schools to learn how you or your group can give special support, including equipment. If you are not sure which land-grant colleges in your area are engaged in this important field of research, contact your State Department of Education.

TO HELP YOU AND YOUR FAMILY

REMEMBER HUNGRY PEOPLE

*Make and Decorate Your Own Hunger Savings Bank. (Then put it on your dining table to remind all who eat there that many others have less and that we need to share!)

Step No. 1: Find an empty oatmeal box, a plastic milk carton, a coffee or nuts can that comes with a plastic lid, or any empty can or glass container.

Step No. 2: Find pictures in magazines of hungry people or pictures which show causes of hunger or pictures which show how the hunger problems might be solved. Look also for words or phrases in this magazine which might help remind you of the millions of hungry people. (You may be able to use some of the words or phrases on this page.)

Step No. 3: You can either paint the container or cover it with a sheet of white or colored paper that wraps around and glues in place.

Step No. 4: Decorate by pasting the pictures, words, and phrases around the container or draw your own pictures and write or print your own words and phrases.

Step No. 5: Spraying the finished, decorated container with a clear vinyl plastic or varnish will enable it to endure more handling over a longer period of time.

Other ideas: *Sunday School classes may wish to have a Hunger Savings Bank decorating contest and display winners somewhere in the church.

*Or youth groups might mass produce the banks and give or sell them to every family in the congregation.

*Some individuals and families might want to skip one or more meals each week, perhaps having a brief worship service and/or "rap" session at their regular meal time – and using that time also to put the savings from their skipped meal in the hunger savings bank.

*Other people may want to commit a certain amount or percentage of their income each day or week to the hunger cause and deposit this sum regularly in their Hunger Savings Bank.

What to do with the money: When your bank is full or perhaps on a regular monthly or other periodical basis take the money out of your Hunger Savings Bank and give it to some world or local hunger cause supported by your congregation. Look elsewhere in this issue for listing of causes which you and others in your congregation might support or, for more information, write to the Task Force on World Hunger, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. 37202.

WORLD HUNGER: My Family's Urgent Concern

HOW ONE WOMAN FIGHTS HUNGER

By Margaret Moore

As the latch clicked, a pair of huge, somber, black eyes peered through the torn screen. When the slight woman opened the door, a faded calico curtain flicked across my face in the draft that always seemed to prevail. Every door in the long, smoky, brick block had a gathered curtain hung about eye-level. I was in sight of the US-Mexico border in south El Paso, a beautiful city set in a horseshoe around the southern-most tip of the Rockies.

But it is a city of staggering contrasts. With a turn of my head, the "dream houses" high on the mountainside dissolved cinderalla-like into barren huts and unkempt rows of ancient brick tenements below. Despite all its beauty and sunshine, El Paso ranks second highest in intensity of poverty among the nation's 100 largest cities, according to a survey made by the Office of Economic Opportunity. This survey estimated that 30.3% of its 320,000 people fall below O.E.O. poverty guidelines.

From 1962 to 1967 an extensive study was made in south El Paso under the direction of D. C. Pfannstiel and S. M. Hunter of Texas A&M Extension Service to identify the most effective methods of reaching Mexican-American families with Extension information. The findings were sobering:

Three-fourths of the families lived under crowded conditions; one-third of the homemakers had four grades or less schooling; 88% had incomes under $5,000 – 65% being under $3,500. The elderly, very young and large families were most deprived.

"Most family incomes were inadequate to purchase low-cost adequate diets, or even enough food for many growing children and the elderly. Diets for at least 3/4 of the families depended heavily on beans and breadstuffs with sufficient meat for seasoning beans, stews and soups."

Home visits and a monthly newsletter hastened awareness of the extension program in the research area. The newsletter was a most effective tool, and home visits on a person-to-person basis fostered confidence in the educational program.

When the research project was coming to a close, it became apparent that a continued educational program in this area was urgently needed. So a Consumer Aid program was established to teach nutrition, cooking, sewing, sanitation, pest control, home improvement, consumer education, and the best use of supplemental foods and food stamps, when these programs came to the area.

In four years this program of concern reached over 1,700 low-income homemakers. Some results were dramatic.

While making home visits, one aid found a very ill epileptic mother sitting at the table and staring at overdue bills. Her deaf-mute husband was making only $220 per month. She had a teenage daughter and two pre-school children, anemic and skinny. In a state of depression, the mother was almost helpless, and the home was unbelievably filthy. As a first step the aid persuaded the finance company, which had been pestering the mother, to erase the account.

Then the aid began teaching her how to budget and also referred her to the clinic for a physical exam. There she also received information on planned parenthood and donated food. The aid taught her how to use the donated food and how to make food storage cannisters from coffee and lard cans. A garden and flowers were planted. With the donated food and a knowledge of nutrition taught by the aid, the mother was able to feed her youngsters much better and their appearance dramatically improved. Many people in the neighborhood commented on the obvious improvements during the five months of repeated home visits by the aid. This, like many success stories, has not been heralded in the news. But for those involved – aids and recipients – the program has been big news and good news.

The philosophy and methods of this type nutrition program offer one approach to combatting hunger. It is an "outreach" effort through which concerned individuals help others at their point of need by showing them how they can help themselves in basic, everyday ways.

Other communities can adapt the idea to fit their own situations. With the help of home economists, aids (either paid or volunteer) could be trained in basic facts of nutrition, food-preparation, and "buymanship." They could go forth then and simply share this with others. What better way to show Christian concern for one's fellow man?

As an associate home demonstration agent for youth phase of the program , which depends almost wholly on volunteer leaders to reach and teach low-income youth, I recruit and train adult volunteers, help set up youth classes, coordinate the nutrition program with other community agencies, and constantly try to make more people aware of the needs. The work can be hard and sometimes discouraging – for example when you set up a class with careful preparation and no one shows up. But satisfaction fills you and runs over when a beautiful wide-eyed youngster with long black hair throws her arms around your neck, plants a kiss, and says "thank you." Yet there is another deeper kind of satisfaction. The expression, "doing my thing," best explains it. Being able to use my training in dietetics to meet an urgent need and thus showing my concern for individuals gives me a clear-cut sense of purpose. For me, this is using my life far more efficiently in the service of God than perhaps ever before.

SHE NEEDS YOUR LOVE

Little Mie-Wen in Formosa already knows many things . . . the gnawing of hunger . . . the shivering of fear . . . the misery of being unwanted.

But she has never known love. Her mother died when she was born. Her father was poor—and didn't want a girl child. So Mie-Wen has spent her baby years without the affection and security every child craves.

Your love can give Mie-Wen, and children just as needy, the privileges you would wish for your own child.

Through Christian Children's Fund you can sponsor one of these youngsters. We use the word sponsor to symbolize the bond of love that exists between you and the child.

The cost? Only $12 a month. Your love is demonstrated in a practical way because your money helps with nourishing meals . . . medical care . . . warm clothing . . . education . . . understanding housemothers . . .

And in return you will receive your child's personal history, photograph, plus a description of the orphanage where your child lives. You can write and send packages. Your child will know who you are and will answer your letters. Correspondence is translated at our overseas offices.

(If you want your child to have a special gift—a pair of shoes, a warm jacket, a fuzzy bear—you can send your check to our office, and the entire amount will be forwarded, along with your instructions.)

Will you help? Requests come from orphanages every day. And they are urgent. Children wrapping rags on their feet, school books years out of date, milk supplies exhausted, babies abandoned by unwed mothers.

Since 1938, thousands of American sponsors have found this to be an intimate person-to-person way of sharing their blessings with youngsters around the world.

Little Mie-Wen and children like her need your love—won't you help? Today?

Sponsors urgently needed this month for children in: India, Brazil, Taiwan (Formosa) and Hong Kong. (Or let us select a child for you from our emergency list.)

Recent political upheaval in Poland is not expected to affect WCC plans to channel $252,000 through to the Polish government to increase hospital facilities for the aging.

Pakistan has reported to the United Nations that although relief operations in the cyclone-devastated areas of East Pakistan are underway, the task is formidable; the financial loss exceeds $150 million, but the human cost is incalculable.

The WCC says its aid to American draft evaders in Canada makes no judgment regarding the rightness of the evaders' position, nor is it intended to encourage draft evasion.

A United Church of Christ congregation in New Haven, Conn., has become the first local church in the United States to make a contribution directly to the international anti-racism program of the WCC – a $1,000 check from the United Church on the Green.

NATIONAL

Even as it gains momentum, the women's liberation movement within American churches is undergoing a transformation; the goals of more equal representation, ordination, and unofficial political power continue, but these expressions are being supplemented, perhaps even surpassed, by a determination to use woman power to move all humanity toward more meaningful personal and group experiences, and a part of this effort aims at steering religious institutions toward more lively theological contemplation, according to a Religious News Service report.

A church for homosexuals, the Philadelphia Homophile Church, has been attracting about 10 to 15 persons to services each week, reports pastor Bob Louis; the word "homophile" was used in the church's name "because we want the connotation to be that of a full love relationship, not merely a sexual relationship."

Waving an Israeli flag and a banner stating "Never Again," young Jews protest the sentencing of 11 Jews in the Soviet Union, during a rally in New York. Following a series of demonstrations all over the world, the Soviet Union's high court commuted the death sentences of two Jews convicted of hijacking conspiracy and awarded them relatively light 15-year prison terms. The court, ostensibly feeling the immense pressure of worldwide public opinion, also reduced labor camp sentences of three other defendants. All had been convicted of treason for planning to hijack a Soviet airliner.

The beleagured Presbytery of Philadelphia – torn by dissension over the Black Manifesto – now is experiencing internal controversy in the case of six clergymen who are accused of breaking ordination vows for refusing to leave the chancel of the Ambler Presbyterian Church last Oct. when ordered to do so by the moderator of the Presbytery. If found guilty at a Jan. Judicial Commission meeting, each could be admonished, rebuked, suspended, deposed, or excommunicated.

New Castle Presbytery, which includes 56 congregations in Delaware and Eastern Shore of Maryland, has voted to require congregations to pay ministers a minimum salary of $6,500 annually, plus housing and utilities.

The Young Lords, members of a militant Puerto Rican organization, who "occupied" Kings Way Lutheran Church in Philadelphia in October, have been "swept out" of the church by women of the congregation for not keeping the church clean. The women, carrying brooms and dustpans, took back the church from the Young Lords, charging that lax housekeeping had made a "pig pen" out of the building.

Christian Century magazine has reported that the NCC report showing that giving to American Protestant churches held "steady" in 1969 "conceals more than it reveals." (Survey, Dec. 7, p. 15) Christian Century while not doubting the statistics, contended that "the financial crunch in the denominations is much more severe than this ostensibly encouraging analysis admits."

ECUMENICAL

Disciples of Christ may merge program activities in Arizona with a commission already approved by state units of the UPUSA and the United Church of Christ; delegates to the Arizona Convention of the Christian Church will be asked in Feb. to join the three-denomination commission.

An unprecedented agreement on the meaning of the Eucharist has been reached by a group of 19 theologians from communions as varied as the Friends, the Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Southern Baptist, and mainline Protestant churches; a document entitled "The Eucharist in the Life of the Church: an Ecumenical Consensus" has been prepared by the group for the NCC.

The Synod of the Evangelical Church of Hesse-Nassau in Germany has decided to release approximately $27,300 to the WCC Fund to Combat Racism.

Summer camps maintained by the Upper New York Synod of the Lutheran Church in America, the Cayuga, Syracuse-Utica Presbyteries of the UPUSA, and the Episcopal Diocese of Central New York have entered a joint camping agreement, the Ecumenical Camp Association, to enable the denominations to offer an expanded and more economical year-round camping program.

A $2.6 million low income housing complex has been launched in Jackson, Miss., by the African Methodist Episcopal Church and the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). Similar projects are planned in Atlanta, New Orleans, and Baton Rouge, La.

The Canadian Council of Churches has reported that Canadian churches have pledged more than $102,000 in aid to cyclone and flood-ravaged East Pakistan.

PEOPLE

Dr. David H. C. Read, minister of New York's Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church and Union Theological Seminary lecturer, is the new chairman of the Men's Committee of the Japan International Christian University Foundation, a group of 500 men in the U.S. who work on behalf of International Christian University, Tokyo. He succeeds the group's founder, the late Dr. Ralph W. Sockman.

UPUSA moderator Rev. William R. Laws Jr. has asked congregations to give the denomination a "vote of encouragement and love" through extra gifts for mission, because inflation has forced many cutbacks in the mission program of UPUSA.

Miss Kathleen Ryan, 33, has become the first woman ever ordained a deacon in the Episcopal Church – the closest thing to a woman minister in the denomination.

Dr. Tracey K. Jones Jr., United Methodist Church exec, predicts that an end to the sometimes bitter debate between "social action" and "spiritual" factions in churches may be in sight. He says "conservatives" and "liberals" are saying many of the same things.

Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum says the recent commutation of the death sentences of Jews in the Soviet Union and of Basques in Spain made for "positive omens for 1971; while there can be no illusions that these regimes have changed their repressive character, these decisions not to commit political murders represent a victory for the emerging conscience of mankind."

Rev. Ralph Abernathy, of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Father James E. Groppi, two clergymen noted for civil rights work, reportedly have been the subjects of Army intelligence surveillance.

Evangelist Billy Graham, speaking at Montreat-Anderson College, says "it is an illusion that freedom can survive without religious faith." He says if the U.S. does not change its course, it is heading for a dictatorship. "I don't know if it's to the right, or left . . . but in our search for new freedom, we are in danger of losing what little freedom we have; an anarchic attitude is growing, an attitude that wants to tear down everything and put nothing in its place; the only thing that can turn the tide is a religious revival."

$50 Million for Self-Development No. 1 UPUSA Story of 1970

The launching of a massive campaign to aid people in their own development rates is the No. 1 news story of the UPUSA for 1970; the denomination has embarked on a campaign to raise at least $50 million through a Fund for the Self-Development of People.

The campaign, which went through the initial stages of activation during the latter half of 1970, is expected to be high on the UPUSA agenda for the coming decade.

"War Claims" To Be Used By UPUSA for "Reconciliation"

Projects aimed at "reconciliation among nations and peoples" will benefit from $1,979,485 in "war claims" soon to be received by UPUSA. The money will be received for damages incurred to church properties in World War II; recent Congressional action made the grants possible through an amendment to the 1948 War Claims Act. The sum earmarked for the UPUSA is based on the sale and trusteeship of General Analine Co., a German-owned firm operating in the United States before the war.

Although a final decision on the disposition of the funds will not be made until March, UPUSA is "committed by its own actions and the urgency of the times to continue this special emphasis upon the reconciliation of peoples."

Geering Moves to Victoria

Professor Lloyd G. Geering, a Presbyterian who has twice been charged with "doctrinal error" or heresy, has accepted a newly-created chair for religious studies at Victoria University, Wellington, New Zealand; he is currently principal of the New Zealand Presbyterian Church Knox College, a theological school in Dunedin.

In 1967, the minister was accused of heresy by a group of Presbyterian laymen and clergymen; the General Assembly of the denomination exonerated him of the charges, but disassociated itself from some of his theological views. The organization which brought the action against Prof. Geering then withdrew from the New Zealand Presbyterian body.

The General Assembly, in its 1970 meeting last November again withdrew a motion to dismiss the minister. Both times Prof. Geering was accused of challenging the doctrines of the resurrection of Jesus and life after death.

New Zealand Presbyterians Contribute $1,000 to WCC

The Presbyterian Church of New Zealand has contributed $1,000 to a WCC "Program to Combat Racism," an effort to aid various anti-racism projects around the world, which has been sharply criticized by some church bodies for its contributions to groups allegedly using guerilla warfare tactics in South Africa.

UPUSA Agencies To Fight Racism in Southern Africa?

UPUSA boards, agencies, and institutions have been requested to use their voting rights as stockholders in the Gulf Oil Co. to express concern over southern Africa apartheid, racism, and colonialism, because stockholder action is "one way Presbyterians can press for justice in southern Africa;" the stockholders meeting is set for April.

"Gulf's $150 million plus investment in Angola clearly involves Gulf in support of Portuguese white minority rule colonialism," a denominational Task Force has established.

UPUSA agencies are being urged: to purchase and/or retain stock in Gulf Oil Co.; to consider assigning proxies to the denomination's Southern Africa Task Force for representation purposes at the annual meeting of the Gulf stockholders; and to be represented at the meeting of the Gulf Oil Co. stockholders, after consultation with the Southern Africa Task Force.

How to give when you can't afford to...

Are you like so many of our Christian friends . . . yearning to give more to World Missions . . . even though you're unable to "make ends meet" on your present income?

Didn't you know there are ways to give that can actually increase your present income?

It's a matter of putting idle properties or unprofitable investments to work in different ways that also create tax advantages.

Many find it a wonderful way to help the work of Presbyterian world missions, and at the same time increase their own financial security.

Questions/Answers

Do persons with no knowledge of the Bible or of Jesus Christ have any valid sense of right and wrong? If so, why do they need a knowledge of the Bible and of Christ?

Persons with no knowledge of the Bible and of Jesus Christ do have a sense of right and wrong. They have, in many cases, a true sense of what is God's will for man. But their perception of it is partial. Their knowledge is incomplete. In Jesus Christ and in the Holy Scriptures we have a full revelation of God's will for man. So we share Christ and the Bible with such persons in order that their knowledge of right and wrong might be perfected and completed. But the primary reason they need to know the Bible and Jesus Christ is that through the Scriptures and Christ they come to know the grace and love of God in all its fullness in ways they could not perceive it from other sources. Most, if not all, religions of the world present ideas regarding the laws of God. It is the Christian faith that says, "God is love." It is the Christian faith that teaches us about His grace and His forgiveness.

In a Presbyterian worship service is it proper for a layman to pronounce the benediction?

As far as the Book of Church Order is concerned, there is nothing improper about it. It has been a custom in the Presbyterian Church for many years that the pronouncement of the benediction be reserved to ordained ministers, but there is no rule at the present time requiring this.

It is well to remember that there is a difference between a benediction, a prayer, and an ascription. A benediction is the announcement of a blessing, such as, "Grace, mercy and peace . . . be with you all." Notice the benediction is addressed to the persons receiving the blessing. A prayer, however, is addressed to God, like this: "Father, may thy blessing rest upon us as we leave this place . . . . " An ascription ascribes praise to God. A typical ascription is "Unto Him . . . be glory, honor, dominion and power forever and ever." Notice this is the ascribing of praise to God. In the Presbyterian Church there has never been any objection to a layman offering a prayer or an ascription, but the announcement of a benediction was traditionally reserved to the ordained minister.

Dr. Ben Lacy Rose answers your questions

Can you explain how the year of Christ was established? We see mention of a year BC and another AD. I would like to know when the year AD started and its numerical designation.

I asked Dr. Ross Mackenzie of this seminary to help me with this question, and he has given me the following information: It appears that the Church began to use the phrase AD (anno domini – year of our Lord) around the year 526 or 527. A Christian abbot by the name of Dyonysius Exiguus, in sending out his encyclicals, was unwilling to depend "upon the remembrances of ungodly men regarding the time." So he chose to denote the times of the years from the incarnation of our Lord Christ. This appears to have been the first use of the letters AD, but it did not find general use until it was encouraged and popularized by the Venerable Bede around 725. It was not until the period of the Enlightenment in Europe that we began to use the phrase, BC (Before Christ).

Why did God make men and women of different colors?

The color of a man's skin was God's way of enabling that man to adapt to the climate of the region in which he lived. People with dark skins were able to live more comfortably in a hot climate. There was then this useful purpose in making men of different colors, but aren't you glad that He did? Such differences make for interesting variety, don't you think?

What do you think of a minister reading his sermon every Sunday? It worries me to see him stick so closely to his papers. A few notes would be okay, but we have a minister of years of experience who still reads his sermons.

Some of the great preachers of history read their sermons: Philips Brooks, Jonathan Edwards, John Calvin. But modern congregations prefer that the minister deliver his sermons without sticking too closely to a manuscript. The effectiveness of a sermon is cut in half when it is read.

If a sincere Christian church worker falls into a particular sin and is unable to give it up, will God forgive?

Yes, thank God, as long as there is true confession and an honest request for help.

COLLEGE FEATURE

Maryville College
Maryville, Tenn.

Maryville is a small accredited residential college for men and women. The 4-year liberal arts program offers opportunity to specialize in 1 of 18 majors or to propose an individualized major crossing departmental lines, therefore allowing for personal choice; a faculty of interesting and interested persons; acceptance as an individual searching and growing and worthy of respect; and freedom to move within a flexible and aware community.

STILLMAN IS IN VANGUARD OF FIGHT AGAINST HUNGER

A national financial columnist, drawing from the latest U.S. Census figures, recently concluded that four years of college are worth $245,000 to the high school graduate during his lifetime. The financial significance of a college education bears out the significant witness of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., through Stillman College. Regardless of race, there will always be students in need of greater educational opportunity, and Stillman has made opportunities for higher education available to many who otherwise might not have had this chance.

Consider these facts:
– 78 per cent of Stillman student body receive financial aid.
– 39.2 per cent come from homes where the family income is less than $3,000.
– 88.4 per cent come from homes where the family income is less than $7,500.
– Based on national average annual income, the Stillman graduate will earn over $5,000 a year more than his high school counterpart.

Through Stillman College the church can provide a meaningful witness in the fight against hunger. This is why your support is greatly needed.

If we can get serious about hunger

Reading this issue of Survey from cover to cover could conceivably result in one of the most uniquely valuable investments of time and effort you will make this year – IF you will but allow its message to penetrate your heart and mind!

Produced with the cooperation of the Boards of World Missions and National Ministries and the Task Force on World Hunger, this special issue has been designed and executed to make us aware of the problem of hunger and some of its root causes without attempting to be exhausting in its depth and scope or shocking in its treatment.

"Presbyterians know that hunger – even starvation – exists in their own communities," a minister said recently. "And they know the problem is even more severe in other parts of the world. But we're reluctant to acknowledge or admit that it exists close at hand, for then we would be forced to do something about it. And it is rather embarrassing to admit that we have hungry people living in our backyards and dying on our doorsteps."

Perhaps "embarrassing" isn't an accurate description of how most of us feel about hunger. We feel sort of helpless and frustrated because the problem is immense, and permanent solutions seem beyond our comprehension.

"What am I supposed to do?" Load a bunch of food in my car and drive into some poor neighborhood and knock on doors until I find someone who's hungry? I just don't see myself doing that kind of thing, and I think this kind of Christmas-basket approach to the problem does more harm than good," a young woman said recently.

She is right! Emergency feeding of hungry people should be done, but by experts and as part of other long range, diverse programs, if possible, to bring about permanent solutions.

So this issue of Survey is designed to awaken awareness, perhaps fill some cracks in the information gap, most of all to show us how we as individuals and members of small groups can grab hold and become involved in this war on hunger.

Our Presbyterian US General Assembly in 1969 established hunger as a top priority of our denomination for five years. An Interboard Task Force on World Hunger was set up and made recommendations to the 1970 General Assembly, pointing up some specific directions in which pastors, sessions, congregations, and presbyteries might begin moving.

Some churches and members have begun moving – at times dramatically. For example, a small group of women in a congregation in Kentucky got concerned enough to win enough support in their congregation and community to change the county's commodity food distribution system and establish a breakfast feeding program for hungry children throughout the school system.

There are plenty of "handles" to grab in this fight against hunger here and abroad. Look at the list that Faith Pomponio has compiled in the article beginning on page 13. So hand wringing isn't a valid option for the concerned Christian and his congregation.

"I am perfectly willing to get involved in this project," a woman told her minister, "but I do think we need to make sure that the recipients really deserve it." "Why, Mrs. ----------, I am surprised at you," the minister chided gently. "Suppose God dispensed his grace like that – only to those who deserved it? Sort of scares me to think about it!"

Using God's standard in dispensing grace, we have no alternatives but to give to those who need our help, to give sacrificially as he gave his Son that we might live more abundantly.

If we're serious about our faith, we've got to get serious about hunger! – BH section of your magazine is a marvel of compression; reading the "millions" of pages of the Religious News Service as you and I do, and for you to boil them down to a few succinct sentences is tremendous, as far as I am concerned.

Rabbi Solomon S. Bernards
New York, N.Y.

I recently sent the enclosed letter to my Pastor to express my concern about a problem which exists in practically every church in each denomination . . . .

After having attended your service this morning, I felt constrained to express my feelings about today's church attendance.

I saw so many new faces (some on old bodies) who were virtually strangers to me. Evidently, the last time that I saw them in church was last Christmas and possibly at the Easter service. Where have they been? The church is a 365 day, 52 Sunday operation. From all appearances . . . Presbyterian has been able to operate without "strangers" but, how in God's name, have they done without the church? The old theory that one can get close to God on the golf course, while holding a fishing line, lounging around home, etc., is so much poppycock! We all know that God is everywhere. But the place to be on the Lord's Day is in His House. It brings one much closer to Him than all the aforementioned activities.

Many members think that as long as they contribute to the church they are fulfilling their obligation to God. Not so! The pastor, the faithful members of the congregation, the choirs, and even the custodian is entitled to a full house each Sunday. The latter would be out of work if no one bothered to show up! Every one of the 1,400 members on the rolls can devote an hour or two 52 times a year by being present at church services. They need this continuous association to keep in tune to the times and to keep a song in their hearts.

There is no excuse for empty pews in a church when there are enough members to fill them twice!

She also has not made up her mind where she stands within the organized church. She is an activist and is more or less turned off by the churches.

Incidentally, why in the name of Christ (and I use that word in deep reverence) did you choose to put Dean Rusk in a December pre-Christmas edition? His views are pretty well known after eight very long years. Surely you should have interviewed someone with convictions and hopes for love, peace and reconciliation.

My first impulse was to cancel the subscription, but I decided not to just so I could see what the SURVEY was really all about. I have seen. From now on I will learn what goes on in the liberal mind of our church from other sources.

APATHY

If restlessness is a broadspread disease, it is, after all, the normal condition of "natural man." But apathy is something else; if restlessness is natural, apathy is unnatural.

Apathy is insensitivity and dullness. Doctors tell us a seriously sick person cannot recover without the will to live. Tragically, many "go through the motions" of existence but never come alive; they are "past feeling."

Apathy derives from Greek apathein, "insensibility," and apathes, "without feeling." Stoics considered apathy the highest condition of humanity, for they stressed the rule of reason over emotions, which they considered dangerous. Alexander Pope disapproved of "lazy apathy in which Stoics boasted their virtue," and Thomas North, translator of Plutarch's Lives, noted that while apathy might be thought of as equanimity with regard to oneself, "with reference to others it is indifference."

North was right. Apathy is insensitivity to others' suffering. It answers the plea to do something about poverty with, "The poor we have always with us" and the tragedies of war with, "There will be wars and rumors of wars." Hubert Covington calls apathy "the spirit of not really caring," which says, "I do not want to be become involved." He adds that nothing is "as dangerous to the life of the church." Broaden that a bit: is anything more dangerous to life itself than indifference to air and water pollution, over-population, increasing sex crimes, war?

Let us pray: "Lord, stab me with another's pain!"

On Reading of Hunger in My Own State

By Nancy Hollis Dillard

I could scream.
It is obscene.
But one mustn't be extreme.
So I turn the page,
Shun the shrunken, crumpled granny,
The milky-eyed granny,
The able only to baby-sit granny,
Empty of hope and full of age.
I am filled with outrage.

Here's a woman, middle-aged,
On the next page,
And in her face read rage.
I don't blame her.
God knows she tried,
Tears dripping inside
At the bloated bellies of her young.
When will her trap of poverty be sprung?

Then see the girl-child,
The barely up-to-my-knee-child,
The too-listless-to-play-child,
Twisting her skirt, showing frail scabby legs,
Turning eyes to the camera as mutely she begs
That I link my fate to her stunted squalor,
As is the message of the Man I say I follow.

Riffle quick the leaves of this horror tale
So not to see the baby pale.
Deny the rush of pain
Like sudden rain
That drenches me
When I see
The after-image plain
Of the baby's dying face.

It is a man-damned disgrace.

The Presbyterian Survey tells you what in heaven's name is going on.

The purpose of the Survey is to let Presbyterians of all convictions in on what's going on.

The hope of the Survey is that when clear, concise information is made available, tolerance—maybe even understanding—will follow.

So, for example, if you'd like to find out how other Presbyterians are facing contemporary social problems, read the Survey. Or if you'd like to know more about how our missionaries are doing, read the Survey. Or if you're interested in keeping up with the latest movies, books and television programs of religious significance, read the Survey.

Of course, like any self-respecting magazine, we express a few opinions of our own. Opinions based on what is really going on.

We hope that reading the Survey will encourage you to do the same.

A one-year subscription to the Survey (22 issues) costs $3.00. Churches sending the Survey to every family earn the special rate of just $1.50 per subscription.

Paul Anthony, So. Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Anthony:

The Urban Life Center of Georgia State University is presently engaged in developing a program which will attempt to deal with some of the most pressing problems faced by the city and citizens of Metropolitan Atlanta.

The program will be long-range, consisting of a 15-week series of seminar workshops. Atlanta-area residents from all walks of life will be invited to participate, in the hope that as many diverse points of view and ideologies as possible will be represented. It is our hope to engage businessmen, educators, factory workers, students, janitors, doctors, policemen, elected officials and others, in a collective process of viewing the Atlanta area as a dynamic, growing place which, though beset by problems of great magnitude, can be dramatically improved if people will commit themselves to its improvement. Although 15 weeks of group activity won't provide an automatic solution, it is the first step which will at least put people in touch with one another and permit them to share their hopes, frustrations, fears and aspirations.

One charge often made--and rightly so--by people in communities is that plans are made for them about things which affect their lives in very basic ways. We in the Urban Life Center want to turn that around by involving a broad representation of citizens from the Atlanta community as participants in this program.

These will be workshops. They will not be "classes" to teach you what you need to know about your community. We believe that you are the one who knows best what is happening and what should happen to make our community a good place to live in. Indeed, it might not be an exaggeration to say that the survival of Metropolitan Atlanta as a viable place for living and working may depend on our ability to communicate and act together.

We will begin the series with a kick-off dinner on Wednesday evening, February 10. Each Wednesday evening from then through May 19, from 7:00 P. M. until 10:00 P. M., the workshops sessions will occur. The program consultants listed on this letter are working together to plan a varied set of experiences, including films, speakers, small-group sessions, and feedback opportunities. Topics to be dealt with will be such things as housing, health and welfare, transportation, the environment, the system of justice, jobs, political power, and so forth.

We want you to be one of the 150 Atlantans participating in this program. There will be no cost for the program. This community needs your insights, experiences and commitment if it is to even have the chance to avoid---or at least to counteract---the destructive forces confronting all major urban centers. Moreover, to provide the Urban Life Center with a dynamic body of community experts, upon completion of the program we would like to ask you to consider accepting an appointment as an Urban Life Associate. This is a new concept which we believe will make it possible for the Urban Life Center at Georgia State University to become more responsive to the community on which it depends for its very existence. Your acceptance would be absolutely voluntary on your part. This concept of Urban Life Associate will be explained more fully at one of the early sessions, before we ask you to accept.

We cannot be an Urban Life Center without you. We cannot begin to examine and solve our urban problems without you. Please consider this request carefully. In the next few days, a member of our staff will contact you to discuss the program more fully, if you wish, and to determine your response.

Sincerely,

Alex B. Lacy, Jr.

Mr. Al Ulmer, Ret.
Box 204
Vilas, N. C.

Dear Al:

It was certainly good to hear from you, and to know of the life and times of the Ulmers'. We may very well be in a position to make a modest deposit - or grant - to the credit union, and likely there are individuals here who would consider makeing deposits. I would, however, like to raise another idea with you before going further on that. As you know, several of the foundations have "risk capital" which they lend, and really in my opinion, have no sweat about loosing, if and when it comes to that.

From this fact I strongly feel you should think a little bigger and try to find a little more assistance than that, which would be possible at best through an organization like the Council, or a few friends.

As an example of the above, the Ford Foundation has just made a loan of $850,000 for "economic development" in Hancock County alone. This much committed to one small geographic unit!

I would assume at this point you would not want the credit union to be swamped by big money or messed with by an outfit like Ford. It does seem to me, however, from your description of it, that the credit union is at the point where a sum of perhaps $10-20,000 invested with you specifically, for high risk loans would be very favorable, and it does not seem to me that money of this size either swamps your group or brings in outside influence.

Should you wish to pursue this with Ford, you might write George Esser, their southern representative, at P. O. Box 792, 212 East Rosemary St., Chapel Hill, N. C. 27514.

If for any reason you want to do this elsewhere, I think it will probably be appropriate for you to make a request for a deposit of this size with Field, New World, New York, or Norman Foundations. (If you don't have these addresses, we will send them.)

Money in the private tax-exempt sector is being severely curtailed for tax-exempt organizations, and the future does not look that good for most of us. This is largely the reason why before we consider what would be both something of a strain here, and lend the very modest help for you, that I suggest you go to those places where significant help would really be of no strain at all. Let me say, however, that if this approach fails, or if you feel strongly about not making such an approach, we will make a decision here very promptly.

Life goes on as usual with most of us. As you may know, we lost Mrs. Knox, which was like loosing an institution. The dirt, smog and noise grows at an impressive rate, and we battle it with varying degrees of tolerance and frustration.

On the personal front, the Antique Shop continues to lose money with great efficiency, and this creates for me a very personal issue with Mr. Nixon.

The Ford Foundation has informed us that while we are nice guys, they doubt very seriously if they will play any more after this year. I don't know whether this is proof that we are good guys are not, but it does seem to indicate that the days of affluence are limited.

On that happy note, my warmest regards to you all.

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony

February 3, 1971

Mr. Paul Anthony
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Paul,

After the shock is over try to believe this is really a letter from ole Ulmer, retired. I am writing to you because I think you will be interested in something I am involved in here in my home county, Watauga, and because I hope you might be able to help us on a problem we have.

For the past year I have been helping start a credit union in the county in which I live. Last June we got chartered and with a small grant of $50/ month for six months from The Federation rented a little office behind the bus station here in Boone. During the winter the Federation has allowed me to work part time with the credit union assisting in promotional work and consumer counseling. I am also a member of the Board of Directors. We have grown from 26 members and 76 dollars in June, 1970 to 110 members and assets of $10,000 the end of January. We are lucky in having an older man on social security who is treasurer and who keeps our office open afternoons each weekday. The credit union membership is an interesting mixture of people, poor, middle class and even one rich investor from exclusive Blowing Rock. We are doing some good. So far we have made 25 loans totalling almost $9,000 to people who are members, membership in the credit union open to anyone working or living in Watauga County, North Carolina. As yet we have been unable to make the type of loans, except in one or two cases that I will mention below, that really can help turn somebody's financial situation around. This is part of the problem, this lack of capital to loan. The other part of the problem is one I mentioned in both my literary gems about credit unions and cooperatives for SRC, the problem of high risk loans, the loans to people desparately in need of money in the amount needed to really change or help change their situation. If a credit union can be induced to take this risk (and the problem of conservative boards of directors and credit committees is something I am learning much about working on the inside as I am) how can the membership's money be protected in the case of a loan that fails? There is an answer to the protection and that is a special reserve fund set up to absorb high risk loans to very poor people. The question is how to set up such a fund.

There are two problems, then, that I hope you can perhaps help out on. One, the question of capital: Our charter allows us to accept investments from organizations and individuals outside of our field of membership who are interested in the economic development of our county. The investments can be interest earning or the dividend can be waved if the investor so desires. Is there a chance SRC as an organization would like to invest some money it is not presently using in The Watauga Federal Credit Union? What about individuals working for SRC putting their savings to work here in the mountains (part of their savings anyway)? I am sure your first question is how safe would the money be? The answer is, as safe as any bank or savings and loan association. Recent legislation, thanks to old bank hater Patman, has given federally chartered credit unions passbook savings insurance up to $20,000. Would the money earn anydividends? Last year, in order to attract savings we paid 5% dividends on savings. It is pretty certain we will try to pay that % again if we have that much money left over after expenses. Lastly, for every dollar saved in the credit union up to $2000 if you are under 55 years of age (a declining scale of dollar for dollar coverage after 55) the saver gets a dollar of free life insurance. If you all might be interested I'll send you membership cards, or possibly give you a sales pitch in person.

I do not know if you still have an economic development department, but if you do I can think of no better place for it to make a grant of $1000 or even $2000 than to a special reserve fund for a young credit union trying to serve an entire community.

That's it, I guess. I'm not full of hope about anything, but working a little in the county in which a man lives doing something half way helpful is another way of numbing the larger situation in addition to the tall beer recommended by brother Campbell in the fall issue of Look. Now, with the request out of the way let me catch you up on family stuff.

Laurel Kali Mara is one y ear and three weeks old. She walks, she talks, she crawls on her belly like a reptile, and she smiles at me every morning. Robin is weaving and rug hooking, making some beautiful things, several of which are entered in the Mint Museum in Charlotte in a show right now. I did some stone masoh work and farmed during the summer. We are growing organically grown produce and with the recent opening of a health food store in Boone we should do pretty good farming this summer. That and the part-time work with the Fed. of S. Co-ops I mentioned earlier keep us in groceries.

Say hellp to people for me at the SB&C. I miss you all but not enough to brave Atlanta traffic and air and water and noise to do anything about it.

Let me know if you can be of any help to us.

your friend,

Al Ulm

Dear Mr. Story:

I have read your proposal with substantial interest. It strikes me that the idea is sound, and if implemented could be very faluable. It also strikes me, however, as being a very difficult proposal to have funded at this time.

On a substantially more modest basis, the National Urban Coalition is interested in the same process. Enclosed is a statement they have just issued.

Do keep me informed and let me know if there is any way that we here can be of assistance.

I'm sure you have a busy schedule; however, I would certainly be obliged if you would look this over and forward to me your comments and suggestions.

There are a number of obstacles that must be overcome before the CNP can be made a reality. Your advice would be of great assistance in this regard.

CONFERENCE ON NATIONAL PRIORITIES

Preliminary Outline

The purpose of the Conference on National Priorities is to:

1. Provide an interdisciplinary examination of American values, needs, and desires.

2. Tally our national resources.

3. Provide a structure of thought on national priorities which can be used by the Conference participants and by a concerned public.

4. Synthesize our resources with these values, needs, and desires into a set of national priorities.

5. Focus maximum public attention on the need for public participation in rational decision making on this subject matter.

The Conference on National Priorities is not merely a study of the future. Rather it is a realization of where we are now and what we are now. It is an examination of what we want for the future. And finally it is a dynamic structure for the synthesis of our national personality and resources into a coherent path of action and commitment.

This nation is rebuffed abroad and in turmoil at home. Its politics and its people have become polarized. For lack of a national purpose we are rapidly losing confidence in ourselves and in those around us. We are faced with increasingly complex choices and yet the choices themselves will eventually slip from our grasp unless we attempt to form a coherent and realistic set of national priorities.

We are rapidly approaching our 200th birthday as a nation -- we are still a young nation -- and already there are many that say our system cannot respond to the changing desires we are experiencing, particularly to the rate at which these desires appear to be changing. National policy appears to be formed in the heat of the moment and national priorities by default. To some there appears to be no rational procedure for the selection of national priorities.

National policy responds to national needs only slowly. This is due to many factors. For instance, policy proposals are often submitted by limited-interest groups. The national government must balance conflicting wishes according to cumbersome procedure and in accordance with established precedent. Finally, all policy must be judged to a greater or lesser degree for its capacity to command support from a part or all of the nation. Revision of certain institutional machinery of the government may therefore be considered a prerequisite for, or one of, our national priorities.

The starting point for discussion (and for the ensuing conflict resolution) is the clear delineation of American values. An attempt must be made to define what might be called an "aggregate value system" for the people of the United States. Values are clearly a dynamic of our system of human interaction. No values can be automatically assumed; it is even more certain that they cannot be ignored.

Needs and desires must be treated as outgrowths or functions of our basic value system and basic human nature. The major needs and desires of the society must be weighed and set into a pattern of reasonable conformity with the aggregate value system. Human nature must be considered vis-a-vis our values with a mind toward the eventual integration of these considerations into our actions or institutions for action.

Discussion will, of necessity, include the private sector and quite possibly imply action there. It is proper that it should. But the Conference will nevertheless attempt to limit itself to the rigorous definition of those activities which should be attempted on behalf of the public as a whole.

Most truly national policy deals with the allocation of resources. We must assume that the resources that form the currency of policy decisions are limited. Therefore, to attempt a selection of national priorities we must define our resources. This is of special importance as we enter a post-hostilities phase in Vietnam which may free sizeable funds for other uses.

At this point in the Conference the "critical mass" will have been assembled -- a value structure and a resources structure. We must attempt to synthesize these values, needs and desires into a coherent set of national priorities. In the process of so doing the Conference will explore rational structures of thought such as systems analysis by which to marshall these inputs.

The focal point and the interpretational heart of the Conference will be the actual synthesis of values and resources into priorities.

The Conference will assemble a catalytic group of distinguished Americans who have already made significant contributions to the still small dialogue on national priorities. These men and women will provide varying perspectives on the process of priority selection.

At the very minimum, the Conference will provide an examination of the aggregate value system, a tally of our resources, and structure for thought in the synthesis of national priorities. With even a modicum of success it should provide a series of more or less well-defined options in the field of national priorities with which the American people can identify. At its most successful, the Conference is capable of actually defining a set of national priorities in a new and meaningful manner.

The Conference must aim at the enlightenment of the public. This will be its lasting value. It is an overriding necessity at this juncture in our nation's history to promote a meaningful public consideration of who we are, where we are, and where we want to go.

The Conference on National Priorities is our most practical starting point.

Problem Areas

1. The foremost problem is financing this conference. Primary outlay of funds will be for honoraria and travel expenses of some major participants. Conference facilities will be the next most expensive item. Publicity and reasonable operating expenses of a small staff (despite the emphasis on volunteer help) is a factor. Estimated cost: $60,000. Proposed sources: foundations and public-spirited businesses. Terms of contribution will be restricted to simple recognition of the contributing party or organization.

Suggestions on sources of funding:

2. Certainly the quality of our top level participants (suggested list of names in preliminary outline) will to great measure dictate the quality of the Conference. These men and women will be chosen for their substantive knowledge, for their approach to the problems and their systems of reasoning, and in some cases for their capacity to inspire awareness.

Suggestions on participants:

3. The question of national priorities is perforce of immense magnitude. To some it may seem futile to approach such an all-encompassing question by the means of a conference such as this. It is assumed that no matter how carefully the Conference is planned that it will not be able to cover every conceivable question in the chosen context. It is necessary, then, to further define the format and to shape reasonable parameters of discussion of speakers and panelists.

Suggestions on parameters of discussion:

Dear Hayes:

I have not forgotten your inquiry about possible financial assistance to school board members in the region. In fact, I have discussed the matter with several people here, with our attorney, and with several of the smaller foundations. In addition to your situation, and several others, we have been particular aware that Mrs. June Cofer here in Atlanta, could make excellent use of a little assistance.

The general opinion is that school board members are pure and simply elected public officials, and as such, simply cannot receive funds from foundations.

The only alternative of merit would be to create an independent non-tax exempt group and seek individual contributions (contributions, of course, would not be tax deductible). Through such a method, a few thousand dollars might be raised and spent as you indicated.

Of course you know how difficult individual fund raising is, but I would like to have your reaction to this or any other legal alternatives which may have occurred to you. Frankly, I would not strain on this one, sensing the odds would be very high, except that I also readily see the merits and the potential results.

Let me hear from you.

Dear Paul:

Recently I wrote to Virginia Frank of the Southern Education Foundation asking if she knew of any sources of funds available to help local school board members do their work. My letter was motivated entirely by self-interest since board members here receive no remuneration or expenses; the whole endeavor is seen as noblesse oblige.

I don't have in mind some slush fund but rather resources which would permit me to do some very specific things I think would strengthen me as a board member and would allow me to accrue additional leverage with which I could do "good things." Without going into a great deal of detail here, let me mention what I would do if I only had the wherewithal:

1. Provide materials to school patrons who are concerned about a specific problem in the schools, but who don't have any idea as to how to approach such a problem. As you can well imagine most folks here are very isolated from literature which could explain the problem, provide models, and offer alternative solutions. I come across such material in my AFSC capacity but can't personally afford to hand it out to constituents who need it in order to more effectively and creatively challenge the school system,

2. Establish a series of dinner meetings involving between fifteen and twenty people--students, teachers, administrators, community people--to discuss issues within the school system in a setting which I am able to orchestrate by the virtue of having selected the topic, chosen the participants, and paid for the dinner. I would hope to have about a dozen such meetings during the school year and hopefully this would help to bring together disparate people within the community, establish some communication between me and the people, and provide a controlled setting in which we could thoughtfully examine and discuss issues before the district,

3. Produce a personal newsletter for distribution to a cross section of two or three hundred community leaders. The newsletter would serve as a communication link between a public official and the community, would give me a forum in which to report on actions of the school board, and provide me with an opportunity to more subjectively discuss issues and problems before the district. I would hope that such a publication might help citizens and groups to keep in touch with what is happening and to encourage them to monitor the actions of the board.

For my own purposes I am thinking of no specific amount of money. If I had $500 it would be a start. Perhaps $1500 - $2000 is a realistic figure. With as much as $5000 I could obviously bring in resource persons to the dinners and generally involve more people.

I enclose a copy of Gina's reply. You will notice she suggests that perhaps SRC might be able to get a handle on this problem since it exists with other board members around the South too. Of course, I don't know how many board members want to be as aggressive as I am suggesting, but I assume that there must be some who would like to use their board position as an organizing tool.

I would appreciate it if you could give some thought to this matter, perhaps discuss it with some of your staff, and let me know if you see SRC taking any lead in the kind of venture Gina suggests. I have written the Mott people but as a regional chauvinist I would be interested in a Southern "thing." Thanks for being there, and best wishes for a Merry Christmas!

Hayes

Dear Hayes:

Your letter just came, and I am departing for a week's trip, so this is just to say I'll think. I'm afraid what you are talking about cannot be tax-exempt money at all, it's not just AFSC and SEF role problems. I suspect that even innocent and information producing support to an elected official would be construed as helping you get elected again. I'll check that out, and even if it's true there may be ways.

It strikes me that this is exactly the problem of June Cofer in Atlanta, and perhaps of some black school board members around the South. By combining people into an "advocate school board member" group you might beat the tax-exempt problem, make it appear more general like VEP. I know you don't need more organizations or more meetings, I'm just thinking how to defuse the politics of your idea. If SRC were only up to it, one might develop an alliance of right thinking school board members under their wing, for instance, who could receive individual grants through them.

Another idea that comes to mind is Mott Foundation with their community education program - I enclose a copy of a letter on that which might lead to something between you and Mott.

Anyway, I'll think some more.

Sincerely,

Gina

Liberal Is As Liberal Does

THE NEWEST member of Richland's District One school board, M. Hayes Mizell, has made some shocking assertions in his chosen role as crusader for racial integration but none more startling than his Thursday night statement that "I am not a wide-eyed liberal."

Mizell, it will be remembered, is the civil rights activist who wooed and won the black, bloc vote of Richland Democrats in defeating long-time Chairman Caldwell Withers in the June primary. The same support enabled him to defeat write-in candidate Thomas N. Bagnal in the November general election.

A former employe of the National Student Association, Mizell now is state director of the Community Relations Program of the American Friends Service Committee. In this and other capacities, he has made a career of denouncing South Carolina politicians and policies at all levels for failure to bring about the degree of race-mixing he favors.

He has labeled Gov. Robert E. McNair an "agitator" for his handling of the 1968 racial violence at Orangeburg. He has censured South Carolina school officials for "the bleak and shameful performance of our recent past" in moving toward desegregation.

Three years ago, he called upon the National Education Association "to establish closer rapport with the activist Negro community across the state." In that same statement, he slapped at Negro teachers and administrators by charging that they were seen by civil rights and education activists in many Negro communities "not as an ally but as a member of the opposition."

Earlier this year, Mizell told a U.S. Senate committee that South Carolina's school system "remains anti-civil libertarian and pro-military."

Similar citations of Mizell's disdain of the people and practices of his adopted state could be extended indefinitely. Suffice it to say that if we accept his declaration that he "is not a wide-eyed liberal," he will do until a real one comes along.

M. HAYES MIZELL
District One Board Member

Mizell: I'm Not Wide-Eyed Radical

By FRED MONK
Staff Writer

M. Hayes Mizell, newly-elected member of the Richland County District One School Board, said Thursday night that "contrary to what some people believe I am not a wide-eyed radical."

In an interview prior to his address to the graduating trainees at Columbia Industrial Education Center, Mizell said that he hopes to add a new dimension to the school board which has been lacking in the past.

Mizell, who has been criticized for his opinions of the implementation of the unitary school system in the county and hard-integration line, said that as a board member one of the first things he will strive for is to get the board out into the community to see what the problems are.

"Communication is the big problem," he said, "and I believe that the school board at this time does not have intelligent information on some of the problems that exist."

Mizell said that when a group comes before the board with a complaint, the board usually has no foundation at that time to know whether that complaint is a valid one.

The 31-year-old professional civil rights worker said that he believes the school district should hire a full-time community relations director to find out what the complaints of the community are, so the board will know about them before a group comes to a school board meeting with the complaints.

However, Mizell said that the first thing he would try to do would be to get the board to hold school board meetings in different areas of the district, in order to establish better communications with the community.

Mizell, who was elected to the school board despite a last-minute write-in campaign for Columbia businessman Tom Bagnal, said he knew that his beliefs were different from most of the members of the board and he did not expect to see any immediate changes in its policy.

"I don't expect to get a great deal done right away," he said, "but I will present my case."

"I am sure that the board has a distorted picture of me and I'm sure I have a distorted picture of them," Mizell said.

"I am not as bad as some people make me out to be," he said, "Contrary to what some people believe I am not a wide-eyed liberal."

Mizell, who is director of the S.C. Community Relations Program of the American Friends Service Committee, said that there is a definite problem of discipline in the district's school.

"The principals have been caught off guard," said Mizell," and instead of placing more of the burden on them we should put more of the burden on the student."

He said that a system of discipline should be established where students and faculty members would hear certain disciplinary cases and where those who have been accused of an offense would be allowed to present their positions and even bring their lawyers if they desired.

"Just bringing in an extra assistant principal is no way to solve the problem," he said.

Mizell said that principals have to be burdened with too much paper work and other outside duties to adequately deal wih the problems the schools face.

Speaking to the 65 graduate trainees at the Columbia Industrial Education Center, Mizell said, that they could help society by relating the experience of being a victim of circumstances which they could not control.

He said that only through persistent work will accomplishments be made and inequities be dissolved.

Dear Paul:

I want to apologize for not being in touch with you before this time concerning the manuscript that I owe you on our total assessment of the project on crime and corrections.

I am sure that is unnecessary for me to tell you how many changes I have gone through since leaving the Council (from Gulfsport, Mississippi, Somerville, Tennessee, through Florida and Sandersville, Georgia, to the notorious Lorton Complex of the District of Columbia). Frankly, as I moved from one process to another, my concept concerning criminal justice was regularly confused. Now I believe we do have something to say and we will send the manuscript to you in the very near future.

Bill Farmar will be taking a job over here in the near future and this overview will be authored by Bill, an ex-offender, and myself, consequently we should be able to present a unique point of view, that is if you want it?

We sent you the manuscript on the Employment of Black People in Criminal Justice Agencies. Bill Farmar and Bob Anderson were supposed to get together on this and apparently they did not do this. Just as well because I was not too satisfied with this document. However, if Bob still wants to use it and feels that I can improve it in any manner, tell him to contact me.

Enclosed is a report on the Lorton Community for your information and and for you to circulate among my former co-workers.

Let me know how you feel about the overview of the project. Hope to see you soon.

Dear Paul:

I expect I should really be writing this to your secretary -- but, hopefully, she will read this and act.

Some months ago you promised me a picture of yourself that I might hang with the rest of my "rogues." Since I talked to you, my walls have changed -- but I would still love to have your face up there with Gaylord's and Harold's and Jack's and Hubert's.

I am now perched atop the highest building in Madison -- Van Hise Hall, at the University. It was a hurried decision, but the job offered me, as Director of Statewide Communications was too challenging to pass up. So I shook off the Republican dust of Washington and took on the Democratic snow of Wisconsin. Norm, incidentally, is the new administration's Secretary of Transportation (at least he took his first step toward confirmation today when he was approved unanimously by a Senate committee).

It seems possible that you might get up this way on occasion. Please remember that we have extra room, full bar, interesting friends, and much warmth to give our extra-special cronies.

Nødtvedt and I am ~~w~~ presently a participant in the ICYE - International Christian Youth Exchange - program living for a year in Applenton, Wisconsin where I am studying political science at Lawrence University. My reason for writing this letter is to express my interest in goiing to the Deep Soth during my spring-vacation. This interest stims from my envolvment in a political game at Lawrence University. I was a democratic senator from Mississippi. At same time I was a member of a study-group which was studying "Hunger in America" and SRC's work. As an exchange student I am very eager to see so many parts of United States as possible. I spent two weeks with a black family in Chicago before Christmas. Both husband and wife are supervisors in public aid offices in Chicago. I visited several families on welfare and spent most of the days in public aid offices. It was a wonderful experience.

My future plans are to study law or political science in Norway. I hope I will be able to specialize in international politics and relations. I also hope to enlarge my knowlege of English, German and Spanish at the United Nations college in Geneva, Switzerland.

In line with my desire to make a trip to The Deep South, I would like to inquire about the availability of sponsorship funds for such a trip. It would be several years before I could again consider such a trip after my return to Norway this summer. I worked for two years beside going to High School where I was the student council president, to finance this year in United States.

My interest in sponsorship from your organization would be to cover my travelexpenses to and from The deep South and the expenses while I would be there. I would prefer to be 'placed' at a SRC-project, if possible. I have been in contact with the Director of Community Organization Project and I think it should work out.

It is very hard to estimate the expenses for such a trip. Travel-expenses from Appleton to The Deep South and back would probably be close to $I25 - $I50. I think you should be able to estimate my expenses in The Deep South better than I can. I will be able to leave Appleton March I5, and should try to be back March 26 or 27. If you recommend that I should maybe stay one or two weeks more, I could probably work something out. I would like very much to be "placed" at a SRC-project. That is because I through reading about SRC would like to become more familiar with the organization.

I apprichiate very much the consideration I know you will give to this letter.

Peace
Gisle B. Nødtvedt

Dear Miss Stebman:

Pat Watters is out of the office and has asked that I respond to your letter about names for the Chambers Dinner.

Enclosed is a list of the members of our board from North Carolina. You should get a very substantial response from each of these persons, and I would suggest that you ask each of them to have others whom they know make contributions ehther or not they will attend the dinner. Enclosed also is a list of our board. I believe if you wrote each of them explaining the purpose of the occasion, you would get a rather significant response. (Would you let me know how checks should be made out, and where they should be mailed for others of us who cannot attend?)

The Council does not solicit individual contributions so we do not have such a list for North Carolina, and I believe our publications mailing list for the state would not be of much use to you.

We are very pleased that this is being done for Julius, and will be more than willing to help in any way possible.

Dear Pat,

On April 29th, LDF is giving a dinner in Durham, North Carolina, to honor Julius Chambers. I am wondering whether it is possible for us to have the use of the Southern Regional Council's North Carolina list of donors for invitation purposes.

If your people agree, we can send the dinner invitations to you or your lettershop for mailing and, of course, pay any costs involved. We would be glad to handle the technical details in the way easiest for you.

I would appreciate knowing as quickly as possible if this idea meets with the approval of the powers at SRC. We are trying to help Julius recoup some of the losses caused by the fire which destroyed his office.

I hope you and your wife are well and I send you both my fond regards.

Sincerely,

Betty

Dear Sir:

On March 3rd, EAL Flight #568, Atlanta-Charlotte, I experienced a rather substantial delay, and in the first class section there was considerable grumbling.

The two young ladies working this flight handled that situation with extraordinary skill and courtesy. Should you receive complaints from anyone on that flight, I would like for this fact to be a matter of record.

More particularly, these two employees are a prize asset of Eastern Air Lines, and I would appreciate it if this letter of recognition of both their talents and their disposition to the Company is made a part of their personnel records. I send this to you on the assumption that these two young ladies are based in Atlanta. If they are not, I would be grateful if you would forward it to the appropriate office.

They would be very much appreciated.

Dear John:

In response to your query concerning anti-blockbusting legislation, I am enclosing a copy of the Georgia anti-blockbustin law, signed by former Governor Maddox on March 24,1970; the March 1971 issue of South Today; and a copy of an article on neighborhood transition which appeared in Atlanta magazine.

A recent book on open housing, worth reading, is James L. Hecht's Because It Is Right.

Passage of the George law was psychologically important to the citizens of South DeKalb County who, for various reasons, were interested in "stabilized neighborhoods". The law fails to authorize a comprehensive open housing program, but perhaps it is a first step. The most effective anti-blockbusting actions here seem to be investigations and suits initiated by the Justice Department Attorneys.

Let us know if we can be of further assistance.

Sincerely,

Horace N. Barker, Jr.

Attached is a list of the newspapers which form the base of our clipping service. In addition to these newspapers, a number of magazines, journals, and state and federal reports are used either with the clipping service or separately in our library. I believe the only effective way in which you could determine what we have or how you might make use of it, would be for you to spend some hours hear assessing our procedures. At that time, we could discuss the possibility of a formal or informal arrangement with the Lamar Society.

Dear Mr. Anthony,

At Tom Naylor's suggestion I would like to ask for your assistance. I am currently conducting an independent study here at the Case Western Reserve University School of Library Science. Essentially I am working to isolate the parameters of a possible information system for the LQC Lamar Society. I personally would like to see the development of a regional resource depository or technical information service structured around the broad interests of LQC, open for use by members and non-members. While any final determinates will stem from LQC's own goals/needs I feel there first must be a determination and study of currently active information collecting-coordinating-disseminating systems and additional potential sources.

I understand the Southern Regional Council maintains a clipping service. I am interested in the extent of this service, it sources, demands upon it and your evaluation of it as a whole. I would also be interested to know of any other active information service with which you may be familiar or persons involved in such projects. I am currently trying to determine the regional aspects of state, university and special library and data bank services/facilities. Unfortunately working at a distance has its disadvantages, consequently your comments as a user and producer of an information service would be all the more appreciated. I hope I can offer some initial conclusions when I make it to Atlanta in April.

Thank you!

CIVIL WAR IN ILLINOIS

DOESN'T ANYONE CARE ABOUT CAIRO?

A war is taking place on our own shores, involving the lives of our own people, and hardly anyone has stopped to notice. The war is being fought by whites and blacks in a small town in southern Illinois called Cairo (pronounced "care-o" or "kay-ro"). There are about 6000 people in the town, of whom 30-40 percent are black.

Underlying the current crisis are deep-seated tensions which are racial as well as economic. Civil rights activity in the comunity can be traced to 1946 when blacks won a suit demanding equal pay for black and white teachers. In 1963, blacks held demonstrations against a segregated swimming pool. Offsetting their victory in the courts was a decision by the city to close the pool altogether. In 1967—sandwiched in between and overshadowed by the outbreaks in Newark and Detroit—was a disturbance precipitated by the death of a black soldier.

The violence seemed to signal an increasing polarization of the races. The police said that the soldier, who had been in jail awaiting trial on AWOL charges, had committed suicide in his cell. Blacks charged the soldier had been the victim of police brutality. Lending weight to their accusations was the fact that the soldier's body was embalmed before dawn without the permission of the dead man's family. A close relative indicated that the family had wanted an autopsy, but that the coroner had decided that none was necessary.

In the same year, as the races drifted further and further apart, whites organized a vigilante group known as the White Hats because of their headgear. Calling themselves a neighborhood protective group, the White Hats armed themselves, held regular drills and launched attacks on the black neighborhoods. Pyramid Court, a low-income housing development, was their favorite target. In 1969, the White Hats were officially disbanded by the state. However, their place was soon taken by a new group with close ties to the White Citizens Council called the United Citizens for Community Action (UCCA). For all practical purposes, the White Hats are still very much alive.

Complicating things is an extremely bleak economic situation. By every standard imaginable, Cairo is economically depressed. In 1960, 56 percent of the town's housing was substandard and without plumbing. Between 1950 and 1970, the population dropped from 12,000 to its present level of about 6,000. The unemployment rate is now at 10 percent and higher among blacks. About 30 percent of the residents are on some form of public assistance. An ambitious young man seeking his fortune in the world is likely to move to St. Louis or Chicago.

The immediate crisis has been occasioned by a black boycott of white businesses. The boycott is being sponsored by the United Front, an umbrella group formed in 1969, which seeks more and better jobs for blacks. Now almost two-years-old, the boycott has definitely hurt white businessmen. Several firms have been forced to close.

Pitted against the blacks is an equally determined group of hostile, frightened whites led by the mayor, the police chief and the White Hats. Guns have been accumulated by both sides, while shootings, beatings, bombings and burnings have become a common every-day occurrence. Since the boycott was initiated, there reportedly have been more than 140 black-versus-white shooting incidents.

Most of the violence, however, appears to have been directed against blacks. A reporter for the Guardian, who recently visited the black neighborhoods, compared the area to a "war zone": ". . . the passage through the black neighborhoods is like a war zone tour. In nearly every block there are the ruins of a burnt-out house, often a row of four or five sets of charred wood."

Not all the facts in the situation are clear, but the dimensions of the tragedy are unmistakable. For unlike the tragedies at Kent State or Jackson State which were quick affairs over and done with, the crisis in Cairo continues unabated. What we have is the logical fruit

Mr. Anthony
How about a report from the SRC?
Gary Knoff

of complete polarization—armed, prolonged racial conflict. Cairo threatens to become our domestic Vietnam, a symbol and symptom of national malaise, a possible testing-ground for future race wars to come in other communities across the country.

In recent months, the already critical situation has shown further signs of deterioration. When the federal courts threw out a local anti-picketing law aimed at blacks, the City Council promptly enacted a new set of ordinances designed to curb demonstrations. All five blacks on the police force have now resigned. Meanwhile, the police have deputized auxiliary policemen, some of whom are reputed members of the White Hats. Blacks have charged the police with making discriminatory arrests, using unnecessary force and, in some instances, actively participating in vigilante attacks.

In a highly unusual move, Governor Richard Ogilvie has stationed state troops in the area for an indefinite stay. The Governor is quoted as saying the troops "may be there for several years." Blacks, however, claim they have received no more protection from this group than from the local police, and view the troops as a kind of occupying army.

Not long ago, a black soldier on leave in Cairo died,

The Skirmish Among Catholics

Cairo's seething racial tensions have caught up the Catholic church, and cast it as both hero and villain in the white-black tug-of-war in this river city. The hero image reflects off Father Bernard Bodewes and the property—church and rectory—of former St. Columba's parish here; these have been the organizational loci of the Black United Front of Cairo (UFC). Not heroic has been the image reflected off of chancery headquarters in Belleville; from there Bishop Albert R. Zuroweste ordered Father Bodewes and the UFC out of the property or face eviction proceedings.

Enter now the National Catholic Conference of Interracial Justice, the National Coalition of American Nuns, the National Federation of Priests Councils, the Catholic Interracial Council of Chicago, the Illinois Migrant Council, Loretto Adult Education League of Chicago, two Chicago inner-city parishes, St. Dominic's and Holy Angels, and others. They organized a coalition which went to Cairo in an attempt to cool tensions over the eviction deadline, set for February 1. Said Sister Margaret Ellen Traxler, spokesman for the coalition, "We are concerned about the image of the Catholic church as it affects the black community."

There was desire also to support Father Bodewes, whom Sister Traxler described as "really the only Catholic witness" among blacks in Cairo. When the head of the inner-city apostolate for the Belleville diocese left Cairo last year, it was Father Bodewes who stepped in and has been the principal Catholic witness among blacks in the city. The Southern Illinois Association of Catholic Priests, principally from the Belleville diocese, has aligned itself on the side of Father Bodewes.

The coalition said it was not going to Cairo to defend the black cause as such, but to point out to Catholics and the bishop that when one group is in power and it acts against those not in power, this is considered oppression. "Consequently," Sister Traxler told the press, "the image of the church will be that of a white, racist institutional power." The best people in the world can fall victim to the use of such power, she added.

The immediate objective of the coalition was to head off the impending eviction crisis. If the eviction plans stood, the coalition said, a vigil would be kept on the parish property. On the other hand, if Bishop Zuroweste was agreeable, the coalition was prepared to buy the parish property (the property is a creaking set of buildings that was sold to the diocese by a religious order three years ago for $3,000, when the parish was phased out). The purchase being made, the coalition would then turn the property over to the UFC.

The visit to Cairo was less than all the coalition hoped, although it did have the effect of heading off the eviction, at least for the time being. The coalition met with the parish council of St. Patrick's Church in Cairo, the council being authorized by Bishop Zuroweste to listen and convey the coalition's recommendations to him. (Bishop Zuroweste had himself refused to see the coalition; the coalition marched from door to door at the Chancery in Belleville, but door bells were not answered.) The coalition's recommendations were that the church give massive economic help to all of Cairo, both black and white; that church and community work together for an economic program of self-help; that proposals be made to the Bishops Campaign for Human Development to bring a flow of economic help to blacks and whites in Cairo. There was also a recommendation for "outside facilitators" who would bring, not only blacks and whites together, but Catholics as well.

The coalition's recommendations were passed on to Bishop Zuroweste, but as of February 10, no public action had been taken. The Catholic situation in Cairo was still in abeyance. And still on the table was the coalition offer to buy the parish property.

JOHN DEEDY

the victim of an unknown sniper. In the last eighteen months, three police chiefs, one mayor and one county sheriff have resigned.

Given the seriousness of the situation, a question arises as to why Cairo has attracted so little attention? We can begin with the obvious lack of concern on the part of the American public. The reasons for the public's indifference are not entirely clear. Perhaps the war in Vietnam has desensitized us to violence. Perhaps the tragedy at Kent State has drained our energies. Or perhaps black people—the chief victims of this war—are simply more expendable than whites.

In any event, whatever the reasons are, the public's inattention to Cairo has been reflected, if not reenforced, by the media. Relatively few stories have been filed on the beleaguered town—an incident here and there—but hardly the sustained, extensive coverage required. Moreover, insofar as attention has been given, the media have been guilty of some gross inaccuracies and distortions.

Several weeks ago, for example, United Press International and the Associated Press—the two major wire services—issued releases about a supposed raid on a police station by "squads of armed Negro men." Hundreds of rounds of ammunition were reportedly fired in what appeared to be a deliberate, unprovoked attack on the police. The story made its merry way into scores of newspapers across the country ranging from the New York Times and the Washington Post, to the Milwaukee Journal and the Ann Arbor News, not to mention Newsweek magazine. Omitted from the story was the fact that a black-owned tavern, a church used for meetings of blacks, and the offices of a civil rights lawyer were all riddled with bullets at about the same time of the alleged raid by blacks.

The story, however, was not only misleading but inaccurate as well. A skeptical Times' reporter who did take the trouble to do a follow-up story for his newspaper could only find seventeen pockmarks on the police station which might have been caused by gunfire that night. Chicago Journalism Review, which keeps a critical eye on the media, has gone so far as to suggest that the alleged raid may never even have taken place.

The questions raised by this misreporting are: first, why both news services have continued to rely heavily on local stringers for information—individuals who have close ties to the white power structure; and second, why neither UPI nor AP has seen fit to station reporters from the outside area (say, Chicago) in Cairo on a regular basis.

If the media have failed to confront the crisis in Cairo, those in positions of national leadership have not fared any better. Thus far, the Justice Department has failed to authorize a full federal grand-jury investigation, which would include a look at possible violations of civil rights.

The FBI says that it is "continuing to watch the situation," but has no plans to actively investigate—this, despite the fact that a public defender's project partially funded by the federal government has been the target of gunfire. Cars bearing Kentucky license plates reportedly have been seen in the area on the nights of white sniping attacks. Such activity would seem to fall under the anti-riot legislation which makes it a federal offense to cross state lines for the purpose of fomenting violence. Nevertheless, the FBI has chosen not to involve itself—an interesting stance in view of its zealousnessness when it comes to pursuing black militants, student radicals and other "subversives."

Meanwhile, the FCC has yet to act on a petition from the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law which would deny the license renewal of radio station WKRO. The lawyers' brief makes a convincing case against the station for unbelievably biased reporting, for failing to represent the entire community. It is noteworthy that the president of the station just happens to be on the board of directors of the UCCA.

Finally, we have yet to hear from our usually vocal politicians. Both the President who promised to "bring us together" and his chief deputy, who is never at a loss for words, remain strangely silent. At the same time, Congress has declined to initiate its own investigation and hold hearings, just as it does on the other war in Vietnam.

And so the crisis in Cairo—the war in the Middle West—continues. Doesn't anyone care about Cairo?

Dear Mrs. Bailey:

I am pleased to recommend Walter Anderson to you as an instructor in the area of Crime and Delinquency. I am not in a position to comment on Mr. Anderson's ability as an instructor, since I have never seen him in that role.

He has worked with us briefly, and I have observed him over a period of several years working in ghetto areas of this city. He has a remarkable ability to relate to teenagers and young people in these situations, and I believe that his grasp of the causes and nature of crime and delinquency is as solid as anyone I know. I would presume this ability and these experiences would make it possible for him to effectively share this information with university students.

Dear Dr. Jackson:

Please forgive me the delay in responding to your letter to Dr. Dunbar, who is no longer with the Council.

We will be more than willing to follow through on the suggestions outlined in your letter. We have also indicated this willingness to the Conference Director. We agree with you completely that the problems of the black aged is not only a serious one, but one that will be generally overlooked unless some of us work to see that it is not.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

As you, no doubt, know, the next White House Conference on Aging is scheduled to be held in November, 1971. This promises to be a very important Conference in that policy recommendations affecting the aged especially for the next decade will be considered in nine major need areas (i. e., housing, income, education, employment, health, retirement roles and activities).

Although some effort to obtain significant minority group representation has been made, the National Organizations Task Forces (one of the components of the overall structure from the community forums through the national level schemata) still need additional representation.

The National Caucus on Black Aged (a group organized in 1970, and chaired by Mr. Hobart Jackson, the long-time and very capable administrator of the Stephen Smith Geriatric Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and now in its 106th year of operation and among the first black homes for the aged) is particularly concerned about many of the conditions which made being both black and old a highly jeopardous position. Many of the official organizers of the White House Conference on Aging share these concerns, and one way, perhaps, to reduce the undesired conditions of being in "multiple jeopardy" by being black, old, and poor especially may be that of greater participation of blacks in helping to formulate the policy recommendations for the aged for the next decade.

There are at least three ways in which your organization can help enormously. The first, if you have not already done so, is to send two representatives from your organization to the National Organizations Task Forces (with the next meetings scheduled for March 9-10, in the greater Washington, D. C. area). You should contact Mr. Wilbur Ativell, Director, White House Conference on Aging, The White House, Washington, D. C.

A second way is that of helping to boast minority group attendance at your State House Conference on Aging (generally scheduled for May).

A third way is through informing your governor of persons whom you feel might well be named as delegates to the White House Conference on Aging, with such persons being ones greatly concerned about improving the conditions desirable for better and longer lives for aging and aged minority group members.

Thus, in closing, may I, as one very much interested in black aged especially (as evidenced, e. g., by my own research and other work on black aged) encourage you to assist all of those concerned about the aged by sending representatives to the National Task Forces, White House Conference on Aging, by seeking participating on the State level and by doing whatever you can to bring desired changes.

Sincerely,

Dear Joe:

Please forgive this inexcusable delay in responding to your letter. I took the material home to pursue because of its length, and inadvertently misplaced it until recently.

I have it here otherwise, but I cannot be optimistic about funding. Because of the economy, foundations have been hard hit in their investments and in most instances, foundation income is down substantially at a time when the demands from worthy groups is increasing very rapidly. Also, the tax reform law has frightened some marginal foundations away from "controversal" causes. This situation is very much reflected in our own budgeting, for instance our modest grant making operation is reduced by over 40% this year, and our total income for next year may be reduced by as much as 50%. I give you this information both to indicate the difficulty in fund raising, and as a detailed explanation of why we cannot consider a grant from SRC.

I sincerely regret this because your program indicates a remarkably amount of badly needed productivity for a very small sum, and I wish we could provide support to build on your very solid program.

Unless there is a Texas foundation that would be interested, I really think I would be doing you a disservice to suggest any of the national foundations with whom we deal. (This is not to say that will be the case sometime in the future.)

It occurs to me that with an operation of your nature, there should be federal funds to support part of it. I would think, for instance, the family service program and the Youth activities program would qualify for federal grants, and from looking over your structure, I see no reason why accepting federal funds would be prohibited.

Again, my most sincere apologies. Please keep me informed.

Dear Paul:

After reading over my letter and glancing at the enclosed material, I decided it would be useful to add two additional statements. One is that I am currently serving as the Chairman of the Association of American Law Schools Committee on Community Services. As a result of my work on this committee, the President of the AALS is now considering an effort by law schools throughout the nation that would involve the release of a law professor with a full time assistant and staff support by each school to do work similar to what I have been doing in Austin.

Another statement concerns my research currently being conducted for an article and a book on private human relations organizations similar to my article and book on official human relations commissions. This research indicates that CCHR is unique not only in its own city and state but also in the nation as a whole. For example, the General Counsel for the New York State Commission on Human Rights recently wrote that "unfortunately there is no comparable organization in New York." This is the typical response I have received from knowledgeable persons involved in the work of official human relations commissions throughout the country.

It may also be useful to outline CCHR's current bare-bones monthly expenses: (1) $300.00 for rent and utilities other than telephones for our Main Center containing 5000 square feet and for a large playground and parking lot containing 40,000 square feet; (2) $350.00 for the salary of our Educational Program Coordinator; (3) $60.00 for telephones; (4) $77.77 on our note to a bank for funds advanced to install air-conditioning units donated to us by a firm; (5) $65.00 for cleaning, maintenance, and repairs to our Main Center; (6) $100.00 for program expenditures to support our four principal programs; and (7) $50.00 for office supplies and postage.

Sincerely,

Joe

Dear Paul:

As the Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council, I believe you will have great interest both personally and for your organization in an important development in the field of human relations institutions dealing at the local level with problems of human relations, equal opportunities, poverty, civil rights, and community. I have reference to the remarkable achievements of the Citywide Committee for Human Rights, Inc. of Austin during the past five years, and especially during the past two years..

This private sector institution represents a new concept--one now thoroughly proven in operation--for organizing the human and material resources of a locality so as to bring them to bear with large-scale success in developing long-term solutions to the kinds of problems mentioned above.. It has also demonstrated considerable facility in interesting in-state and out-of-state organizations in becoming part of this effort. This concept was broadly formulated at the inception of the organization and has been gradually elaborated in considerable detail only through experience resulting in both adjustment and enlargement of the concept.. CCHR is now not only firmly established in Austin as a new kind of civic organization. It is also proving attractive to many knowledgeable people in the governmental and private sectors in that while various governmental and private efforts of a similar type continue to founder, or fall short of becoming effective, or simply fail to adapt to remain viable, CCHR continues to grow both rapidly and in overall effectiveness..

The leadership of CCHR has now organized a more broadly conceived institution, presently called the Statewide Committee for Human Rights of Texas. In 1971 it will launch a major effort, one long in the planning stage and carefully organized, to promote establishment of CCHR's in other Texas cities. Eventually, this same leadership will be addressing the Southwest Region and the National Community for the same purpose.

Because we believe the institutional concept described below and in the attached materials can work anywhere, it obviously has relevance to the area served by the Southern Regional Council.. There is no other organization in that region better qualified to understand the concept or to promote its adoption, if believed to be a useful one. One purpose of my letter is to invite your careful study of the CCHR concept. Another is to invite you to consider, as you proposed in an SRC letter of May 1967 to do, funding a part of our operation both at the Austin and the Texas state levels. When your earlier offer was made, CCHR was barely a year old and hardly a well-articulated or proven institutional concept. Five years of hard work by a large number of talented persons drawn from various professions and occupations have now produced a result and institution far more worthy of your attention and support.

Before turning to the main points of my letter, I feel one reference to SIRC will be helpful. It became increasingly evident to me as the work of the Ad Hoc Committee to Organize an SIRC proceeded forward in late 1968 and 1969 that the emerging leadership of that group and of the new organization had quite different ideas about the institutional concept essential for dealing adequately with problems of human relations, equal opportunities, poverty, civil rights, and community in the Southwest from those entertained by the leadership in CCHR. Moreover, the SIRC leadership seemed quite unwilling to permit the two concepts to operate within the same organization, which would have been quite possible. For these reasons, and for others, I elected to spend the bulk of my time after October 1968 continuing to work with the leadership in CCHR with a view to perfecting the institutional concept involved in it and preparing to take that concept through a new institution to the state, the region, and, eventually, the nation. I shall always be grateful that Ed Stanfield and his leadership group including Jorge Lara-Braud, Vine Deloria, Mildred Dickeman, and others for making their position so completely clear before and at the time of the organization of SIRC. It helped Bill Powers, another outstanding member of SIRC, and myself quickly decide to turn our energies and talents with those of other similar persons into an organization committed to solving the problems involved in building a truly viable institutional concept for dealing successfully with the above problems at the urban and rural local levels. It is interesting to me that SIRC has finally touched base with reality with Stanfield's confession of failure in his "The State of the Southwest Intergroup Relations Council." Stanfield's new prescriptions for the ills of SIRC, however, have not changed the basic assumptions underlying his whole approach to human relations problems. He and his leadership group still seek some specialized "constitutency" instead of aiming at the whole potential community. They are still thinking in terms of criteria of "power" rather than "authority". In my opinion, there is very little future for SIRC under its present leadership. That leadership has shown itself incapable of developing internal strength and balance. It has also failed to generate region-wide the very kind of cross-section support "in due time" which CCHR has so regularly and successfully been generating in Austin and which its larger counterpart will undoubtedly, after further experimentation, begin to generate in the larger area of the state and region. I can only regret that Stanfield and his leadership group have wasted the enormous opportunity which we recognized he had been given in 1968.

Let me briefly turn to a description of CCHR of Austin and what it is doing. CCHR is a Texas nonprofit corporation created, managed, and operated by residents of Austin. Its goals are to promote better human relations, greater equality of opportunity for all citizens and residents, and a stronger degree of community in Austin and the surrounding area. To accomplish these goals CCHR has designed a series of programs to assist the minority groups and the indigent and near-indigent of Austin and the surrounding area to help themselves for the long haul into all phases of Austin's community life through better education, better jobs, and better solutions to the many problems facing minority groups and the poor of the area. The programs are also designed to enable people of good will and genuine commitment from all groups to work together to organize and put to work the vast human and material resources of Austin to promote its three goals relating to human relations, equality of opportunities, and community.

The free services rendered by CCHR to minority groups and the poor in all of its programs are made possible only by the work of talented volunteers from all ethnic groups and the contributions of money and property primarily by Austin citizens and organizations. Opening its Main Center in July 1966 with but a handful of persons and no organizational support either from the public or private sector, CCHR had by this fall grown into an organization consisting of over 400 talented volunteers drawn from over 100 civic, business, religious, education, and other organizations. They were managing and conducting extensive Educational, Job Counseling and Placement, Family Service, and Youth Activities Programs attended by over 750 persons per month, mainly on a weekly basis.

In our Educational Program we work with over 500 persons, adults and children, each week. Our tutors and teachers consist of a very large percentage of tutors drawn from the Mexican-American and Negro ethnic groups. They are assisting their students, who are drawn from the Anglo as well as from the two principal minority groups, to obtain the High School Diploma Equivalency, pass Civil Service Examinations, learn Basic English (starting from Spanish, where appropriate), acquire Secretarial Skills, learn Bookkeeping, master Mechanical Drawing, pass the Driver's Handbook Examination, prepare for Citizenship, and many other things. Children learn how to pass their course examinations in the public schools who would otherwise become certain drop-outs. We have placed five people in the University of Texas including Mr. Moffatt Waters who came to us with only a fifth grade education and Mrs. Viola Gomez who came with only an eighth grade education. All of them are making A's and B's at the University. Over 150 persons have obtained the High School Diploma Equivalency, mainly in the last three years. Another 300 adults and children have successfully attained concrete educational goals that they manifested to us. This program has grown as more and more people have turned to us with their educational problems and we have helped them to be successful in resolving them.

Our Educational Program is aimed, so far as adults are concerned, for ensuring that the students can get prepared for the better jobs in the Austin area. About 5 out of 10 Negroes and 8 out of 10 Mexican-Americans do not have the High School Diploma. This shuts them out of the better jobs for which most employers require this diploma as the minimum requirement. Having brought our students to this point, it was necessary to break open the various barriers still existing with respect to their getting the better jobs. We also faced this problem with respect to others who had obtained their education through other more conventional means. Prior to September 1968 it had been very difficult, if not impossible, to recruit talented volunteers from the business sector to perform volunteer services, particularly in the management of our programs. We recruited our first two businessmen in that month, however. One was a ranking executive of the IBM Corporation plant in Austin, Mr. Bill W. Powers, who served as its Manager of Employment. Both of these young businessmen were skilled in personnel department matters. I gave them a free hand under general guidelines. They arranged for visits by employers to our Main Center to get them acquainted with our Educational Program. The employers who visited liked two aspects about our programs: (1) that they were organized, managed, and operated by volunteers with local resources; and (2) that the Job Counseling and Placement Program--like other CCHR programs--was in charge of a person experienced in dealing with personnel problems and the employment process. These young men constructed various Job Forms essential for operating this program and began processing applicants for jobs and routing them to employers who had agreed to take referrals of applicants. The applicants were given special counseling on filling out application forms and on interviewing so as to enable them to put their best foot forward. The first jobs began to be given to the people in our program by December 1968 and they were the better jobs.

We next developed what we have come to call the "Employer Interview Night" as a device for involving more employers more readily and of solving the problem of getting our applicants more rapidly and regularly in contact with employers. This interview night idea involved bringing employers who then needed to employ persons to the CCHR Center to interview persons in our Educational and other programs and others who desired employment. We aimed at the major employer, either governmental or private. We have now held eleven of these interview nights and now hold them about every three months. Starting with only two or three employers we now have permanent, continuing arrangements with twenty-one major employers. At our last event on November 18 we had fifteen of these employers present to interview nearly 400 job applicants. Our record of placement has been about 25% of those attending these sessions, a record which is very remarkable. Our job applicants, as are our people generally in the programs, are drawn primarily from the Negro and Mexican-American ethnic groups of our area, although about ten per cent in attendance are Anglos. Through this part of our Job Counseling and Placement Program they are assisted to obtain much better jobs than have previously been practicably available to them. Since January 1969 we estimate that we have placed over 450 persons in these better jobs through this program.

The success of the above two programs has had two kinds of effects. One of these is that CCHR has come to be recognized by minority groups and the poor of the Austin area as their organization, one that gets the job done and one that has lots of friendly, good people in it. They take intense pride in participating in the program and many move over to the volunteer side to provide the kinds of services they once received. A new kind of leadership is emerging in the minority group areas and among the poor as a result of this. By and large these people credit CCHR with making Austin a better place to live and helping the city move through some difficult times in human relations. Another kind of effect of the above two programs is that CCHR has been able to move many Anglos into the ghetto areas, to familiarize them with the problems of these areas, to give them meaningful functions to perform alongside persons belonging to minority groups that are effectively directed to solve some of these basic problems. The result has been that CCHR has come into a "market" where there are no organizations effectively at work with the basic problems and has been able to demonstrate that it can work effectively to solve them. More and more, various organizations in all ethnic group areas have begun to associate themselves with CCHR or to investigate ways in which they can cooperate with it.

The success of the above two programs is also evidenced in the amount of material and personal support given to CCHR. In July 1966 about a dozen persons were associated with CCHR. It had no organizational support. This fall, as previously indicated, CCHR had well over 400 volunteers. They were very gifted persons drawn from all ranks of life and all age groups. About 100 organizations were the source of these people and about 30 of these organizations were associated with CCHR as organizations officially committed to our programs. You can add to these the twenty-one corporate employers who participate in our programs. We ran our operation on $713. in the first year, about $850. the second and third years, $2600. the fourth year, and about $6000. in the fifth year. At the present time our monthly expenses are slightly in excess of $1000. per month. Our current fund drive is clearly succeeding in its goal to raise $12,000. for our next year of operation.

Beyond the enormous increase in financial support just mentioned and the still more remarkable support by individual volunteers and organizations has been the support of individuals and organizations by way of special forms of contributions. The IBM Corporation has renewed its contract of loan for a second year by which it loaned CCHR twelve IBM Selectric typewriters for use in its Secretarial Studies Program in which it is training 100 persons per week in secretarial skills. The IBM Corporation in October of this year released Mr. Bill W. Powers, mentioned above, to CCHR on special assignment at full pay to assist CCHR in developing its Job Program in several directions, one of which involved putting it on a daily basis and another recruiting still more employers into it. This Corporation has been asked to extend Mr. Powers' special assignment and it is expected that this will occur. The Holy Cross Fathers in Louisiana--your own area--has just released a highly skilled, dynamic young priest, who is a volunteer in our program, to serve with full pay and support as the Centers Coordinator in CCHR. We are now processing some proposals for other persons to associate themselves with CCHR on a full-time basis on various arrangements with their employers. Many book companies have contributed books to CCHR and so have bookstores. One recent sale of donated books that could not be used in the program netted $700. We will hold a similar sale in January. Women's clubs are now holding various kinds of functions for the benefit of CCHR. The Junior Chamber of Commerce, after five years of our effort to get the whole Chamber involved, appears on the verge of an official commitment to involve its members in our programs. We regularly are the recipient of office equipment, office supplies, books, educational supplies, recreational equipment for our Boys Sports Program, clothing, food, services as a contribution to our program. These gifts will amount this fiscal year to perhaps $10,000. in addition to the cash contributions we expect of $12,000.

We honestly see no end in the growth of CCHR in Austin. We feel we have just begun. Averaging about one talk per week before major organizations in Austin about the work of CCHR we expect to double both our volunteers and those receiving our services by the end of 1971. Indeed, we are now preparing to open our second large center in Austin on its south side where there is a similar ethnic population to the one we currently serve on the east side. This center will open in January.

Let me turn still more briefly to the Family Service Program and the Youth Activities Program. The first largely consists of legal assistance, legal referral, social case work, medical assistance, and counseling of various types. The legal work is done principally by six volunteer lawyers. The social case work is done by one volunteer social case worker and a number of nonprofessionals drawn from the University of Texas area. The medical assistance will be formalized in January with the opening of a free medical clinic operated by a panel of eight volunteer physicians, an equal number of nurses, one pharmacist, and one social case worker. This clinic will be a large step forward for us in the medical area. One of the techniques for doing counseling is to hold sessions of what we call the Fellowship Guild. In January next we will begin three sessions on the filling out of income tax forms. This service was requested by young Negroes and Mexican-Americans who turned to CCHR for this kind of assistance. They now have jobs that make this a new kind of pressing problem for them. They have suggested later sessions on buying insurance and homes.

We do some very significant work relative to the total community in the Family Service Program. CCHR was instrumental last summer in effectuating the integration of facilities of three major apartment buildings in the University of Texas area serving University students. A Negro graduate student came to CCHR with his complaint that he had been discriminated against (his coming to CCHR rather than to the Austin Human Relations Commission or to an ethnic group is an important fact in itself) and in its quiet, careful way CCHR arranged for effective legal representation, through a cooperating CCHR volunteer lawyer, not only for the student who received substantial damages for the discrimination practiced against him but also for the countless other University students in the future who will benefit by the integration of three apartment buildings agreed to in a binding legal settlement by the corporate owner of these buildings. Earlier there was the successful CCHR effort to get an official city human relations commission in 1966-1967 although its requests for an extensive civil rights ordinance were not heeded. Another effort, which was successful, produced changes in 1968 in police procedures involving the use of deadly force so as to make them conform to state and federal law. Still another effort, also successful, was the representation of the Tenant's Association of the Booker T. Washington Housing Project in its effort to get substantial modifications of procedures and facilities so as to make them healthier and safer. A $300,000. grant was eventually made by the federal government for this purpose.

In our Youth Activities Program we currently have about 100 youngsters enrolled. They are members of a Boy Scout Troop, a Creative Drama Class, an Arts and Crafts Class, and a Boys' Sports Program. We aim to provide all kinds of activites to provide the widest kind of experiences for these children, largely drawn from the two principal minority groups of the area. On the drawing boards are plans for a Girl Scout Troop, a Brownie Troop, and Explorer Troop, and similar children's organizations. We have recruited only the very highest quality of leadership for these programs and the youngsters and their parents have really responded to this leadership. Often, these youngsters are also enrolled in our Educational Program.

So far I have described the easily describable features of our program. But there are other more intangible features which may be more important. Certainly, the formula for managing such a large volunteer enterprise is a key feature. It would not be easy to describe and I will not attempt to do so here. I simply point out the accomplishment and the fact that it really does work and that it is not a simple thing. We have gradually carved it out under the necessity for doing just that. Ours is not an organization which is largely managed and operated by a staff of professionals and others employed to do this. We operated for four years without an employee and we now have only one, an Educational Program Coordinator. This is not to say that we do not need employees. It is to say that volunteers can perform organizing, managing, and operating functions in a human relations organization successfully. We are more nearly like a civic organization in a city than we are like a formalized human relations organization like SRC, SIRC, official human relations commissions, private community relations groups, and similar organizations.

I have enclosed certain materials which will be useful for you in probing still further into the CCHR concept: our 1970 Annual Report, a recent feature article which appeared in local newspapers without our solicitation of it, some of the forms used in our various programs, a typical press release concerning our programs, and some other matters. I have also enclosed our 1970-1971 "budget" which represents what we think we can do in this period effectively if we are able to raise the money to do it with.

We are presently making a series of proposals to various private and official organizations. One is to a corporation of major national rank seeking funding for the position of a staff assistant to our volunteer Director of Job Counseling and Placement. Another is to a national religious group seeking funding to make possible the setting up of a Production Unit. In this unit we would train persons in one or more of the skills required by major manufacturers in the area for pay. The training would be done in the performance of steps in the assembly line of these manufacturers who would contract with CCHR for the production of certain steps of this sort. We would use the money received to pay the persons in training. We are exploring the possibility of Model Cities funding although we are very concerned to preserve the integrity of our operation and its flexibility.

The proposals I would like to make to you and your organization in behalf of CCHR relate both to CCHR and to the newly formed Statewide Committee for Human Rights of Texas. We would be grateful if you could consider either or both favorably or some portion of these. While CCHR has grown rather phenomenally, it still has growing pains. One crucial aspect of these is its need for an administrative secretary. Our Educational Program Coordinator, an excellent office manager, is doing some of this, but she really is needed to devote full time to the assignment of about 900 persons weekly in our Educational Program, a figure which will be at about 2000 weekly by the end of 1971. The administrative secretary would answer phones, would direct volunteers in our secretarial staff and coordinate their work, would keep our files on all programs up to date, would prepare highly specialized correspondence--e.g., that involved in conduct of the annual fund drive, in contacting local organizations and their executives, and in facilitating the progress of students, job applicants, individuals and families in the Family Service Program, and similar persons, and perform many similar functions such as purchasing office materials, books, and other items needed in the conduct of our programs. Naturally, also she would be selected so as to be an excellent person in meeting people coming to our Center for the first time or with special matters of interest to us. We need such a person right now. Interestly enough, it was this sort of person that your letter in May 1967 suggested that we needed. At that time you suggested through Stanfield that you might be able to fund such a position for one year at the rate of $2400. Our budget has set the salary for this position at $3600. for 3/4 time. This budget was made out last summer and it is clear that we need a full-time person presently and in the future. I would greatly appreciate your considering funding this position for one year either at the full rate of $4800. or some portion of that amount.. We will be delighted to be included in the Southern Regional Council aegis as a funded agency similar to the agencies you have funded in the SRC geographical area in the past. As I recall, Texas is still in that area.

Finally, Mr. Powers, Mr. R. D. White, Mrs. Elaine Lebowitz, Rev. Robert J. Adix, and myself--all directors of CCHR with from two to five years of service--have formed a Statewide Committee for Human Rights of Texas to carry on the work of CCHR at the state level. Our purpose is to interest groups in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, and eventually some twenty-one major Texas cities in forming a CCHR for their own areas. Already, visitors from other Texas cities are beginning to visit our Center and to inquire about our work. Recently, the NAACP State Convention awarded me the honor of recognition as the outstanding Texan in civil rights in 1970. This honor really came in recognition of the achievements of CCHR during the past five years, something produced by the work of many persons. We feel that the time is ripe to arrange for visits of carefully selected delegations from other Texas cities to our Center during 1971 with a view to showing them our programs in actual operation and to conducting short seminars in the techniques of organizing, managing, and operating a CCHR in other city areas. In turn, we would want to make visits to these other cities to carry on the process of persuading groups in these cities to undertake to organize a CCHR of their own and of assisting them to make a success of their efforts. For this purpose, we are hopeful of raising $5,000.

for use by our Statewide Committee for Human Rights to carry out an exploratory, pilot grogram in 1971 of the kind just described. We would be grateful if your organization would consider a contribution to the Statewide Committee for this purpose. I would expect to have considerable time during the summer of 1971 to devote to this purpose and will seek to find elsewhere the funds to support myself during this period.. Mr. Powers also hopes to persuade IBM to permit him some time off this summer to coincide with my time.

This has been a long letter. I hope that it carries through to you something of the extraordinary character of CCHR and the people involved in it. It is something new, fresh, and important for all of us to consider as we continue to think about how to tackle our problems of human relations, unequal opportunities, poverty, lack of community, and impairments of civil rights. Whatever your organization may be able to do, I am anxious that you take a long, hard look at what we are doing and see if we are right in our judgment that it has relevance to all other areas in our country.

It has been a privilege to work with you in the past. I am most happy to have this occasion for renewing our relationship. We all hope in CCHR that there may be some basis for SRC cooperating with both our local organization and with the new statewide group.

With warmest personal regards,

Sincerely,

Dr. Joseph P. Witherspoon

Dear Appalachia Volunteers,

In the March 1971 edition of Reader's Digest, I noticed the picture of the malnutritioned child, and read the small article under the picture. Who would not be interested in helping a hungry person - especially a child? Before I make a contribution, I want more facts than are stated in your article.

In our national budget, a certain amount of money is set aside for welfare. I have seen people, white as well as black, who receive welfare that on the surface look well fed and capable of holding a job. In my opinion, they do not need to be receiving welfare, but do. How can a person receive welfare who possibly does not need it, and still another group (ten million Americans) be starving to death? What exactly is the problem or situation that exempts the starving Americans from receiving welfare?

Another question I would like an answer to is the exact location (city or town) in some of these states are these people located? I want to see for myself the people you are speaking of in this particular article. Where does the child in this picture live?

Sincerely,

Nancy Cosper

Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I enjoyed talking with you in our telephone conversation of March 11. As I mentioned at that time Community Leadership Services is an organization which is funded by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation and operates out of Winston-Salem, N. C. Basically, CLS has the responsibility of designing learning experiences about racism for community leaders across the state of North Carolina.

CLS has been involved in this work since August of 1970. At that time, we received a small grant from the Diocese of North Carolina which enabled us to do seminars in four North Carolina cities for Episcopal laymen. The Z. Smith Reynolds grant will enable us to carry on this work for two years.

I am very interested in meeting persons on the Southern Regional Council staff who could be helpful in expanding the resources of Community Leadership Services. For that reason, I particularly appreciate your invitation to visit the Council's office.

I have included a brochure and some other information which might help explain better what Community Leadership Services is supposed to be doing.

I plan to be in Atlanta on Friday, April 2nd. I will certainly appreciate any time which your staff could spend with me on that date. I shall look forward to hearing from you regarding the time which would be most convenient for my coming to the Council's office.

Sincerely yours,

Plan to Aid Future Leaders In Understanding of Racism

By Larry Dendy
Staff Reporter

Young adult North Carolinians who appear destined for positions of leadership in the state will soon have a chance to prepare themselves to deal with what will likely be one of their biggest headaches—racial problems.

Two young Winston-Salem men—John E. Shields and the Rev. Richard Ottaway—have started Community Leadership Services, a project designed to help emerging leaders understand racism by confronting them with Negroes who know racism first-hand.

The arena will be a series of dialogue sessions between Negroes and young leaders. The Negroes—businessmen, government workers, social activists, militants—will describe various forms of racial discrimination and relate personal experiences.

JOHN E. SHIELDS
. . . real estate man . . .

RICHARD N. OTTAWAY
. . . Episcopal minister . . .

Postions of Influence

The leaders—men and women probably under 35 years old whose qualities, traits and accomplishments indicate they will achieve positions of influence—can challenge, dispute, argue with or accept the Negroes' viewpoints.

Out of it, Shields and Ottaway hope, will come an awareness on the leaders' part of the many forms of racism in American society, its ramifications and the ways they can cope with it.

Using a grant from the Department of Urban and Racial Affairs of the Episcopal Diocese of North Carolina, Shields and Ottaway have scheduled projects in Raleigh, Durham, Charlotte and Greensboro. The Raleigh project begins Wednesday.

The men are preparing proposals to local foundations for long-term financing of the service, which will be offered in cities across the state.

Appraiser, Clergyman

Shields is president of Winston-Salem Citizens for Fair Housing. a past president of the local Jaycees and this year's Winston-Salem Young Man of the Year. A real estate appraiser by profession. he recently left the firm of Moore-Shields Appraisal Co.. Inc., to work on the leadership project and do free-lance appraising.

Ottaway, an Episcopal clergyman, is director of the Church and Industry Institute at Wake Forest University. He is also director of a new non-profit corporation called Human Enterprises, Inc., that was started to plan and operate projects to develop human potential and enhance the quality of life. Community Leadership Services is one of these projects.

Shields and Ottaway modeled the service on a seminar they organized here in 1968. A number of young men like themselves had candid, discussions on racism with local Negroes, and the impact was profound, they said.

Their basic assumption is that America is rapidly shifting from a racially segregated to an integrated society, that problems will inevitably arise and that they can best be handled by leaders who understand them.

Through their church and civic work, both men have built up contacts around the state. They will use these contacts to draw up a slate of 20 or so promising leaders in various cities.

Ottaway said the leaders will be neither racial liberals nor bigots but people with open minds who can assimilate information and react reasonably to diverse opinions.

Dialogue, Confrontation

Their leadership potential may lie in politics, business, religion, civic affairs or other fields, he said. They will all have to deal with racial problems, and the better prepared and equipped they are now, the more ably they can act in the future, he said.

Once a week for six or seven weeks, these leaders will meet privately for what Ottaway describes as a "mix between dialogue and confrontation." In a segregated society, he said, "There is no way for people of one race to know how people of another race feel. So we are creating a hypothetical arena."

Negroes will describe racism as it exists in education, business, religion and social life. Representatives of state agencies and other experts will discuss the problem generally in the first few weeks. Later, knowledgeable Negroes from the leaders' own city will discuss specific problems of discrimination and mistreatment in that city.

The idea is not to sway or sell the leaders on anything, Ottaway said. Rather, it is to help them discover the extent and scope of the racial problem and its implications for society, he said.

These leaders are committed to working within "the system," he added. "They will come out of this saying, 'Now we see the urgency; now we understand; now we have a feeling for what is going on. Here's what will make the system work better.' "

Shields and Ottaway hope the leaders will develop and maintain relationships with the Negroes so that when they rise into high-level positions, they will have established networks of communication and information.

The project, which has received enthusiastic endorsement from Gov. Robert Scott, will be free as long as it is financed by grant money. Shields, who will be project director, said that later — after techniques and procedures are refined — the service may be offered commercially if there appears to be a demand.

COMMUNITY LEADERSHIP SERVICES

I. PURPOSE

The purpose of Community Leadership Services is to design and conduct learning experiences for emerging community leaders to understand the racial implications of their work and civic activities. These experiences vary according to the community in which we are working from several evenings to concentrated weekends. Each design is especially aimed at the needs of the leadership of the community being serviced.

II. HISTORY

John E. Shields came to Human Enterprises Institute on August 1, 1970 to further develop an idea which he had used as President of the Winston-Salem Jaycees to achieve the same purpose. Prior to that he was a partner in Moore-Shields Real Estate Appraisal Company. As one of the Charter members and President of the Winston-Salem Citizens for Fair Housing, Mr. Shields has imminent qualifications to understand the social dynamics of a modern community.

During the last half of 1970 Community Leadership Services conducted seminars in Winston-Salem, Raleigh, Durham, Greensboro, and Charlotte involving over 100 young leaders.

III. FUNDING

Initially funded by the Episcopal Diocese of North Carolina Department of Urban and Racial Affairs, and the Winston-Salem Urban Coalition, Community Leadership Services is now principally funded by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation. Fees are also charged by the Human Enterprises Institute.

IV. HUMAN ENTERPRISES INSTITUTE

Community Leadership Services is a program of Human Enterprises Institute. The purpose of Human Enterprises Institute is to design and operate educational enterprises which through improved communications enhance the human potential in our religious, social, and economic systems.

Other projects are the Church and Industry Institutes in Winston-Salem and several other principal cities and Justice Communications.

V. PROGRAM

Community Leadership Services will consult with interested civic, social, religious or governmental groups in order to design meaningful learning experiences about racism.

After an initial analysis of community problems and group needs, a design will be implemented which will attempt to help those persons participating become effectively involved in creative change in their own community.

It is more than good to hear from you, and under almost any circumstances I would accept any invitation you extended. Regrettably, I do have a commitment in Richmond on May 15, which would severely limit my participation at the meeting.

As an alternate, may I suggest another member of our staff, Dr. Emory Via who is director of the SRC Resources Development Center. Emory is a labor and manpower specialist and, incidentally, was a professor at the University of Wisconsin School for Workers for about eight years until we persuaded him to return home. Aside from his professional competence, he is very good in this kind of setting and in dealing with people like Jaycees.

If you are interested in him you might write him direct; he is available on these dates.

Again, it was good to hear from you. Best regards.

Dear ~~Mr. Anthony:~~ Paul -

The Educational Programs Division of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, in cooperation with the Johnson Foundation, is holding a two day workshop on affirmative action for National Jaycees from 50 metropolitan centers.

We would like to invite you to serve as one of the resource persons at the workshop which will be held at the Johnson Foundation Conference Center, "Wingspread," Racine, Wisconsin. The workshop will begin with an evening meal on Thursday, May 13, and conclude with a luncheon on Saturday, May 15.

We are hopeful that it will be possible for you to be with us during the entire program. We believe this conference will be the beginning of a major new thrust of the U. S. Jaycee Operation Opportunity program into the field of employment discrimination. These young men could potentially mobilize the resources of their 50 cities in active support of equal employment opportunity, as well as have a major impact on the program emphasis of the U. S. Jaycees in years to come.

We hope you will be able to accept our invitation. We know that your participation in the seminar would greatly enhance its effectiveness and help ensure its success.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Paul:

Now really! How can you go along without a new picture as long as you obviously have? Four years, you say. It has to be longer than that. I must get Harold to recommend his photographer.

I am happy to have this one ONLY as long as it takes you to get a current pic. How can I impress my friends with your accomplishments, when they look at the face of a callow youth? However, in the meantime, I do thank you.

I have put off writing, wondering how hard to spank. I hope the chastisement is sufficient to get a reticent executive director together with a good candid photographer.

The lousy publicity that attended my first six weeks on the job has now quieted. And the University is giving me some added chores, one of which is to help cover the Washington scene. I expect to spend some time with the education associations, which are located, fortuitously, near Potomac. It will be good to be able to check up on them all -- I understand things went to pot there this winter, what with broken right arms, etc.

Now, re-read paragraph 1 and do it!

Most sincerely,

Jack Joyce

Dear Paul:

I stopped by to see you after the meeting but you had gone. Wanted to thank you for the use of the meeting room.

We have been having a number of meetings around the nation addressing the future of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial. When I'm next in Atlanta (probably May) I'd like to talk to you privately about the matter. We have decided to concentrate the greater part of our work on issues of children's rights. Now the question is one of focus on priorities within that relatively broad area. Suggestions?

Attached is an invitation to the Journalism Awards Program on April 28th. If you can make it, please come. If not, perhaps Pat Watters could represent the Council. Please let us know as soon as you can.

Hope to see you soon.

Dear Dr. Clasen:

At the request of Mr. Horace Barker, this is a letter in behalf of the admission of him to the University of Georgia's program in public administration.

Mr. Barker first worked with us in 1969, on an intern research capacity for six months. In the summer of 1969 we had approximately thirty undergraduate and graduate students with us. Mr. Barker was ranked among the best of them, and on the basis of that, we asked him to remain for the year. He continues to do superior research work for us, largely in the fields of housing and education, and I have had him make several field investigating trips for me. His work in this capacity has also been superior.

I am confident Mr. Barker is the type of student you can accept with the assurance his performance will be excellent.

If you wish more detailed information, please let me know.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

When I visited Southern Regional Council on Friday, March 12, 1971, you asked me to write to you later concerning my impressions--specifically whether or not I am inclined to become a member of your staff. You wanted word two weeks afterward, presumably upon your return from a vacation. I took a month, partly because I wanted to think very carefully about my own professional goals and partly because I had to reassess my situation here at Duke University.

Undoubtedly, at this point, you have conferred with your official board and staff concerning the research directorship. Moreover, you have probably screened other prospects for the job. This is all the better, for what I have to say now will be weighed against decisions already made and impressions previously formed both of me and, possibly, others.

I am deeply interested in research, particularly the kind which helps to determine programs of social action and change. I am interested in greater professional opportunity and advancement. Southern Regional Council definitely stresses the former(research), while it seems to provide the latter(professional opportunity). I can say little else, except that I found you and your staff surprisingly frank, but congenial. I am favorably impressed; and I can envision the possibility of working someday for an organization such as SRC.

Thank you again for the invitation to visit. Whatever happens, I think we have at least initiated a lasting professional acquaintance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Anthony,

This is an introduction to a funding request for a domestic workers' co-op. It is only an introduction since community organization is still in the beginning stages.

VISTAs in Auburn, Alabama have become aware of the poor working conditions of domestic workers here. Many of these workers have complained of low pay, long hours, lack of good employer-employee relationships, and absence of other benefits such as Social Security. The VISTAs are in the process of surveying employers and employees. As a result of the survey, we have confirmed most of the complaints. The average Auburn worker makes $.82/ hour, and does not receive other benefits.

All of the VISTAs involved, excluding myself, are permanent residents of this community, and most of them were former domestic workers. It was not difficult for them to interest other community people. There is a meeting scheduled for April 22, at which time we hope to have as a speaker a representative from the National Committee on Household Employment. If this is not possible, NCHE will send enough workbooks for all those present. It was the NCHE that suggested I write to you for funds.

Although I can not state definite plans,(these will be decided by the workers themselves), I can outline the plan suggested by NCHE for beginning a co-op. I should add that if we have overestimated the interest of the community, there may be no further action taken after the meeting.

Hopefully, a committee will write guidelines expected of employers and employees. Then a final proposal will be written requesting funds for training and for the salary of the Job Co-ordinator for the first year. The reasoning behind training is that if the employee has more to offer, the employer will be more likely to pay a higher salary. The Auburn University Home Economics department is an excellent possible resource for training in child care, table setting, food serving, and similar subjects.

The work of the Job-Coordinator would include finding an initial 30 or so women for training, and helping to place them in new jobs or to negotiate with their present employer for higher wages. He or she would also help inform employers and employees about Social Security, paid sick leave, and other benefits.

Looking ahead to future years: With increased membership, the Co-op could become self-sufficient. If each of 60 to 100 women contributed a portion of their initial wages in exchange for being well placed in a job, and if prospective employers paid a fee for procurement of a worker, the salary of the Job Co-ordinator could be financed.

I hesitate to name a needed sum. Having seen promising programs fail, I want to be sure that there is a bonafied community committment before asking for funds. What I am requesting is that you be aware of this project, and be ready to offer further suggestions. We will be writing again in the near future.

Sincerely,

Gwen Bole

BLACK LEGISLATIVE MEMBERS ORGANIZE

For the first time since Georgia's black legislative membership has numbered more than one, the term "black caucus" is being used to designate black members of the Georgia Assembly. Whether the term is being used to designate an identifiable group of legislators or whether the term is being used to designate a group of legislators who together are wielding and dealing in the Assembly in such a manner as to effectuate the interests of members of the Assembly and their constituents remains to be determined. In any event, certain factors do exist which lend support to the legitimate use of the term "black caucus."

One such factor is the meetings which are being held by the black legislators. Black members of the House of Representatives are holding regular meetings where interests of black people are candidly discussed and certain problems are identified and analyzed. During the legislative sessions, the meetings were held at the State Capitol in a conference room reserved by and for the black legislators. Most of the meetings are open to news reporters and other legislators who might have some special interest in matters before the caucus. It has also held meetings with the governor, legislative leaders, and key people in state government.

Another factor is the presence of black legislative assistants. The black members of the Assembly for the first time have staff members. The staff, composed of a secretary and five legislative interns whose only duties are those assigned by black legislators, are providing typing, filing, research, and other assistance which are necessities for any caucus. The black legislative staff was provided by the Georgia Service Center and the Voter Education Project, Inc.

Probably the most important reason for the application of the term "black caucus" can be found in a "budding interdependency" among the black legislators. There appears to be more consultation and more sharing of responsibility where such responsibility can be shared. In other words, more and more, there is an apparent realization

CONTROVERSIAL MEASURES MET LITTLE OPPOSITION

Several measures which have aroused great concern in the black communities moved through the Georgia Legislature with little or no opposition. House Bill 220 amended the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority Act of 1964 so as to authorize certain local governments to levy a retail sales and use tax the proceeds of which are to be used for the Metro Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority. House Bill 84 provided for the creation of the Metropolitan Area Planning Development Commission which is to coordinate planning development of areas with a population of 1,000,000 or more.

House Bill 846 provided for the aldermanic candidate for post 1 shall be elected by voters of the candidate's ward and the candidate for post 2 shall be elected by a majority vote of the voters from entire city of Atlanta.

It is the opinion of some black people that House Bill 84 is an attempt to create a mechanism that will allow people who do not reside within a city (specifically Atlanta) to maintain control of that city's government through a planning commission. It is also the opinion of many black people who have examined the bill that the bill would lessen the possibility for black people to gain political control of the city because most of such power would eventually lie in the planning commission, a commission which blacks would never control.

The black legislators hold a different position. It is the opinion of most of them that many of the functions in the planning commission are already being carried out. These functions are being carried out by several organizations without black involvement. Although the composition of the commission will allow whites and suburbanites to control the commission it also will allow for black involvement—something the present system does not have. Moreover, House Bill 84 was the most acceptable of the planning organization bills (all of the black legislators voted for the bill).

The opposition of the black community to House Bill 220 which allows for a 1% sales tax, the

MAJOR COMMITTEES LACK BLACK REPRESENTATION

Black people of the State of Georgia are without black representation on about 53 per cent of the Standing Committees of the 1971 Georgia General Assembly. According to a survey conducted by the Georgia Service Center for Elected Officials, the Georgia Senate lacks black representation on 18 of its 24 Standing Committees. The Georgia House is without black representation on 8 of its 25 Standing Committees. Included in the Senate Committees which are without black representation are the Elementary and Secondary Education Committee, the Health and Welfare Committee and the Industry, and Labor Committee. House Committees which lack black representation are the Rules Committee and the Ways and Means Committee. These are probably the most important committees of the Assembly.

The importance of committee assignment is seen in the fact that most measures coming before the Assembly are referred to a committee for its consideration before that measure is acted upon by the Assembly. The committee has the power to dispose of the measure in a number of ways. It may report the measures back to the Assembly favorably, i.e., with the committee's approval, with or without amendments; it may report the measure back unfavorably, i.e., with the committee's disapproval; or it may not report the bill at all. The action of the Committee will more often than not determine the outcome of the measure before the general body.

Several reasons can be given for the lack of black representation on a majority of the Standing Committees. One obvious reason is the size of the Assembly. Georgia has the fourth largest legislative body in the country (251 members, including 13 black members which is the second largest black delegation). Because of its size, the Assembly has a large number of Standing Committees (27 in the House and 22 in the Senate). Although a minimum of two House appointments and six Senate appointments would allow for black representation on all Standing Committees, it is questionable whether such a minimum would allow for effective black representation.

Of course the size of the black delegation does not explain the total absence of black representation on the important committees and the lack of black chairmanships. An explanation of this lies in the way in which membership is obtained on committees.

Membership is by appointment. In the House of Representatives the speaker also appoints the chairman, vice-chairman, and secretary for all standing committees and for all sub-committees created by him. The Speaker of the House has not appointed a black to a chairmanship. He has appointed one black vice chairman and one black secretary of Standing Committees.

In the Senate, the President of the Senate appoints the Standing Committees. He also appoints the chairman, vice-chairman and secretary. The President of the Senate has appointed no black chairmen, in fact, he removed one black chairman. He has appointed one vice chairman and two secretaries.

The appointments are entirely discretionary acts of the Speaker and the President. Consequently, there is little that an individual legislator can do about an appointment. This is not to say, however, that nothing can be done. Possibly one of the most effective means of influencing legislative committee appointments is to oppose the Speaker's and President's re-election and support the election of someone who will be more equitable in the appointments. (Appointments are basically political rewards and punishments). The Speaker is elected by the house members from the house delegation. The president is the Lieutenant Governor of the State and is elected in the general election.

Black legislators can mount the drive for a smaller Assembly. It is believed that should the size of the legislature be reduced, the reduction would affect the rural rather than the urban representatives. All of the black legislators are from urban areas. Therefore, the proportion of blacks to whites would also be reduced, thereby enhancing the possibility of blacks obtaining appointments and chairmanships.

CONTROVERSIAL MEASURES — proceeds of which are to be used for MARTA, was not recognized by the General Assembly. The community argued that the rapid transit system as it is presently designed operates in such a manner that those people who will derive the greatest benefits from the system are people who will not have to bear the burden of the retail sales and use tax. The most equitable source of revenue would be a source that will equalize the burden and the benefit, i.e., income and payroll tax.

All of the black legislators voted for House Bill 220. However, before voting for the bill, they were assured that a low fare plan (15 cents) would be instituted by MARTA. (Several black citizens had testified that they would be willing to accept the retail sales and use tax if a low fare plan were instituted). Black legislators were also assured that the route would be planned in order to make the system equally beneficial to the users in the black communities and white communities.

The opposition to House Bill 846 came primarily from the aldermen of the city of Atlanta. The black aldermen contend that ward elections would make it difficult for them to be re-elected because of the voting behavior of their constituents and large number of candidates. The black legislators contend that most, if not all, of the present black aldermen would be reelected and other blacks could be elected, thereby increasing the number of blacks on the board. However, should an alderman believe that he will be unable to win in his ward, he may exercise the choice of running city-wide. More important, the black legislators believe that ward election would allow for more effective representation because the aldermen would only have to respond to citizens of their ward.

Publication of the first edition of the Reporter was made possible through a supportive grant from the Atlanta Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority. All contributions are deductible for federal income tax purposes.

MEMBERS ORGANIZE — that the problems of the black legislators are too critical and too demanding for each black legislator to try to master them unassisted. Only through the utilization of the total black legislative experience does the possibility of success exist.

If there are reasons why the term "black caucus" is not being appropriately applied to black members of the Georgia Assembly, they can be found in the fact that (1) the caucus is not totally representative of black legislators and (2) it does not have the political power which most caucuses have.

Not all of the legislators have seen the necessity to attend the meetings; take advantage of the secretary and legislative interns; or consult with other black members who might be more knowledgeable about a certain issue. Although black senate members have utilized the legislative interns, the weekly meetings have been for the most part meetings of black house members. Moreover, communication between the house members and senate members is practically non-existent. This lack of support is the most critical problem of the black caucus. It has led to duplication of legislative efforts and certainly a weakening of black legislative power which is extremely important because of the fact that there is so little legislative power among the black legislator.

LEGISLATIVE INTERNSHIP PROGRAM INITIATED

Clark College's Georgia Service Center for Elected Officials and the Voter Education Project have jointly initiated an internship program at the capitol for the exclusive use of Black legislators and six interns presently involved in this pilot program.

The interns assist the Black representatives with research, summarization and analysis of bills and resolutions submitted to the Georgia General Assembly. Committee hearings are also monitored. Concurrent with these assignments, the interns are compiling data on bills and resolutions sub-committed by Black representatives since 1964; analyzing voting trends of non-Black representatives; and fulfilling many other necessary functions.

During the session, the interns researched in the areas of abortion, welfare, nursing homes, law enforcement, job discrimination in state offices and insurance. These research assignments have provided the interns with invaluable experience and expertise in the legislative processes. The interns are fulfilling a void in the legislative staffing of the Black legislators.

The six interns are: Dorothy Young, a recent Clark College graduate; Alvin Brown, a senior at Emory University; Phillip Duke, a senior at Hamilton College, N.Y.; Harry Long, a junior at Hamilton College, N.Y.; Humphrey Polanen, a senior at Hamilton College, N.Y.; and Leroy Slade, a recent graduate of Clark College.

BILLS SENT TO GOVERNOR

Approximately 65 per cent of the bills introduced by black members of the Georgia House of Representatives passed the House and the Senate and were forwarded to the Governor for his signature. Black senators, however, were able to get approximately 33 per cent of the bills which they introduced to the governor.

Black members of the House sponsored, individually and jointly with their black and white colleagues, 116 of the 1002 bills introduced in the House. Of that 116, 41 remained in the House, 18 were sent to the Senate and 75 were sent to the Governor at the end of the session. The majority of the House bills were of a local nature (legislation which applies to a particular place as distinguished from legislation relating to places in general). A few of the House bills were sponsored by a member or members of the black caucus and were designed in such a manner so as to alleviate some special problems confronting black people of the state. Only a very small percentage of those bills were enacted.

Georgia's two black senators sponsored 33 of the 338 bills introduced in the Senate. They were able to maneuver 12 of the 33 through the Senate and one of those 12 through the Senate and the House. Unlike their counterparts in the House, the black senate members co-sponsored only a small percentage of their bills.

Listed below are bills introduced by the black members of the Georgia General Assembly and the status of those bills at the end of the session. In some instances, a bill may have been co-sponsored by a legislator who is not a member of the black caucus. All bills which were introduced in 1971 may be reconsidered during the 1972 session without being introduced. Status Key: Passed House and Senate, P/B; Senate Committee S/C; House Committee, H/C.

Dear Mr. Harkins:

Thank you for the copy of your project report.

I think your idea on the school desegregation research is sound. Under separate cover we are sending you the latest report we have done. I am also asking Dr. Paul Gaston, our research director, to respond to your thought. Dr. Gaston is on leave with us from the University of Virginia, Department of History, and also has a special interest in school desegregation.

Certainly you are most welcome to use any of the materials we have here.

Mr. Paul Anthony, Executive Director

Dear Mr. Anthony:

You may recall that I had an interview with you on January 22 about a research project I was conducting about Ralph McGill's role in Georgia politics. I am sending you a copy of my finished paper under separate cover for two reasons. First, I would value your critical comments on the paper, both as to content and interpretations. Second, you might want to put the copy in the files of your research department. It contains some original data from my interviews, and researchers using the SRC files might find it useful.

I greatly enjoyed talking with you in January about politics in general and McGill in particular. Although I will probably not work on McGill specifically in the future, I think I will do further research in the field of recent Southern political history. I am already contemplating a topic for my senior thesis in history. One idea I have would be an investigation of the desegregation process in about five Southern cities. It would have some similarity to the studies that the SRC has done in the past to highlight the process of desegregation. However, I would concentrate solely on counties which have had successful or innovative plans that met court specifications. Such successes would possibly serve as models for similar communities. Also, my approach would be historical, serving to explore the development of litigation and the gradual phase-out of the dual system in the communities to be studied.

I am mentioning this because, if the project becomes a reality, I believe that files and field reports contained in your office would prove of great value. I would do most of my research in the communities in question, but I do think that your organization would prove of great value to me. In return, perhaps the raw data or other information that I collect would be useful in some way to the SRC.

All of this is highly tentative, but is a great possibility. I would be interested in hearing your thoughts on the feasibility of the project, and perhaps you might have some other ideas about how I could make use of your data and files. From what I have read and seen of the SRC, the general emphasis is one of much interest to me, and I would like to work with the organization as much as possible. I do have some communities in mind, but for brevity's sake I am merely outlining my ideas to see your reaction.

I hope that I will not be imposing on our brief acquaintanceship to ask you to take time to consider both my McGill paper and the tentative topic for my thesis. I would greatly appreciate hearing your comments on both subjects. I thank you for granting me the interview, and I trust I will have the opportunity to meet and talk with you again.

Thank you very much for your cooperation and attention.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I am a Duke University student currently engaged in a biographical study of Ralph McGill. I am researching his entire career with the idea of continuing the study of McGill and the modern South throughout my course of study, culminating in a senior thesis in history on McGill. The current paper, however, concerns "Ralph McGill's Contribution to Change in Georgia Politics."

I will be spending time in Atlanta soon for research purposes, both in McGill's papers at the Emory University Library, and also in interviewing. Dr. Thomas Naylor of Duke's Economics Department and the L. Q. C. Lamar Society, suggested that I talk with you concerning my topic. Since I already had written the Southern Regional Council, and plan to use your library, I would doubly appreciate the opportunity to talk with you about McGill.

I will be in Atlanta for two time periods: Saturday, Jan. 16-Friday, Jan. 22, and Friday, Jan. 29-Saturday, Feb. 6. If you could spare time from your schedule during this time to talk with me, I would be quite appreciative. Since I will be at the SRC office at any rate, you may not want to have a formal schedule, but I would be happy to have a specific appointment with you if you so desire. I also hope to talk with Mr. Reese Cleghorn.

Thank you for your courtesy. I will look forward to hearing from you and meeting you in Atlanta.

Sincerely yours,

Harry H. Harkins, Jr.

Dear Miss Kent:

At the suggestion of Nancy Erickson, whom I asked to call you, this is to briefly describe the Open Air Festival, sponsored by the Random Walk Merchants Association.

Last year fourteen shops, antiques, gifts, paintings, and decorators, formed a merchant's association to promote an approximate three block area, the center of which is East Paces Ferry at Maple. Up-grading and beautification of the area is also one of our major purposes. For instance, dogwood trees were planted earlier this year along East Paces.

Last year we held a Sunday afternoon open air festival that had some seventy out door booths along the street. Handicraft items made by children, some antiques, flowers, some junk, etc., were sold. Although it rained, the festival was very successful and attracted over 3,000 people. More importantly, it was a genuine happy event for the community. When one resident complained to city authorities, our permit was withdrawn and it took us the remainder of the summer to straighten this out.

Now on Sunday, May 30th, we will have our first open air festival of the year. We hope to have them monthly throughout the summer.

We would be very grateful if you would consider interviewing one of our members on your program. Should this be possible, I would like to suggest Miss Carol Waltz, owner of Carol Waltz, Inc., Interiors and Antiques. Miss Waltz is attractive and very articulate as well as being a very successful business woman. I think she would measure up to the high quality of your show.

Thank you for any consideration you are able to give this request.

Sincerely,

ANTHONY & STICKNEY

Dear Sir:

Within the past eight months, I have become acquainted with the work of the Southern Regional Council through its two major publications, New South and South Today. In some issues, I have read about different organizations, such as the American Friends Service Committee, the L. Q. C. Lamar Society and the Human Relations Councils which several Southern states have created. I would like to know more about these organizations and would be very grateful if you could provide me with their mailing addresses.

At present, I am serving a four year enlistment with the U. S. Air Force and should be discharged in approximately twenty months. Upon my separation from the Service, it is my desire to work with one of the above mentioned groups, or one similar to them. I feel that they all have in common basic ideals and goals. One of, if not the, most important of which, I feel, is to improve the quality of life for all disadvantaged citizens, but especially the black people of the South.

Also, I would like to ask you for the address of Mr. Leslie W. Dunbar whose article "Middle Age Thoughts" appeared in the Spring, 1970 issue of New South.

Thanking you very much for your cooperation and assistance,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I received a copy of the letter to you from Ray Schwartz pertaining to your interest in the White House Conference on Aging.

It would be of interest to me to know something about your Southern Regional Council. If you have information you could send me this would be appreciated. As things come along on a regional level, then I will have a better idea of how to tie you into them.

At the State level, the responsibilities for the White House Conference on Aging activities rest with the State Agencies on Aging, as reflected on the attached list. If you have State organizations which you wish to relate to this effort, you may wish to write them and the State Agencies on Aging encouraging this mutual cooperation. Quite honestly, our State people are involved right now in conducting a number of community conferences and in preparation for State conferences in May, and there are so many organizations to which they have to relate, that I would suggest your people take the initiative.

State White House Conferences scheduled are as follows:

Alabama	May 21, 22	Montgomery
Florida	May 11	Orlando
Georgia	May 3, 4	Atlanta
Kentucky	May 25, 26	Lexington
Mississippi	May 20	Jackson
North Carolina	May 21, 22	Raleigh
South Carolina	May 19	Columbia
Tennessee	May 12	Nashville

If you have questions or suggestions as to how to relate to our aging efforts, please let me know. We welcome your interest and assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Paul,

You have been so wonderful in your backing of my integrated housing work that I don't hesitate to write to you about Sponsors of Open Housing Investment (SOHI). We have an opportunity which must be taken now, or be lost.

For too long SOHI has lacked a field secretary -- to travel and work with local groups to spark their interest in developing local multiracial housing. Jack Tatum, a young (32) black housing consultant with an impressive background is that opportunity.

We need $26,000 for two years salary and expenses. While we're raising it, he's working part time. He has a deep sense of the urgency of the work SOHI and National Neighbors are doing to end the terrible injustice of closed housing.

This is so important.... Please, if you can, send a contribution (tax deductible) to Congressman Don Fraser, Chairman SOHI, 1914 Connecticut Ave NW, Washington DC 20009, for his salary and expenses -- and a pledge for '72. You will do much to advance our campaign for truly open housing.

Sincerely,

Morris

P.S. Please look over the enclosed summary of Jack Tatum's background. You will see why I am so enthusiastic about the possibility of a major step forward. Then, please send and pledge what you can.

Warmest regards! I checked with all his previous employers carefully before he was engaged, & got good reports -

Mourn not the dead . . . .
But rather mourn the apathetic throng—
The cowed and the meek—
Who see the world's great anguish and its wrong,
And dare not speak!

Dear Sir:

This letter is of such a nature that it requires some explanation. I had written to the Governor of Arkansas, Dale Bumpers about it and he referred me to you, as one who might be able to answer my questions.

I am an alumnus of the University of Vermont and have been associated with its activities in one capacity or another through the years, (not too important). My questions involve a long tradition which began in the 1890s. It was called the"Kake Walk".

According to tradition, it began at a man's party where agroup of exuberant students started to cake-walk for the fun of it. Nobody seems to recall just how it began to spread, but withina few years it became the central even of a sort of winter carnival around Washington s birthday. It gradually developed into a combination of contest between a pair of "kake-walkers" from each fraternity, each dressed in bright colored clothes, and "blackface", like old minstrel shows. There were also stunts or skits, one from each fraternity, usually more or less satiracal, but practically never having anything to do with race or color. Prizes in the form of cakes and silver cups were awarded to the winners. A special music was composed by a local band leader, called "Cotton Babe", stirring music, with no words.

No one ever questioned it, so far as I know, until about two years ago, or rather three, when the few black students at the University condemned it as racist, objecting to the "black-face" part of it. Therefore the fraternities changed, eliminating it, but keeping the rest of it as traditionally.

Two years ago, at the time there were eruptions of students, blacks and their sympathizers, condemning racism, the dozen or so at Vermont, plus some white students and faculty members, demanded that the whole kake walk winter carnival must be abolished. Against the protests of many students and I would judge most of the alumni, Itwas abolished.

There were two results: One was a lot of animosty against the black students; the other was loss of a lot of alumni support from the alumni of the university who resented having a handful of students destroy a tradition of some 75 years standing.

I should point out that only a fraction of one per cent of the people of Vermont are Negroes, mostly, I wjoud judge, because of the hard winters. (Vermont was the first state to abolish slaver in its constitutiion. The number of Negro students at the university is also a fraction of one per cent. Tuition to out-of-staters is very high $2400, ($2600 next year, I believe) The Dean of Students has tried to recruit blacks from other states, but money is not available for very many.

Kake Walk probably will not return to Vermont in its old form, attempts the past two years to find a substitute have been a dismal flop. I would like your opinion about a substitute.

1. Restore the "walking for the cake" with the old colorful costumes and music, but no "black-face". Devote less time to it, but still keep is importance.

2. Make it a recognition or tribute to the other two cultural gifts of Negroes, spirituals and Jazz, with either competition in these fields among the students, or possible importation of some outside group of black singers or musicians as participants. Perhaps other ideas would develop; there is plenty of oportunity.

I cannot understand why blacks are proud of jazz and spirituals but regard cake-walking as a humiliating relic of slavery. Spirituals were certainly born there.

Some time ago I saw a short item in a newspaper about a Negro woman in Arkansas who had started a school for poor blacks and one feature of their activities was old fashioned cake-walking. I wrote to the Governor of Arkansas for information or contact with this woman but he knew nothing of her. His Executive Secretary of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations assured him that he could see no racial overtones in the cake-walk or that it was racist.

Last fall I saw a TV game of football in which a marching band of girls, the "Apache Bells" announced one of their maneuvers would be the old fashioned cake-walk/ They got their feet about foot off the ground, flopped their arms around up over their heads, a pretty incipid imitation of the real thing. It occurred to me that quite possible that nobody, anywhere, had ever perfected the cakewalk into such a fine and vigorous art as the "Kake-Walkers" at the University of Vermont, and that it ought not to be allowed to disappear because a few people called it racist.

I apologize for taking so much of your time, but would much like both your opinion (and those of your associates) and any suggestions of ways to build up such a tribute to Negro contributions as I suggest.

Very truly yours,

I have contributed for many years to the Negro College Fund (what has happened to it?); also to NAACP, Martin Luther King fund, etc.)

Dear Sir:

Last week I wrote you a lengthy letter concerning the possible revival of the University of Vermont Kake Walk, which has been suspended for the last two years because of the charge of racism on the part of the few black students and their sympathisers. My letter tried to give you a background for understanding the problem.

Since writing to you, I have further refined my thinking and have come up with something constructive, in my opinion. My suggestions will be as follows:

If the program for the revival of the Kake Walk in its amended form can return this mid-winter carnival to its former popularity, it would make a profit of several thousand dollars. My suggestion would be that this money be devoted to scholarships for black students, both men and women, on the basis of need, character, scholarship, and talent. I would not make thee them exclusively "athletic scholarships", but there would be no discrimination against them.

I would emphasize that the new program would be somewhat experimental, subject to improvements from year to year. I think the plan has merit. I do not see how it can be accused of ravism, since the profits go to black student scholarships. I would hope it might appeal to the thousands of alumni who disapproved of abolition of the old Kake Walk. It should appeal to fraternities, which it is generally agreed, were badly hurt by the loss of the winter carnival.

I would appreciate it if you would give my plan approval, to the extent at least that it would be freed of any charge of racism. I am not clear just what your own organization is, as to racial composition.

Very truly yours,

J. Ralph Spalding

Dear Mr. Anthony,

After our phone conversation last week, I contacted Andy Young. Andy has a print of our film, "Oh, Freedom!" (in which he is our narrator) and I asked if he would kindly bring it to your office so that you could see the kind of films that Rediscovery has been producing. Knowing the meandering ways of the post office, I thought that might be the fastest way of getting a print to you. He assured me he would get it to you promptly so I hope that by now you have heard from him.

As you will see from the enclosed material, our series of films on the black experience has grown naturally from our long involvement with the Movement. We think that by the nature of our creative group,(cameramen, soundmen, writers and editors -blacks and whites) we have been able to make films that speak effectively and compassionately to all segments of our society. The need for disseminating materials of this kind as broadly as possible is increasingly apparent. It is in hopes that you share our concern that I called you last week. Whereas the New York Times has been selling the films to the secondary school market, we have now gotten permission to seek out groups like the Council in our desire to find the widest possible audience. A common appreciation of black heritage and contribution seems essential if genuine understanding of black aspirations is to be achieved.

As I indicated to you on the telephone, our last film, "Edge of the Arena " (portrait of a black candidate) is now about to be released. As soon as we can secure a print, I will forward it to you for your viewing. I hope that you and all the good people at Voter Education Project who assisted us so generously will like what we have assembled. We hope that we have drawn a fair picture of the emerging black politician in the South.

I will look forward to hearing from you after you have seen"Oh, Freedom!" and will be most appreciative of any assistance you may be able to give us in getting these films to the places they should be.

Sincerely,

Tracy Sugarman

A twice-monthly newsletter on minority economic development

New Business Complex in Milwaukee

After four years in planning, Central City Development Corporation is ready to break ground July 1 on a complex of businesses in central Milwaukee. In addition to raising $50,000 for operating expenses through the sale of stock, CCDC is seeking a $250,000 grant to undertake other ventures, business and non-business, for the residents of the area. Within the area of a city block bounded by N. 6th and N. 7th Streets, and W. Walnut and W. Vine Streets, the proposed enterprises are a motel, a liquor store, a bowling alley, a restaurant and cocktail lounge, a supermarket, drugstore, cleaners, barber shop, beauty college, certified public accountants office, and a law office.

Proceeds from the stock sale (500 shares at $100 each) will complement a $1.5-million, 90 percent guaranteed loan from Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, plus a $100,000 loan from Commerce Capital Corporation (an SBIC) and a $25,000 loan from Sears, Roebuck and Company. The latter two loans plus $44,000 from a prior sale of stock will satisfy the 10 percent equity contribution required by the Small Business Administration. Projections for the first year of operation, show revenues of $270,000 and income, after all debt service charges, of $16,000. The stock offering applies only to Wisconsin residents.

Central City Development Corporation was chartered on March 2, 1967 to assist, encourage and promote a proposed black industrial project in the inner city of Milwaukee and particularly to assist small businesses. Principals in the corporation are: president, Felmers O. Chaney, organizer and president of North Milwaukee State Bank and sergeant of Milwaukee Police Department; executive vice president, LaSalle Malone, equal opportunity officer for United States General, Inc. and owner of realty firm and food store; and executive secretary, Eleanor A. Lofton, consultant and administrative assistant to Sengstacke Enterprises, Inc., (Chicago) and publisher of New Pittsburgh Courier Chain. Contact: Eleanor A. Lofton, CCDC, P.O. Chicanos Form Strawberry Co-op

On April 19, twenty-five Mexican-American families gathered in an open field of the Pajaro Valley in California for a milestone economic event — the financial start of a pioneering strawberry growing co-operative. Phillip V. Sanchez, newly appointed director for operations of the Office of Economic Opportunity, delivered a $40,000 check as the down payment on a $100,000 government grant for the new business venture, "Co-op Campesina." According to Alfred Navarro, executive director of the Central Coast Counties Development Corp., a non-profit organization which supplied managerial and technical help to get the co-op going, the $100,000 would be used to set up a revolving fund for growing, processing and selling the co-op's crops. The venture has also obtained a $150,000 bank loan, secured by future crops, giving the co-op solid financial footing.

The 25 families with membership in the co-operative, formed a year ago, have incomes below or just above the poverty index — $3,600 for a family of four. They plan to plant strawberries on 80 fertile acres in the Pajaro Valley, with the expectation that income per family will reach from $7,000 to $10,000 per year. The families now in the project will work jointly on such chores as preparing the land for planting and fertilizing. But each family will have a plot of its own, about three acres, for harvesting, which continues for many months in the case of strawberries. Each family's income will be derived from the yeld of its own plot. One acre can produce an average of 3,000 trays of strawberries per year, selling at slightly less than $3 a tray, so the returns on low acreage can be quite high. The co-op already has 60 acres planted to squash for a fast "cash crop" before starting strawberry planting in the late summer. Long-term plans call for having 115 acres in strawberries under cultivation in the next two years, enabling a larger number of Chicano families in Santa Cruz, Monterey, and San Benito counties to participate in the co-op.

Navajos On The Move

Eastern Navajo Industries, Inc. is building a 115,000 square-foot manufacturing plant at the Navajo Tribal Shushbitoh Industrial Park near Wingate Station, New Mexico, with a planned completion date of July. The plant is being financed with a $125,000 grant from the Indian Business Development Fund, approved by the central office of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington. The company, which will manufacture mobile homes and component housing, will commence operations with 80 Navajo employees, and, with completion of the new factory buildings, will employ another 125 to 150 persons. The present facilities at the Tribal Church Rock Industrial Park will be utilized to fulfill a contract for 200 housing units for the Navajo Housing Authority.

Eastern Navajo Industries, Inc. was formed under the State of New Mexico corporate laws and has received financial commitments from various lending institutions to supplement the capital stock purchase. A total of 53 Navajos have stock in the corporation. To give every opportunity to provide the much needed employment in the area, the company, which holds a general contractor's license in New Mexico and Arizona, will engage as a prime developer of FHA and HUD housing contracts.

Within the next two months, Navajo Development Enterprises, Inc. will open a Western clothing store at a Fedmart Shopping Center in New Mexico. Start-up funds are being obtained through the Indian Development Fund of the BIA and through a business loan to be obtained from the Great Western Bank at Window Rock. The store, stocked to serve the working people, will carry men's and women's Western clothes, boots and shoes. The corporation which will operate the western store and other enterprises is owned by five Navajo stockholders and is incorporated for $1-million, according to Mike Nelson, manager of the new western store and president of NDEI. He said the corporation has recently been voted a management consultant contract for the Fort Defiance Housing project which will build 135 housing units at Ford Defiance.

On April 19, the Dine-Bi-Naa-Yei Cooperative on the Navajo Reservation at Pinon, Arizona formally opened. The co-op, which is expected to soon gross nearly $1,000 a day, is a dues paying member of the Arizona Grocers Association. It will be open six days a week – operated solely by, and primarily for, the Navajo people of Pinon. Prices at the co-op will be considerably cheaper than those of traders in the area, according to co-op officials. While the Pinon Co-op is a non-profit organization by Arizona law, its founders hope that a law allowing co-op profits will be passed in the future.

Presently, co-op members pay a dollar fee which entitles them to certain benefits if the co-op does well financially. Among those participating in the co-op development are ONEO, BIA, The Consumer Cooperative Society of Palo Alto, California, Navajo VISTA and numerous independent volunteers living in the Pinon area. The Community Improvement Project of ONEO donated $3,000 worth of labor, and provided draftsmen for designs and layouts of the co-op building. The Concentrated Employment Program of ONEO is paying the salaries of the cashiers at the store. And, the Indian Development Fund of BIA played a major part in granting over $9,000 for the co-op project.

Filipino Center Wins FHA Subsidy

Construction of the tallest and costliest structure to date in the Sacramento, California West End Redevelopment Project, a 10-story, $2,775,000 Filipino Center, has been approved by the Federal Housing Authority. Redevelopment Agency directors were told recently that the FHA has agreed to a $136,508 annual subsidy for the life of the 40-year mortgage, and will guarantee the mortgage. The subsidy will keep rentals at a reduced rate in the complex, which will occupy the block bounded by Main, Market, Commerce and Center street. The project had been stalled for several months while the FHA and the developers worked on ways of keeping rentals down. The FHA subsidy and mortgage guarantee should provide ready availability of private mortgage money for the project, said S. Edward Griffith, agency director. Construction is expected to begin in mid-July and be finished in July of 1972.

The project is being undertaken by the Associated Filipino Organizations of San Joaquin County, headed by Ted Lapuz. Plans call for 128 living units to be built in the 10-story tower. These will include 68 efficiency apartments, 20 one-bedroom, 20 two-bedroom and 20 three-bedroom apartments. A two-story commercial section with 21,500 square feet of space and a 5,000-square-foot day care center also will be included in the project. Architects for the project are Higgins and Davison of Sacramento, and the contractor is Nimbus Construction Co., also of Sacramento.

New Financial Institutions

Indianapolis' first biracially-owned bank, capitalized at $2-million, hopes to open August 1 following a subscription sale of 80,000 shares of stock at $25 per share. Of Midwest National Bank's nine directors, six are black and three are white. The bank's president, James Sedwick, with 40 years of Indiana banking experience, is white. Other organizers are: (chairman) Dr. Frank P. Lloyd, director of medical research at Methodist Hospital; Rev. Richard T. Andrews, pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist Church; Achilles T. Angicchio, a plumbing contractor; S. Henry Bundles, Jr., president of Summit Laboratories, a cosmetics manufacturer; Andrew D. Foster, president of Foster Hotels; and William Ray, a realtor The bank will occupy temporary headquarters in a converted residence at 2850 North Meridian Street. A new building will be erected later at a site some 3½ miles from downtown Indianapolis. Plans for Midwest National Bank were conceived about three years ago, but the organizing group experienced a number of delays particularly in finding a suitable location.

A Spanish-American-owned savings and loan association has been given tentative approval for a charter and permission to organize in Santa Fe, New Mexico. Permission for the DeVargas Savings and Loan Association had been opposed by two Santa Fe and an Espanola savings and loan associations. The new S&L, of which former District Attorney Alfonso Sanchez of Santa Fe is chairman, proposes to open an office in the southern part of the city with a capitalization of $300,000. Its organizers claim to have almost 200 stockholders and more than $400,000 in savings subscriptions.

Major Bank Searches For Quality Standard To Measure Social Gains

The president of the $25.6-billion-deposit Bank of America in San Francisco recently called for the development of a national "arithmetic of quality" so that the progress and failure in coping with social and economic problems can be quantitatively measured. A. W. Clausen told the Conference Board's sixth annual financial conference in February that the establishment of such a measure of quality is necessary before government and industry can make significant gains in improving the quality of life. At his own bank he turned the project over to two senior officers. Walter E. Hoadley, the bank's chief economist, an executive vice president and member of the managing committee, and D. S. Langsdorf, comptroller, have been assigned the front-line responsibility for a task which in effect is supposed to rewrite and revise a history of 300 years of economics thought and practice.

According to Clausen, the major reason for our inadequate response "is that we find the quality of life issue confusing and that the prime cause of that confusion is a lack of even the crudest forms of measurement of quality." He explained, "at present our economic arithmetic focuses on cyclical changes in total activity. It focuses on the flow of inputs and outputs, not on the total stock of assets in the nation. Somehow, changes in stocks in a much wider range of assets must be taken into account if we are ever to talk meaningfully and with precision about the quality of life." Among the assets Clausen said should be included are capital, knowledge, skills, physical environment and socio-political environment. Net output would be increased or decreased by the amount such assets were augmented or reduced by corporate or government activities, he said.

Even in rather crude form, he said, "a social report of some sort would enable us to do at least five things better than we can now:

1. It would help rationalize public support behind the solutions needed in our social problem areas.
2. It would expedite formulation of national private and public, corporate and legislative goals by furnishing a regular and systematic assesment of our social problems, and the costs as well as benefits of various proposed solutions.
3. It would help us develop logical priorities by pointing out which problems are most critical and the cost in economic assets and human terms.
4. It would allow us to develop policy alternatives and select from them the most promising solutions to specific problems by pinpointing the precise nature, components and scope of such problems.
5. It would allow us to determine whether the programs we select to deal with such problems are actually working. It would provide a benchmark — even though possibly at first a crude one — of the effect of our efforts over time."

Briefs

The Interracial Council for Business Opportunity of New Jersey recently announced that it is compiling another "Business for Sale" list, which will be mailed to over 5,000 minority businessmen throughout the state. The list outlines pertinent facts and information of ICBO-registered businesses which are currently for sale. Contact: Bernard H. Saperstein, deputy director, ICBO, 24 Commerce Street, Newark, New Jersey (201-622-4771).

With an assist from the Birmingham (Alabama) Urban League, Charles C. Johnson, 29, a former Tuskegee policeman and ex-gas station owner, secured an $85,000 SBA loan and bought the Pritchard Pontiac-Cadillac agency, a white owned firm that had been in business in the city for 26 years. Johnson Pontiac-Cadillac, Inc. is now the one and only black Cadillac agency in the country.

The MIDC Story: Birth of West Philadelphia Industrial Giant, a sixteen-part series by Ralph H. Jones, The Philadelphia Tribune, March 2 through April 24, 1971.

A potential industrial giant is about to come alive in West Philadelphia on the corner of 56th and Lancaster Avenue. The Mantua Industrial Development Corporation is a business venture whose component and participating units are owned by seven black, one Mexican-American and two white firms. Together they have blazed a trail from the planning stage to the point of reality that has resulted in purchase of a $1-million building backed by a Small Business Administration loan of $600,000 for financing. Acquisition of the 190,000 square-foot building can largely be traced to the tenacity of Frederick S. Jackson, Jr., black,and Wilbur W. Pierce, white, who envision 350 jobs and a $3-million gorss in business this year in the first primarily black-owned coperative industrial complex in the U.S.

MIDC is really the outgrowth of a social action organization, The Young Great Society (YGS), which owns 25 percent of the MIDC building. There, Pierce met Herman Wrice, organizer and dynamo for YGS. Wrice, although aided in part by governmental grants and a hard-core of volunteer youths, was experiencing tough going because of the lack of job and money-producing projects. He knew how to organize for social action but the field of economics had him at its mercy. He proposed to Pierce that they start some businesses that could put jobs in the ghetto and profits into YGS. Their efforts to do this resulted in several projects, all of which failed.

Because Wrice had deep roots and a following in the Mantua area of West Philadelphia, they set up Mantua Enterprises and incorporated to manufacture pallets for fork-lift trucks. With $10,000 borrowed from a bank, a garage was rented and Mantua Enterprises, Inc. was in business. Yet orders were slow, equipment broke down, the staff was oversized — — and a cost analysis disclosed that pallets selling for $4.85 were being manufactured by Mantua at an average cost of $61.43. Within four weeks, the company failed.

Out of this somber formation of MIDC, the minds of Pierce and Frederick S. Jackson, Jr. began to work in consonance. Jackson was seeking a channel for his skills learned in 12 years in electronics at RCA Corporation and Pierce was searching for a black man to take over management of a circuit manufacturer called Techtron Company, which was for sale. Pierce, still reeling from the failures of Mantua Enterprises, helped Jackson get Mantua Techtron funded and in operation. Jackson began to build up his list of customers. RCA became his first important one and still remains high on the scale of preferred clients. General Electric's Re-Entry and Environmental Systems Division helped Jackson get equipment and contracts and advised him in both technical and communications areas. With Mantua Techtron, Inc. in operation, Pierce, Jackson and Wrice set about getting black businessmen to join in establishing an industrial park.

A building owned by the Metal Edge Corporation at 56th and Lancaster was found to be suitable for conversion to an industrial center, housing several companies. After long negotiations, the owners agreed to sell the building and donate an interest to the Young Great Society. The Mantua Industrial Development Corporation was subsequently organized as a special purpose corporation under the Small Business Administration's Local Development Company (Section 502) Legislation to purchase the building. The tough hill to climb then was identifying black business-builders willing to incorporate into an industrial development group. Finally, four black, one Mexican-American and two white-owned firms agreed to join MIDC. They were acceptable to the SBA who approved a $600,000 loan allocated as follows for the purchase of the $1-million building and financing: Mantua Techtron, Inc., $66,000; Q-Pal Corporation, $108,600; Kenmar Printing Company, $72,600; Creative Computer Systems, Inc., $29,400; Maintenance by Durdim, $26,400; Andino's Sweet Slumber, $49,800; and Brotherston Surgical Supply Company, $247,200.

So pronounced has been MIDC's success that several other businesses are eager to become a part of it. The partners of Photo Scientific Research, Inc. are convinced that MIDC membership will alleviate their problem. The company, struggling for its existance, hopes to utilize the benefits of group marketing and technical cross-pollination. Presently, the firm, which manufacturers chromatography plates used in chemical analysis and research, holds one government contract and has been promised consideration by three large pharmaceutical companies. Darden Vending Services, Leon Brown, a sausage manufacturer, and Nate Ramsey with an idea for a sports promotion company also want to join the MIDC umbrella.

During the past three years, MIDC has brought ten small businesses together, formed a corporation and struggled to purchase a facility to put most of its firms under one roof into a unique industrial complex. After two years of determined effort, the 56th and Lancaster facility with its 190,000 square feet of office and production space, is the property of MIDC. This centralized location will provide one-step industrial shopping and accessability for the MIDC customers — — a sort of industrial supermarket. For MIDC it will add the benefits of centralization to joint marketing and the support of a number of large corporations, independent businesses, banks and lending institutions, as well as expert legal counsel. Most of these benefits come with no price tag attached.

General Electric Re-Entry & Environmental Systems Division might be termed the midwife of the MIDC concept for it gave unstinting support from the very inception. Second on the list of benefactors is Central Penn National Bank for it was in the forefront in financial matters and extended aid and took some calculated risks. Philco-Ford kept the bawling MIDC baby alive by donating equipment and awarding contracts to member firms.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Our meeting was most enjoyable. Many thanks from Brooks and myself.

The meeting with Dr. Griffin was interesting and enjoyable. I also met a Mr. McMullan who added a good deal to the discussion.

It is hard to say whether or not they will help but, as your suggested, I made a hard plea for funds now.

Thank you again for your help and I will certainly keep you informed.

By the way, I had a note from you on Wilton E. Hartzler and I am at a loss to remember its significance. Could you possibly refresh my memory.

May 1971

Dear Chief Executive Officer:

The response which we received from our first April digest was beyond our original expectations. Fifty-eight organizations in eighteen states contacted us and sent us information in regard to their programs concerning local development corporations, equity, and marketing products and services provided by minority businesses.

The responses established the following pattern:

Question One: Under the Small Business Administration's Section 502 Local Development Corporation Program, which L.D.C.'s have been able to raise the 10% injection? How?

Twenty-nine responses in regard to the Local Development Corporation Program indicated that most minority economic development organizations were unaware of the program and that for the most part it was not being utilized. The Savings and Loan Association in Memphis, Tennessee is organizing a shopping center through 502 and they raised the 10% injection, but with extreme difficulty, and they are not optimistic about raising additional community injection monies. The Greater Philadelphia Community Development Corporation reports an industrial development project involving a $1,391,000 financing in 1969. They will raise further community share funds through a Community Development Trust Fund. The Forsyth County Investment Corporation in Winston-Salem, North Carolina reports that they are developing a shopping strip and that they hope to raise $20,000 from community residents to cover the bottom 10%.

The Small Business Administration overall figures for the program demonstrates the potential of the Local Development Corporation Program. 3,120 projects in 10 years, affected 163,000 jobs and involved financing of $639 million. 18% of the projects are minority-owned.

As of early 1970 only 4% of these projects were in larger urban areas - communities of 50,000 and over.

capital formation, inc.

Conclusions:

1. The Local Development Corporation Program is not being used by inner city development organizations.

2. The potential of the LDC for economic development has not been explained to these organizations.

During the next month Capital Formation will explore the total Local Development Corporation Program and will send you a complete Program Analysis -

Detailed case histories of success stories and failures

Detailed description of the overall potential of the program

Step by Step procedures on how this program affects you

Question Two: Have any organizations been able to raise equity for minority businesses?

The major source of "equity" monies in our responses comes from MESBICS which exist, or which are being set up. This is subordinate money, long term, low-interest and attracts conventional debt. MESBICS are extremely important in minority business development because they provide the subordinate money.

But debt service still strains a small business, and none of the responses indicates any success in attracting real equity.

Conclusions:

1. Real equity is not available for minority businesses. This makes financing larger enterprises difficult.

2. MESBICS are significant operating tools in local communities and do provide subordinate financing which attracts conventional debt lending.

Capital Formation will keep this question under consideration, and we hope to develop some alternative programs which will attract real equity. We will need your help and further analysis.

capital formation, inc.

Question Three: Techniques of Marketing Goods and Services Provided By Minority Businesses

Responses to this question were very spotty. We have located compendiums listing minority businesses and their products and services in many cities, including Memphis, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, and New York, but no step by step programs were submitted indicating successful techniques. No organization outlined how they were taking specific steps to act as the broker or middleman to obtain contracts for minority businesses from corporations or city governments. The United Front Foundation, Inc., Roxbury, Mass., Tony Picksman, Director, outlined their emphasis on education of the entrepreneur to increase sales. The Roxbury Institute of Business Management offers a Sales and Marketing course which emphasizes training in professional selling and how to be economically competitive. Techniques include role playing and simulated work situations. BEAM (Business Enterprise for American Minorities) in Minneapolis-St. Paul has published a directory of minority businesses producing quality products and services. They include an interesting approach. Alongside each company they list References of individuals in major corporations who have purchased products from the specific minority business. This adds an important method whereby a prospective buyer is given the assurance that other peer groups have preceded him.

This month the Digest will concentrate again on Marketing. Please flood us with material, techniques and suggestions.

Please answer all these questions:

1. Do you have a Directory (ies) of Minority Businesses in your area? Please send us a copy of each.

2. How do the following organizations cooperate or participate in circulating this (these) Directory (ies)? How do they participate in increasing sales for minority businessmen?

   Other Minority Based Economic Development Organizations

   Chamber of Commerce

   Major Corporations

   Federal Executive Board(FEB) - Minority Business Opportunity Committee (MBOC)

   State Government

   City Government

capital formation, inc.

3. What dollar volume of contracts has specifically been awarded to minority businesses through your efforts. How many different contracts? What is the largest? Over what period of time? What percentage - both number and dollar volume - are for construction companies?

4. Is the publication of a directory sufficient to stimulate sales?

5. What specific techniques have you used to bring about purchase contracts?
   From: Corporations?
   City?
   State?
   Federal?

6. How are the companies listed in the Directory selected?

   All Known Companies in the Area?

   Only Companies of Proven Quality?

   How do you measure "proven quality"?

7. What courses do you run to teach marketing to minority businessmen? What is included in your curriculum? Please send us a copy.

8. Once a business receives a contract, what follow-up procedures do you use?

9. What types of businesses have you been most successful working with?

   Construction
   Printing Companies
   Maintenance Service
   Moving Companies
   Office Supplies
   Other - Please list with dollar amounts and numbers of contracts

To help us collect information and to get a useful flow of ideas back to you, we are identifying individual contacts in as many areas as possible. Each month they will call for your ideas and contributions, and then get material back to you. Please expect their calls.

 Send us your ideas for areas to concentrate on. Send us successful techniques or approaches which you are using which we can pass on.

Dear Paul,

I will be in Atlanta, Thursday, June 10 and would like an opportunity to visit with you if possible. I have several projects cooking at the moment that I'd like to seek your aid in and I'll outline them briefly in this letter. If you're not going to be available that day I'd appreciate your lining me up with any other appropriate staff people on these items.

Housing - I represent a non-profit corporation in Memphis which is church affiliated that wants to get into the low and moderate income housing area. Because of local politics they do not want to do business with the local integrated law firm, that has already done a lot of this type of development. They have come to me and I have very limited expertise in this area. Any help you or someone down there can be toward steering us in the right direction would be appreciated.

Prison Reform - I represent a guy at Brushy Mountain prison in Petros, Tennessee who is serving 99 years for murder of a policeman. He and several other guys have organized a prison radio show and a weekly newspaper. They have done this with the tacit consent of the Warden and with absolutely no money at all. I am trying to raise some money through the Knoxville and Oak Ridge ACLU and Unitarian Church people and they are having a jazz show at the prison on Memorial Day. Brushy Mountain is the longterm, maximum security prison in the Tennessee system. No one there has less than a fifteen year sentence and it always comes last in priority. There have been virtually no Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) grants to long term prisons and I don't think that is a feasible source of funding at this time. I think these men will have to raise money privately and show that they can do a number of ongoing projects before they can pursuade the State and Federal governments to do anything significant for them.

Newsletter - One of the things that distresses me now that I'm in Washington and see things from this perspective is how many significant news events are reported here that go either unreported or distorted for political reasons in local papers. Additionally there are many "inside" stories that are unreported both places. I wonder about how much accurate news the typical NAACP executive secretary in Drew, Mississippi gets about the programs that are vital to her and her constituency. I'd like to see a newsletter of Washington-government-New York-Wall Street type news go out to a group of professional civil-rights type workers. It would be very simple in format -- two to four pages -- typed and printed every two weeks. I envision it as being similar to the Prentice-Hall tax letters and similar services. Of course, those publications are profitable because their readers are organized and willing to pay. The type of newsletter I propose would go to an unorganized and impecunious group and would, therefore, have to be heavily subsidized.

Study of Effectiveness of Civil Rights Laws - There are a number of Civil Rights Laws, Title VII of the 1964 Act, in particular which require the agency to attempt to resolve the complaint by "informal means of conference, conciliation, and pursuasion" and upon failing to do so the Attorney General "may" go to Court or the individual can file a civil action himself. This same language and a similar procedure is in the Age Discrimination Act and the Housing Discrimination Act. I know from first hand knowledge that EEOC estimates that only 5% of those who file complaints with the agency ever file lawsuits and I fear that the percentage under the other two statutes is even worse. I made a pass at EEOC and the Labor Department about them studying this situation, i.e., how many cases are filed, how many go to Court, and why do people not go to Court, how do those who do go get lawyers, is it profitable for the lawyers, etc. I was told by Labor that they had only brought 5 to 10 such cases under the Age Discrimination law and they really had no interest in studying the matter...there being nothing to study! I was further told privately that Labor had no interest in the law (by the former administrator of the section charged with its enforcement).

I then turned to EEOC and found them very receptive to the idea as long as I talked to lawyers in program areas, but found a complete bottleneck with the Director of Administration who would not go for such a matter (EEOC finance a study which is bound to make it look bad? Heaven forbid!). So it looks as if private sources are the only ones for such a deal. Actually it would be a fairly simple study to pull off. I can bypass the Office of Administration and go straight to the Regional Offices where my contacts are pretty good and get the records from them. It's more a clerical job to compile information and then interpret the results than anything else.

I hope I can get to see you when I'm in Atlanta and go over these things and anything else of mutual interest.

Sincerely,

Whitworth Stokes

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Two more unsolicited suggestions, for your new research director...

First, the most cost-effective way of running a research operation such as yours, I would think, is through a team of consultants (journalists and academics, regular and special assignment), working under the supervision of your director. The incentives for high-quality work are high, and yet the system could be operated economically. (You probably are planning to do something like this already.)

Second, while school integration and "the movement" may have been researched to death, other policy areas have barely been touched. Again, let me put in a plug for more study not only of the impact of various kinds of taxation on blacks and lower-income groups,* but also of attitudes toward alternative taxes and of ways to move toward more progressive taxation systems in the South.

Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely,

James Clotfelter

Dear John:

I think your suggestion for South Carolina Council (and for that matter the Atlanta University School of Social Work), to apply for grants from the new Washington based and substantially funded agency, is an excellent one. The name of that new organization is: The Police Foundation, c/o The Ford Foundation, 1015 18th N. W., Suite 700, Washington, D. C. 20036.

I would also be very pleased to discuss with Mrs. Hill ways in which the Ford Foundation might be approached. I don't know how much interest they have in this area, but certainly it would not hurt to explore it.

Warmest regards.

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony

Dear Paul:

Enclosed is a copy of a letter I have sent to Paul Matthies and Ginger Hill. Before I left Atlanta, Moreland Smith and I conferred with Mrs. Hill concerning the possibility of community planning establishing joint venture with the School of Social Work to provide training for planners. I am not sure if this idea was followed up but recently I have encouraged her to explore the possibility of some funding through a recent Ford Foundation Grant for police-community relations and possibly criminal justice generally.

If there is no such grant, I wonder what the possibility of having you to have somebody talk to the School about the availability of Ford Foundation funds for local schools to participate in development of training and other supports for public agencies.

Sincerely,

John O. Boone

Dear Ginger:

Mr. Paul Matthies, Director of the Council on Human Relations of South Carolina, has asked me to locate a student of criminology or corrections to participate in a two year program with the primary purpose of assessing the State's Criminal Justice Agencies. Unfortunately I am not acquainted with very many people with specilities in the area of criminology and corrections per se. Furthermore I do not believe that one needs special training in criminology or corrections in order to work in the system of criminal justice in any role (people or evaluating agencies).

I am convinced that many of our problems are related to the tendency of leaders in the field to advocate special training for one who would deal with corrections or criminals. Most of the people who are in prison are poor whites and blacks who are social misfits because of the illness of society. They are in trouble because of the same pressures and stress that attribute to behavior and deviance other than criminality. Consequently what we need is intelligent and sensitive individuals who have some appreciation of the social sciences and/or group dynamics and systems to work in the field.

I trust that you will have a student finishing in June who might wish to make an application to participate in the project that Mr. Matthies offers. It is my opinion that it would be a very good beginning experience for a newly graduated social worker.

Mr. Matthies has indicated that he would like for the person to have at least an A.B. Degree. Keeping this in mind, if you have no students available, perhaps one of the Deans of the Undergraduate Schools could recommend a particularly good experience for an undergraduate student who plans eventually to enter the field.

Mr. Matthies has offices at 1420 Lady Street, Columbia, South Carolina. We are advising him that you may be able to help him find an appropriate person for his project.

I alluded to some ideas in my last letter about the possibility of the School's program for enhancing the skills of public agency workers, especially corrections. As you know, the salaries are notoriously low and of course this will attribute to poor standards and the reluctance for students to enter the field. I mentioned that the Ford Foundation had recently provided a large sum of money which was designed to do something in the area of police-community relations and felt that possibly this could be extended to include innovations in connection with a program that was designed to promote community corrections. I promised Katherine Brisbane that I would find out who was the prime mover behind the opportunity in Atlanta, and I had heard that Ex-Mayor Ivan Allen was chairman of some group that had control of these funds. I am sending a note to Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council requesting that he let you know if there are any funds available that would enable the School of Social Work to become more viably involved in community training and leadership programs that might have a bearing on criminal justice or any other acute community social problem for that matter.

Dear Paul:

Enclosed is a copy of a letter I have sent to Mrs. Genevieve Hill, Dean, Atlanta School of Social Work, asking her to help us to locate someone for your new program.

Frankly speaking, I think you would be better off getting somebody who is not a criminologist or who is not especially skilled in corrections to participate. This opinion is reflected in my letter to Mrs. Hill. What you need in my opinion is an individual with a very strong sense of community and concern with warmth and compassion and a sincere interest in change for the benefit of the people. She will have a graduating class within a few weeks and the colleges of Atlanta will also offer some promise..

May I suggest that you write to Mrs. Hill if your contact with Mr. Roy Kendall was not productive.

Please forgive this inexcusable delay in responding to your inquiry. I do not know of the new press being formed in Mississippi. Dear Paul Anthony:

Am writing for information and suggestions. Do you have address of the new press in Mississippi referred to in the letter from North Carolina enclosed? What about the director or editor? What suggestions do you have relevant to the proposal of Matthew Hodgson?

There was an interminable delay in processing the manuscript at N.C. Press. Unfortunately it happened to be there when that Press changed its director and editor. Leslie Phillabaum, former editor-in-chief, in 1969 advised me to revise the manuscript after which he would be glad to give it a second evaluation. On April 16, 1970, he wrote about leaving and the change of directors on July 1 but reassured us with "I am sure he (new director) will be eager to have the opportunity of reviewing the revised version of the manuscript."

Matthew Hodgson, the new director, on August 25 did ask us to send the revised document. This we did on August 31. The enclosed letter (copy), dated March 25, 1971, was our first information as to the fate of the manuscript.

We have been around the mulberry bush a good many times. Maybe we have covered all possibilities for publication. But despite intervening events the materials still seem relevant and important. Recent ferment catalyzed by Nixon et al has brought to the surface most of the basic issues confronted in Arkansas in the fifties. What can you suggest?

Sincerely,

Nat

Dear Mr. Griswold:

First, let me apologize for not having written to you at an earlier date regarding the revision of your manuscript, SECOND RECONSTRUCTION IN LITTLE ROCK.

For the past several months the Press has been in the process of reorganization, with the result that we haven't been able to operate in an atmosphere of certainty.

As for your own work, I have come to the conclusion, albeit reluctantly, that it could not be published successfully by The University of North Carolina Press. By "successfully" I mean that I do not believe that we could sell the requisite number of copies to recover that part of our investment essential to the well-being--even the existence--of a scholarly press. Public interest in the 1956 occurrences in Little Rock was of course intense and wide-spread. Since that time, however, many cities in the South and elsewhere have witnessed the integration of their public school systems, sometimes with problems akin to those in Little Rock. As a result, interest in the various controversies centered about the integration of Black citizens in Southern communities has become diffuse and to some extent regionalized. I realize, of course, that the aftermath of the 1956 (and later) struggles in Arkansas constitutes the main and perhaps the most important part of your work, which by the way, I found to be extremely interesting. In all candor, I must confess to you that because of my wide acquaintanceship in Arkansas--and my knowledge of the politics of that State--your work was more interesting to me than to some of my colleagues.

COPY

My suggestion is that you submit your manuscript either to the Louisiana State University Press or to the new press being formed by the several colleges and universities in Mississippi. Their geographical proximity--and intimate knowledge of local markets--would enable them to promote your book more successfully than we could from this side of the Appalachians and the Mississippi! Good books make their way no matter who publishes them, but there is a distinct advantage in this instance of attempting to place your manuscript with a publisher who figuratively speaking is on the spot.

I wish you every success in this venture. If I can be of assistance to you, please do not hesitate to call upon me.

Sincerely yours,

Matthew Hodgson
Director

Dear Miss Rothe:

Regrettably, SRC does not have funds for a proposal such as you outlined, although clearly the idea has merit.

I shall speak to Dr. Rooks at VEP, although I trust you have heard from him by now, or will shortly.

You should know that a film-making organization called Rediscovery Productions, Inc., directed by Tracy Sugarman, 2 Halfmile Common, Westport, Connecticut, has just released a film on Andy Young's campaign last summer. You might find it interesting to view that film, and you might even explore whether or not they would have funds, or possibly be interested in a joint venture, since the Young film is at least the second one related to the subject which they have done. I hope you are successful in finding the necessary funds for the project.

Dear Mr. Anthony,

Upon the advice of Marvin Wall I am sending the enclosed proposal for a documentary film on Charles Evers' Campaign for Governor of Mississippi to you in hopes that the Southern Regional Council will be interested in using it in their activities, and in funding the filming. He mentioned that several years ago a color documentary was funded by SRC and felt that it was out of date now and should be updated by the Evers campaign documentary. I have already begun working on this film and hope to return early in June for the voter registration drive taking place around the state, so the need for firm financial backing is critical. Unfortunately many of the government agencies who should be involved in this sort of undertaking have found their hands (or budgets) tied by the Nixon administration.

At the Nominating Convention in Jackson on April 18 we made a slide/sound presentation, which depicts Fanny Lou Hamer, Aaron Henry, and other individuals present, and I have been using this presentation as preliminary background in looking for funding, since most of the people up here have little or no acquaintance with Mississippi politics or Charles Evers. It also serves the purposes of showing what kind of work we can do (it was completed one week following the convention) and providing a sample of the audio and visual material to be incorporated in the documentary. This slide presentation can easily be made into a filmstrip for use in educational packages by the Southern Regional Council.

I am most anxious to meet with you and discuss the Evers documentary further, and hope we can arrange a meeting within the near future either here in Washington or Atlanta. I can be reached at 301-454-3016 days, and 270-3992 evenings. Marvin Wall suggested I send a separate copy of the proposal to VEP, which I have done c/o Dr. Rooks. Perhaps you can get together to arrange an appropriate meeting for both of you. I'll be looking forward to hearing from you, and from Dr. Rooks.

OUTLINE OF THE CHARLES EVERS DOCUMENTARY

The opportunity to document the first challange of a black man for the Governorship of a southern state passed last year. Dr. John Cashin, in his campaign in Alabama, was unable to interest the several agencies he approached in sponsoring a film of the National Democratic Party of Alabama's campaign. Cashin lost, but not without swelling the roll of black registered voters and electing 4 black sheriffs and 17 other offices in the state that elected George Wallace its governor. Without a filmed document, the Cashin challange is rapidly fading into obscurity. The lessons which could have been learned from studying the Cashin campaign are now about to be learned over again in Mississippi.

On April 18, 1971, Mayor Charles Evers began his campaign for Governor of Mississippi. Evers, with the international reputation he has earned as Mayor of Fayette, is making the first serious challange to any state's leadership, much a less a southern state. Evers, like Cashin, is running with black leaders from around the state seeking other positions important to black political articulation. In 1971 it would be a grave mistake to let the Evers campaign go undocumented. Charles Evers' campaign for the Governorship of Mississippi is racial and political history which will have lasting impact for Mississippi and for the nation.

WHO WILL SEE THE EVERS DOCUMENTARY?

A host of academic specialists will view the film as educational material pertinent to their disciplines. Political scientists, sociologists, historians, and lawyers, to name a few, will have considerable interest in this documentary which relates to their disciplines. More important than those with occupational or intellectual interests, is the vast cross-section of society that will find in the Evers campaign all the elements necessary for a stimulating filmed presentation. Suspense, drama, music, intrigue and violence are all present in Mississippi politics and surpass in real life the Hollywood box office imagination.

A major value of the Evers documentary would be the plugging of the gap left by northern/urban media in its failure to adequately describe southern black politics. The 6 o'clock news cannot help but leave us with misconceptions of southern rural culture. A black man's campaign for Governorship of a southern state is a milestone in race relations and will be reported for its most sensational elements by New York and Washington-based reporters on 2 day visits to Mississippi. Obviously a more sensative approach is necessary if the general public is to overcome media stereotyping and attain some degree of understanding of the much-maligned South. A feature length film (52 minutes), from the start of the campaign at the nominating convention, climaxing with the election, is the only way the vastness of the state and the struggle can realistically be captured.

A secondary information role to be filled by the Evers' documentary is the creation of visual material depicting actual black political participation. The need for such material to continue stimulating black political activity is overwhelming. The 1969 Tax Reform Act has curtailed much of the work in this direction conducted by civil rights organizations engaged in voter education and voter registration drives by threatening their tax exempt status. As a result, voter education now has to be carried out largely by the politicians themselves. A documentary of the Evers campaign would necessarily include these facts, as well as the details of registration, sample ballots, the Primary, poll watching, and mock elections. This footage is of tremendous value in the south for voter education, and is more appropriate than printed matter for high illiteracy areas. Yet in the context of a documentary film it does not violate the tax reform act. Prints should be made available to organizations engaged in civil rights and to groups who fund heavily in this area. For the supporters of better race relations in the South the Evers documentary will show what can happen, and inspire their continued support for the long road ahead.

HOW IS IT TO BE MADE?

A large movie crew is undesirable and unnecessary. For the most part 2 or 3 people can capture the campaign activity with a 16 mm sound camera, a 16 mm camera without sound, 35 mm still cameras, and sound equipment. The documentary of a political campaign lends itself well to a variety of media forms, and should not be sound synchronized throughout. The music of gospel choirs at mass meetings, campaign speeches, strategy sessions, and interviews are so dramatic in themselves that audio portions of the film will in many instances surpass the visual for entertainment, as well as historical and educational value. Videotapes of newscasts will be included in the Evers documentary to provide perspective for a national audience which will in many cases have no earlier acquaintance with Mississippi politics beyond what they "heard on the news". Similarly, slide overlays of newspaper headlines taken periodically during the campaign reflect Mississippi establishment attitudes in contrast to national news, and the campaign momentum, in a media form that is both familiar yet in this case distinctly southern. The South's reverance of womanhood reaches its peak during the summer months when the Jackson daily paper features a color photograph of a Mississippi queen on the front page...a constant reminder that regardless of what news has occurred on that date, southern tradition prevails.

SCRIPT

The duration of the campaign necessitates spreading out the filming over the summer months and up to the elections on October 12 and November 2. The tentative schedule for filming the candidates as they travel around Mississippi, and related campaign activity is as follows:

April 18, Democratic Nominating Convention

June 9-16, Voter Registration drive. The final week of voter registration activity prior to the deadline for registration to be eligible to vote in the October Primary. Focus will be on counties with heavy black population and counties currently re-registering all voters. This drive involves local NAACP and FDP organization, and college student volunteers drawn to Mississippi by Evers' college speaking tours.

Mid-August, 2 weeks (to be scheduled according to campaign activity). Filming of the major white candidates facing off prior to the primary, and Evers' campaign. Background footage of mid summer activity such as rodeos, farm shows, beauty contests, and state fairs.

October 5-12: filming all major candidates in final week before open primary, and follow up on winners. The recent court decision overturning the Mississippi State Legislature's ruling that all candidates, including independants, had to run in the primary now gives Evers the option of either seeking the full Democratic Party slot on the ballot in the primary, or running as an independant in November. Should he choose the latter course, the one most often cited as his best chance to win, the October primary race will be a heated contest among the white candidates. The 5 declared candidates who oppose Evers to date have widely differing views on race relations and the issue of how to campaign against the only black candidate will be the major emphasis prior to the primary.

October 26-November 2: Filming the major candidates during the week prior to the General Election. This includes mock elections, voter education workshops, and the election itself. We plan to follow first-time voters through registration, voter education and the election. The film will include platforms of the winner and losers, and a feeling of the immediate impact of the election around the state.

Mr. Johnson has worked with FilmMakers, Inc. in Chicago, one of the midwest's leading film producers, and done freelance work in Chicago and Washington. He attended the Illinois Institute of Technology where he majored in photography, and served in Viet Nam as a combat photographer from 1967-68. Currently Mr. Johnson is a photographer with the Government Printing Office. His photography appears in the monthly house organ for the Government Printing Office and countless publications issued by the government. Mr. Johnson recently illustrated the promotional brochure for the soon-to-be released government pamphlet "Letters and Documents of Richard M. Nixon."

John Philibert

Mr. Philibert's diversified interests in media art have led him as far away as Andreaki, Alaska, where he spent 2 years filming an Eskimo fishing village. His photography has appeared in REALITES and other leading journals, and he has illustrated publications for Viking Press including "The Kennedy Years," Arnold Nicholson's "Houses in American History," and Steinbeck's "America and Americans." Mr. Philibert is the Assistant Director of Motion Pictures for the Smithsonian National Museum, and since 1969 he has been Instructor of Filmmaking and Photography for the Smithsonian Associates in Washington.

Nancy Larraine Rothe

A graduate of Syracuse University, where she studied Journalism and Political Science, Miss Rothe began working in Mississippi last summer as a Volunteer in Fayette with Mayor Evers. She has participated in voter registration and designed voter education material for use in Mississippi. She worked with the Jimmy Smith Mayoral campaign in Port Gibson Mississippi, and the Melvin Robinson Sheriff's campaign in Shelby County (Memphis) Tennessee in addition to Charles Evers' current race for Governor of Mississippi. She has done free-lance writing and photography for several underground publications and the College Press Service. Miss Rothe is presently a participant in the Urban Information Specialist Project, a pilot program at the University of Maryland designed to equip professionals to work as information specialists with the informationally deprived. Following completion of her thesis, which discusses information problems of southern politics, she expects her MS this August.

Consultants and Audio technicians are to be added to the personnel named above during the course of filming. The importance of the audio portion of the documentary, in particular the use of music and location background sound, requires an audio technician with a musical background and knowledge of electronics and sound mixing. It is also anticipated that the final days of campaigning will require additional cameras and sound to capture the last push of the candidates around the state.

A quick, private, epic idea, inspired by long accumulation plus current series on Atl Constitution on Georgia school deseg:

Why don't you secretly influence Jimmy Carter to really make a name for himself by going on statewide tv and saying:

Everyone's upset about schools - had bad year and rumor and folk lore grow that it'll get worse. Supreme Court bus ruling et al. Yes, I know of the fights, the unreasonable pressures, deteriorating educational process, etc etc.

School administrators, principals and teachers often face absolutely impossible situation.

On the other hand troubles really less than could be when realize how unequal separate was. It hurts, yes, but it is price of neglect.

Furthermore, we have marvelous opportunity. Look at the affirmative examples and build to those.

Then imply we will finally have moral superiority over north. Using advantage of past when some communication between races went on, we can lay basis for proper and prospering society in good, old fashioned American non-hippie way.....

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Thank you for sending me a copy of the "new strategy" for the SRC.

In addition to the suggestions made in my two earlier letters, relating to use of outside resources and to meshing research with "action" programs, reading the report prompts two further unsolicited suggestions. They are: (1) the state chapters of the Lamar Society now being formed might prove useful allies in field investigation, depending on the problems chosen for "major focus" at any particular time; and (2) university student interns might make up part of the field investigative teams you require, at minimal cost, if proper arrangements for academic credit (and perhaps guidance) could be worked out with faculty at their schools.

Certainly, the proposals in this report are excellent. In the research area, I particularly like the idea of concentrating your resources into fewer and more systematic studies.

Dear John:

The North Carolina Council is not dead; it is just resting. The situation is basically similar to the interim between 1948 when Cy Johnson left the North Carolina Interracial Commission and 1954-1955 when you all started the North Carolina Council.

We do a monthly mailing furnished us by SRC. Until my move to Virginia (three weeks ago), I handled this. We are now in the process of switching it to a Board member in Greensboro, North Carolina.

NCCHR is operative but only very weakly. Any ideas?

Sincerest personal regards,

I am sure that you have a copy of Paul Anthony's letter to me, a copy of which is enclosed.

It would be good if you could develop a Criminal Justice Continuing Education Program (Primarily for Police) along the lines of the opportunity you have provided for welfare workers in the past.

Certainly I am willing to do what I can to help should you decide to pursue this idea.

Dear Members of Resurgens:

This is a reminder of the Resurgens' Atlanta cocktail buffet at the home of "Hermie" and Cecil Alexander on Friday, June 18, 1971. The Alexanders live at 2322 Mount Paran Road, N. W., Atlanta, and the party will run from 6:30 to 8:30 P.M.

This is a wonderful opportunity for we Resurgens members to invite guests and friends and each member is especially encouraged to bring at least one guest in addition to ones spouse or date.

Again, we are most grateful to the Alexanders for affording us the use of their home, which is a unique circular house and has been written up in several national magazines.

Costs are $5.00 per person or $7.00 per couple, including unlimited refreshments of all sorts and a cocktail buffet. It is a perfect opportunity to take someone out on the "town" for a nominal charge of $5.00 per person or $7.00 per couple.

For those of you who have not responded by post card, please do so right away.

Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Pursuant to the President's June 11 statement on Federal policies relative to equal housing opportunity, the Department of Housing and Urban Development has announced its intention to put into effect a number of procedures to meet the President's goals.

In view of the vital interest that you and other civil rights leaders have in equal housing opportunity, and of the special interest you have in HUD's procedures, I am calling a meeting to explain these implementing procedures to you in detail. The meeting will be held in the Departmental Conference Room, U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D. C., at 2 p.m., June 23, 1971.

At that time we will explain in detail and discuss the following:

-- Criteria for evaluating nondiscriminatory location requirements of Section 235, Section 236, rent supplement and public housing;

-- Equal housing opportunity requirements in connection with determining eligibility for community development programs, i.e. urban renewal, water and sewer grants, etc.;

-- Affirmative marketing requirements for FHA-subsidized and unsubsidized housing; and

-- HUD-GSA guidelines for assuring the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in connection with the building and leasing of Federal facilities.

Because of lack of space, we are requesting that the attendance from each organization be limited to one person.

Please excuse the short notice for this invitation, but I am sure we all share an equal commitment to implementing our program at the earliest possible date. Thank you for your consideration. I hope to see you Wednesday.

Sincerely,

George Romney

Dear Mr Wood,

I am sorry. I realize that I haven't written before. This is my last day in the United Stqtes this time. I am leaving for Ecuador and Peru tomorrow and returning to Norway late late July.
I really regret that I didn' write you before. I don't want to appologize. I had ten really interesting days in the South in March. I have given several speeches about the situqtion already in Appleton and my slides from Auburn gave a deep impression in Appleton.
I came home from Alabama wih a new attitude and I think I could better understand the conservative white m in the South better. I didn't realize before I got home that one of my best friends from Lawrence University is from Auburn. Only one or two weeks after I came home from the South I was asked to represent my homecountry of Norway in the National Model United Nations 71. I aws in ghe Economic and Social Council and I kept in close contact with the Norwegian Mission to United Nations. As you hopefully know, the president of the General Assemble used to be f5om Norway Dr Ed. Hambro.
The last three weeks have been very hard fiishing up several courses at the University in Appleton. Just now I am at a mission caravan from the Presbyterian Church in Wisconsin working in the black community in Albany. This was the target city of the movement in the early sixties, I have been told. We do tutoring, recreationleading etc etc. The Misister of the church is a young black guy, Rev. Oliver Brown. A very nice person. His intensions have been to make his church to a community-center for the black community. It looks like he has been succesful. If you ever make to Norway, let me know. I would be very happy to help you out.

Mrs. Deborah Greenberg

Dear Mrs. Greenberg:

This letter is written at the suggestion of Mr. Paul Anthony of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta. I had approached him about a project involving some inmates of the Brushy Mountain State Prison in Petros, Tennessee who have organized an internal newspaper and radio station and are looking to expand their own activities since they have never had a great deal of success in convincing state officials to provide them with those things they felt were needed.

I initially got into this area because of my representation of a black inmate who got ninety-nine years for the murder of a white policeman in Nashville. He was sent to Brushy Mountain which is the maximum security prison in the Tennesse system. It is located in the mountains of East Tennessee and is not within fifty miles of any major city, so even TV reception is poor. The prison was first located there because it was on a rich coal seam and for many years the only industry of the place was the mining of coal for other state prisons and hospitals. The mining operation has now been terminated, but the location is still as remote and escape proof as ever. Consequently, the prison now only houses long term offenders -- men with over ten year sentences convicted of felonies. The greater percentage of inmates with rape, murder and armed robbery convictions are at Brushy Mountain.

My client and two of his co-defendants are first offenders who had completed most of their college education prior to conviction. The details of the conviction are another story and not germane here, but it is sufficient to say that they are not "typical" inmates. Shortly, after their arrival they started looking into matters and taking steps to make the place a little more livable. At that time the Democratic state administration was in a "lame-duck" status since Tennessee had elected its first Republican Governor in one hundred years. Therefore, the Warden, who might have squelched some of the ideas if he was going to keep his job, let the inmates start a newspaper and a radio show. When

When the Republican appointed Warden came in in January of this year, he was in the position of having to continue some of these programs that he might not have approved in the first place.

At any rate, the inmates have done a number of things in the past year which indicate that they have not given up on themselves. A copy of the newspaper is enclosed. Having received each issue, I think I can judge that it has improved greatly with each issue. As a central means of communication that did not exist before it now serves as a vehicle for organizing the prisoners in many ways. The "radio show" is not really that, but is a regular program that goes out over one of the channels that are piped into each cell to individual headsets. There are three such channels and previously the prison authorities would simply tune them into three local radio stations and the person would have his choice. Now for several hours each night there is a locally broadcast music show. Again the possibilities for using this as a means of organizing and publicizing activities is very great.

There was a successful jazz concert at the prison on May 30 which was jointly stimulated by the editor of the paper and the announcer on the radionstation. There are moves under way to promote a Johnny Cash appearance at the prison by these same inmates. Through a strange network of friendships the radio announcer has been able to get several tapes and albums from radio stations in Nashville, Knoxville, and Cincinnati. The Episcopal Church in Oak Ridge is now raising money for new tape and recording equipment which will greatly expand the capacity of the station, so that they can tape programs for future playing.

On the last page of the Communicator you will see the Legal Corner. At the present time this is simply a page for individual prisoners to write in a legal question to an inmate who either answers it from his own "jailhouse lawyer" knowledge or attempts to get an answer from the Legal Aid Clinic at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. There is a plan to have some students from the clinic work at the prison for course credit starting in the Fall handling legal matters for the inmates. It is hoped that these activities will not be limited to matters of habeas corpus, but all of the other legal problems that beset inmates and their families -- divorce, taxes, welfare, wills, voting, etc.

But, the important thing is that ALL of this activity so far has been the work of a handful of inmates who have had the ideas and carried them out. The future prospects are good, but there comes a time when energy is not all that is needed. Money is necessary to carry out the ideas that energy has created. Later this summer the newspaper is going to suggest that the various cellblocks organize themselves democratically and elect representatives to a jail council which will entertain ideas for projects from inmates and attempt to establish priorities with the administration. Hopefully, they will be able to raise money for certain projects. At this time they wish to remain as independant of the State administration and the Warden's office as they can. Of course, they realize that these authorities hold absolute power over them and they do not wish to antagonize them needlessly. On the other hand they do not have any desire to see politicians make a lot of mileage out of their activities and them not obtain any leverage in the process. Make no mistake about it -- all these men want out. They are not attempting to make Brushy Mountain a better place because they want to stay there. They are trying to get paroled.

At this point the last thing these men need is a lot of money. Iffthey were to get some large appropriation it would probably be fatal since neither they nor the State would know what to do with it. However, they might over a period of time develop a program which could be the recipient of a major LEAA grant. At this time I serve as an unpaid advisor to the "group" since they are unable to physically carry their ideas outside the wall. It cost approximately $150 each time I go to the prison and another $150 traveling to other places that those visits lead to. Counting in about 3 to 5 days of professional time each month this is about $800 per month. At the moment their immediate need is the radio equipment. When the Legal Aid Clinic starts they are going to need books. Although the library now has several thousand dollars worth of great novels, it does not have a complete set of the Tennessee Code Annotated (I think Volume Seven of the Code gets you out of jail quicker than Moby Dick and so do they).

What I would propose is a grant of $5000-10,000 for six months to a year to handle the short range projects referred to above. To receive it the inmates would elect a representative group to administer the funds. Since they are not "citizens" they would have to grant a power of attorney to an outside group who could form a non-profit corporation to receive and disburse the funds. This would cover the travel and professional expenses of any advisors to the group and any cash outlays for equipment, records, tapes, or books that the governing body wished spend.

Please let me hear from you if your foundation would be interested in anything of this sort. If you have any suggestions as to someone else I might contact I would appreciate your doing so.

Sincerely,

Whitworth Stokes

Dear Sirs,

It has come to our attention that during the spring quarters of 1966 and 1967 four of our students worked in your organization as a part of the Kalamazoo College Career Service Program. Since you have participated in our program in the past we hope that you will consider again participating in the program.

In case your personnel has changed I would like to briefly explain our program. During the spring of the student's sophomore year he participates in the Career Service Program. The objectives of this program are: 1) to provide students with experiences in jobs related to their academic work and to further career interest; 2) to develop independence and self-reliance; 3) to develop a sense of responsibility; and 4) to contribute to the objectives of their employers. I have, also, enclosed material that may further explain our program.

During the spring quarter of 1972 the students will be on the job from March 27 through June 9. If you believe our program could supplement yours, all I need is a short description of the job and what the pay will be. Pay can be per hour, per week, or per month, all we ask is that the students make enough to cover board, room and incidentals. I have enclosed an employer intent form for this information.

I'm sure that in the past you found our students capable. I would hope that you would join our program for the spring of 1972.

I trust that we may hear from you in the not too distant future and that you will return the enclosed intent form for 1972.

Dear Paul:

I hope you will forgive my long delay in answering your letter of May 5, 1971. As soon as I returned from the Kennedy Luncheon in Washington the pace in my court and elsewhere quickened to prevent me from writing.

Senator Edward Kennedy and Senator Jacob Javits held a sub-committee hearing on O.E.O - Special Impact III Programs here in Brooklyn. Restoration was host to the Committee in the newly renovated Sheffield Farms Building in the midst of Bedford Stuyvesant. I am pleased to report that we are considered to have done very well in the effective expenditure of more than $20 million dollars in public and private funds over these 4 years. We have made an impact on the problem but the funds are hopelessly inadequate to cope with the problems of 1/2 million people, most of whom are just above the poverty level.

Whenever you visit New York again, I urge you to look over the enterprises of Restoration and favor me with your candid judgment whether anything we are doing will serve the people through and to the year 1999.

With every good wish, I am

Sincerely yours,

Tom

Profile: Appropriations for Farmers Home for fiscal 1972 clear the House. The HUD money bill is close in line. Emergency Employment Act made headway -- conferees hope they appeased Nixon.

The FmHA money bill: Water and sewer programs are the darling child of this Congress. Rep. Bob Stephens of Georgia was successful in doubling the appropriation for HUD's water-sewer grant program -- raising the House Appropriations Committee's request from $350 million to $700 million. The Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee, chaired by Mississippi Democrat Jamie Whitten, stayed close to Administration requests for the FmHA housing programs. Next step is the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee for Agriculture. Groups are pressuring that Subcommittee and its Chairman, Wyoming Democrat Gale McGee, for some home repair and farm labor housing grant funds.

* Some $56 million of this fiscal 1971 money was frozen by the White House.

HUD appropriations: The House Appropriations Subcommittee on HUD, with its new chairman, Democrat Ed Boland of Massachusetts, put $10 million less into 235 and 236 than the Administration requested. The programs each got $165 million. The House committee recommended $55 million for rent supplements ($5 million under the Nixon request), and put $3 million each into Section 237 credit counseling and the Section 106 (b) seed loan fund. House action is expected before July 1.

OEO extension: The Senate Subcommittee on Poverty has held markup sessions on S.2007, a bill to extend OEO for two years. The bill authorizes $2.3 billion for poverty programs, compared to $2.08 billion appropriated last year. Another subcommittee markup is set for July 8. Sponsors hope to move the bill through full committee and to the floor by mid-July, and hope for Senate action before the August recess. The subcommittee bill rules out further transfer of OEO programs to other agencies without approval of Congress. The Senate subcommittee has adopted an amendment proposed by Senators Kennedy and Javits, combining Title III rural loans and Title I-D speical impact programs into a single Community Development section. The section provides funds, technical assistance and loan guarantees for locally-owned Community Development Corporations. The corporations could, among other things, receive sponsor funds from HUD (Section 106) and could sponsor 221,235, and 236 projects. The amendment also spares rural cooperative loans from extinction.

The amendment authorizes $60 million the first year, double that the second year.

Markup in the House is scheduled for July 12.

The Labor-HEW appropriations bill, moving toward markup in the House, does not contain funds for OEO. If the OEO extension bill is enacted before the Senate acts on Labor-HEW appropriations, the Senate may add OEO to that massive money bill. Otherwise, a special OEO money bill may be necessary.

Appalachian Regional Commission: A bill extending the life of the Appalachian Regional Commission has cleared conference and is waiting for White House action. The crash public works program attached to the bill makes Presidential approval uncertain. The bill carries an amendment giving HUD a program of grants of up to 10% of total project costs to cover certain site development costs. Those grants are limited to projects under 221, 235, and 236. Some sources expect the bill will be vetoed because of the public works provision. If that happens, the same bill -- but without the public works -- will probably get speedy Congressional attention.

LATE NOTE: The President has vetoed the bill (6/29).

Emergency Employment Act: Senate action was expected as this issue goes to press on the conference report on the Emergency Employment Act of 1971. The compromise measure provides 200,000 jobs in community service type work. Housing, according to committee staffers, is still eligible. House conferees insisted that the jobs be made available only to governmental units -- striking a Senate provision to allow non-profit corporations to hire personnel with Emergency Employment funds. Conferees were hopeful that their compromises made the bill satisfactory to the President, who has threatened a veto. Local public housing authorities, as subsidiary units of government, would be eligible. No funds are available under the bill for construction materials or tools, although 15% of the $2.25 billion measure could be used for training or certain administrative expenses. Applications for funds under the bill, if it becomes law, will be handled by regional manpower administrators of the Department of Labor.

Over the rainbow: President Nixon's revenue sharing and departmental reorganization plans continue to get scrutiny on Capitol Hill, although it's generally conceded that their prospects are dim. The House Ways and Means committee has been holding hearings on general revenue sharing, while Senate Government Operations Committee has been examining proposals to create four superdepartments in the executive branch of the federal government.

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking Committee has been examining proposals to give troubled Lockheed corporation a federal loan guarantee. Among the bills under consideration is S.580, a development bank proposal by Committee Chairman Sparkman. The bill, as originally introduced, included the provision of loans and loan guarantees to non-profits, public agencies, contractors and developers for construction of housing financed by FHA, VA, or FmHA. The funds apparently are seed and interim construction funds, not mortgage funds.

Housing Act of 1972?: Last year the Administration tried for a housing bill which would have consolidated roughly 40 or 50 housing programs into eight. A similar bill was reintroduced in mid-June, S.2049. It would create four basic housing programs with cost maximums set by area prototypes, and would establish new subsidy formulas for housing assistance programs. Introducing the bill, Chairman Sparkman expressed concern over the sheer volume of reform legislation before the Congress this session, said he was not "altogether sanguine" about early action on the bill in the Senate. Hearings there at the earliest would be in late July. The House Banking Committee will likely wait until after the August recess before taking up any housing legislation.

Sugarcane worker housing: Senator Stevenson June 24 announced that he would attempt to amend the Sugar Act, the bill which regulates and subsidizes the sugar industry, to require certain minimum housing standards for sugarcane workers. Stevenson is chairman of the Subcommittee on Migratory Labor. The Stevenson amendment, S.2142, would require sugar growers to provide worker housing which meets the minimum standards of the Wagner-Peyser act. Those provisions include overcrowding, structural and minimum water facilities requirements. The Senate Finance Committee is handling the Sugar Act legislation.

Dear Paul:

I have decided to accept the position of Director of the Internship Programs at the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation in Princeton, New Jersey. This decision was made somewhat sooner than I had anticipated, but this particular position compared exceptionally well against the criteria I had selected. Therefore it is logical and prudent for me to accept and begin planning ahead.

I appreciate greatly your time and interest and wish you continued success. I hope we can remain in contact.

I was glad to be able to see you, and especially pleased to have a visit with various members of your staff and to learn of the programs and activities you are carrying on, which we need to know about. I am always impressed by the dedication and ~~confidence~~ competence of the people at Southern Regional Council.

Dear Mr. Dabbs:

I have just come upon your book Civil Rights in Recent Southern Fiction. It is, certainly, a very broad study and a good one. I especially enjoyed your piece on Walker Percy.

Since you do not list her, I would like to call to your attention a Mississippi novelist I think you would do well to read, if you have not already.

Berry Morgan is a native and resident of Port Gibson, Mississippi. Her first and only novel is entitled Pursuit and it received the Houghton Mifflin Prize the year before Robert Stone's Hall of Mirrors, and one or two years before Willie Morris's first book .

I was very surprised to find your collection not including Pursuit. Mrs. Morgan, an old and dear friend of my family (though no relation), is a very fine writer and has been under contract with the New Yorker for the past three and a half years. Her most recent short story, The Passing, appears in this week's edition. It deals with two of the characters in Pursuit. Walker Percy has called this novel one of the best in the modern South, and calls it, I believe, the "best since Flannery O'Connor."

I am very interested in your book, which I must admit I have not finished entirely. I am also quite interested in your opinions on Pursuit. I believe it is a very profound statement on Civil Rights, one which certainly should have been included in your study. If you have not read it, would you mind doing so and telling me what you think? I would be very interested in learning your opinion.

Sincerely,

Jason Berry

Dear Paul:

I appreciate your sending us a copy of your letter of resignation of July 20, 1971, and the accompanying memorandum to the members of the Council. This was a difficult step, graciously done, but not made any easier by the poor reporting of our "greatest newspaper."

I'm writing to let you, and through you SRC's Executive Committee, know that the Foundation staff has allocated $330,000 from our next fiscal year's budget for one year of continued general and project support of the Southern Regional Council during this difficult period of transition. This amount is roughly at the same level of support for basic SRC activities that the Foundation has provided during the last few years. Though this letter is not an "official" commitment (the Foundation does not make such official commitments short of the actual approval of a grant), it does constitute a commitment by the staff of this Division to recommend a grant of roughly this size so long as SRC continues to make reasonable progress toward reconstituting its program and staff.

I know we'll be in close touch over the forthcoming months, but I want to take this occasion to express my personal best wishes to you during this trying time.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

On behalf of the Bernhard Foundation (the "Foundation") we are pleased to inform you that the Board of Directors of the Foundation has decided to make a grant to your organization in the amount of $1500 for a school desegregation training session.

As I am sure you are aware, the Tax Reform Act of 1969 imposes "expenditure responsibility" on the Foundation with respect to all grants made to organizations other than "publicly supported charities."

Upon receipt by us of (1) the executed ribbon copy of the enclosed agreement, together with any data requested therein, and (2) the execution of the enclosed copy of this letter, indicating that said grant will be used exclusively for the specific purposes herein outlined, a check in payment of said grant will be sent to you.

The Grantee will, upon any change in its aforementioned status, notify the Foundation to such effect.

4. In order to satisfy the Foundation's "expenditure responsibility" as such term is defined in Section 4945(d)(4) and (h) of the Code, with respect to this Grant, and in order to avert the 15% exise tax imposed under Section 4942 of the Code for failure to distribute income, if

Dear Paul,

Summer is a time for putting off things, so I have been slow in writing to you to say how I regret your decision to resign, even though I can understand and respect your reasons.

You have every right to feel that your contribution to the Southern Regional Council has been a tremendous one. To pilot us through such rough seas calls for more than ordinary skills. You have shown them.

Because of our early association and because I was on the committee that recommended your appointment, I have been particularly pleased to work with you. I hope that you will be able to take time now

I shall watch with interest your future work, since I know that you are too young the look to retirement, as I am doing now. So I say, "Well done!" and "Godspeed to whatever you do!"

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Enclosed is a check representing the major portion of our proceeds from the first HUNGER & NATIONAL PRIORITIES DAY. Obviously, this money does not begin to approach the amounts I grandiously mentioned in my letter of April 12, 1971. However, the enclosed check represents part of an effort of 95% of the students at Connecticut College, which was even suprising to me ($500 were also given to a local "hot breakfast" program). Where we fell down was in the lateness of our planning.

The apparatus for the program was not fully shaped until late March, providing, as you can see, inadequate time for a statewide effort to be effectively organized. Hopefully, in this coming year, planning will start in September and maybe we might consider an earlier date (e.g. late April), that would remove H & NPD from the press of national activities that seem destined to occur annually in early May. Any advice that you may have will certainly aid us.

I want you to know that you have our full support, which next year, taking into consideration what we've learned, will be more significant.

Good luck in your efforts.

Sincerely,

Jay B. Levin

MEMORANDUM

To: Lamar Society Members

From: Thomas H. Naylor, Executive Director

Date: September 6, 1971

Plans are well underway for the Southern Regional Growth Board proposed by Terry Sanford at the Lamar Society's annual symposium held in Atlanta this spring. The purpose of the Growth Board is to help promote orderly growth and development in the South. The Advisory Committee of the Southern Regional Growth Board met at Duke University on August 13-14, and substantial progress was made towards the implementation of the Growth Board. H. Brandt Ayers, newly elected President of the Lamar Society, is the Society's representative on this committee. Governors Askew, Carter, Holton, and West sent their top aides to participate in the planning meeting, and Governor Bumpers also has indicated a strong interest in the project. Terry Sanford has invited all of the Southern governors to a meeting at Duke University on October 3-4 to discuss final plans for the Growth Board and its implementation.

The Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Foundation has made a $1,000 contribution to the Lamar Society to be used to defray the cost of planning the Southern Regional Growth Board. The Mary Reynolds Babcock Foundation also has given support to the Growth Board with a $2,000 grant to Duke University's Center for Southern Studies. Proposals have been submitted to various other foundations requesting further financial support.

On September 1, the Board of Directors met in Little Rock, in conjunction with the organization of a Little Rock chapter of the Lamar Society. Governor Bumpers and former Governor Rockefeller invited Arkansans to participate and both attended the meeting.

I am enclosing a pictorial folder from the Atlanta symposium, along with a new listing of the Board of Directors of the Society. Please let us know if you would like to have more copies of these, or if you know of anyone who might be interested in the Society.

Dear Paul:

I have thought long and hard about the meeting of the Southern Regional Council in November, and I have also had a look at my schedule for November, and I am very sorry to have to say that I do not think I can come to the Council this fall.

I want to emphasize that this decision is in no way at all a reflection of any rumored difficulties between the Foundation and the Council. As you know better than nearly anyone, the Foundation has had the greatest respect for what the Council has achieved, and we certainly have no negative pre-judgment on what it may move on to do under your successor. My difficulty is the quite different one that I have already agreed to give several serious talks this fall and seem to be stuck with the fact that I have to be my own draftsman and am faced with limited time.

Sincerely,

McGeorge Bundy

Your letter of September 10 to me brought much excitement, but more than that, a new challenge. I would deem it a unique opportunity to be included as a member of the Council. It will be my distinct pleasure to be of some small service to this dedicated group of citizens.

You most assuredly have my permission to place my name in nomination.

Dear Martha:

The bitterness of your recent communications to the Council surprised and distressed me. Even if a case could be made for your allocations of bias against women - as perhaps a good case could be - the bitterness and shooting from the hip is atypical of all of my previous dealings with you. Your letter about Kitty is a good case in point.

We have had here a very ackward editorial structure. Reece Cleghorn's leaving gave us an opportunity to partially correct this. And, other corrections will follow.

Bob Anderson is now editor of all SRC publications, since we feel there must be coordination by one office for all of these efforts. In the process of that reorganization, Kitty is now the senior staff person responsible for SOUTH TODAY. In fact, for all purposes, the entire contents of that publication will be selected by and edited by Kitty and an associate, who is also a woman. In our eyes, and in hers, I believe we think of this as a desired promotion and a substantial increase in responsibility based on passed performance and production.

I thought of you as a friend and would like to still do so. However, no friend of mine could ever err so badly as to receive from me the kind of curt indictment as is your letter of September 14th.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Paul:

I was disheartened (though not surprised) to see that Kitty Terjen was not made editor of South Today. Not surprised because SRC has such a strong anti-woman bias.

I am willing to grant that it may be unconscious. But for this short-sightedness and insensitivity to continue, with all of the current opportunity for upgrading your awareness, is very discouraging.

Robert Anderson already had two jobs with SRC. Was the necessity for a male editor so desperate that you have to give your males multiple assignments while bypassing the women on your staff?

Sincerely,

Martha

Former U.S. Congressman Al Lowenstein, an Encampment alumnus and Board member, presents his views to one of many Encampment audiences he has inspired to constructive action. Many of the Encampment's alumni are active in vitally important social service-social change positions, and return to Encampments to share their insight and experience.

Since 1946 the 52 six-week summer Encampments for Citizenship have helped more than 4,300 outstanding young men and women of all racial and economic backgrounds prepare for constructive involvement in public affairs. The Encampment's method emphasizes learning by participation – by seeing, doing, and discussion – as well as through lectures and films. Non-profit, non-partisan and non-sectarian, the Encampment's program has drawn high praise from Presidents Kennedy and Johnson as well as from independent educational evaluators and community leaders. Summaries of evaluations are available upon request.

Founded by Algernon D. Black and the American Ethical Union, the Encampment had the warm support of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, for 17 years Chairman of the Encampment Sponsors Committee. New York's Mayor John V. Lindsay is now Sponsors Committee Chairman.

Encampment staff members are highly motivated young teachers, human rights and anti-poverty workers, and former Peace Corps, Teacher Corps and VISTA Volunteers. A majority of the encampers receive full or partial scholarships; recruitment is planned so as to secure a genuine cross-section of promising American youth.

Each Encampment site and program has distinctive features, and each group of encampers and staff join in developing their own program, but in recent Encampments the usual weekly schedule has included two or three days devoted to morning speakers and discussion groups and afternoon specialized workshop meetings; two days of workshop activities in the local community or nearby cities; and a one-day educational fieldtrip. Camp government meetings, films, debates, panel discussions and other camper-planned programs, recreational and cultural activities fill most of the evenings and weekends.

Inquiries and requests for applications may be made on a postage-free card enclosed in this brochure.

"The Encampment for Citizenship . . . has established in the hearts and minds of thousands of young people enduring adherence to fundamental democratic principles. In six-week summer Encampments more than 4,300 young people from throughout the United States and many other countries have been given both specific training and inspiration to go into many forms of public service activity, especially in the areas of human rights, politics, anti-poverty work and international service such as the Peace Corps. The Encampment's work in carrying the cause of freedom to the young will gain increasing numbers of friends as time passes."

MAYOR JOHN V. LINDSAY
Chairman, Encampment Sponsors Committee

What an Encampment for Citizenship IS and IS NOT An Encampment IS . . .

- an educational experience presenting a variety of ideas, people, programs and community activities

- a small community in which everyone can contribute ideas and leadership regardless of age, race, religion or economic background

- an effort to help promising youth to understand—and to prepare themselves to help solve—urgent racial, poverty and international problems

- an unusual program in which staff members are chosen for their demonstrated commitment to their ideals, their willingness to work for them and ability to communicate them

- an opportunity to form lasting friendships with youth of every background — Black, White, Indian, Puerto Rican, Mexican-American and Asian-American; urban and rural, well-to-do and economically disadvantaged, of many religious affiliations and from every part of the United States.

An Encampment IS NOT . . .

- just a "summer vacation" away from home

- a traditional-style woodsy "camp" emphasizing outdoor recreational activities for either upper middle class or "underprivileged" youth

- the place for youth so preoccupied with drugs, personal hang-ups or rebellion they have little interest in helping solve social problems

- a propaganda program aimed at making converts to any particular political or religious point of view

- a confrontation-seeking, political position-taking action organization

1970 Arizona Encampment for Citizenship encampers and staff, at the Southern Arizona School.

The new Arizona Encampment will be held for the second summer at the Southern Arizona School, on the lower slopes of mountains near Sabino Canyon, a half hour's drive northeast from downtown Tucson. The somewhat isolated location helps in building a strong Encampment sense of community, but does not prevent fieldtrips and workshop community activities two or three days a week in Tucson, a rapidly growing city of nearly 300,000 people.

In addition to the dining hall, dorms and classrooms, the Encampment uses the School's new outdoor swimming pool, and has occasional use of a few horses kept at the School. Two school buses and two minibuses provide transportation. Although the dorms are air cooled and the classrooms used by Encampment workshops and discussion groups are more effectively air conditioned, encampers should be prepared for the intense dry heat of Southern Arizona. Applicants for whom hot weather is particularly enervating should choose one of the other Encampment sites.

The diversity of Tucson's population—Mexican-American and Indian as well as black and white—helps assure local speakers and activities for several of the Encampment workshops. Encampers will take part in decisions about places to be visited on the longer weekly fieldtrips, including a decision about whether to make a long travelling-by-night (to avoid the heat) bus trip to northern Arizona to visit Grand Canyon and the Navaho Reservation.

The 1970 Arizona Encampment's 87 encampers were from 16 states, Washington, D.C., the Virgin Islands, Guam and Israel. About half were youth of all racial and economic backgrounds from the New York area.

Although a final list of workshops has not been completed as of this writing, 1971 Arizona Encampment workshops (of 8 to 12 encampers and one staff member each) may deal with Indian Heritage & Social Change; Chicano (Mexican-American) Heritage & Social Change; Black Heritage & Social Change; Population & Environment; Housing, Politics & Community Organization; Tutoring, Head Start & Educational Reform; Youth and Social Problems; and Social Action Drama. Each workshop meets "on campus" two afternoons each week and devotes two full days each week to community activities, sometimes volunteer social service work related to the workshop topic. Campers select their workshops on the opening day of the Encampment, and join with their workshop leader in choosing topics to be given priority within the workshop.

Further details, and biographical data on the Encampment Director and staff members, will be published in May for distribution to applicants. Encampers should plan to bring sleeping bags for fieldtrips.

Montana encampers in the Black Heritage & Social Change workshop prepare puppets to use in African folk tale puppet shows put on for Great Falls youth in the city's summer recreational programs. The group is working in the gym of Heisey Memorial Youth Center, site of the Montana Encampment. The Center and a school next door provide double-deck bunkrooms, bowling alleys and a stage, in addition to dining facilities and the gym.

For the fourth summer, the Montana Encampment for Citizenship will enable youth from throughout the United States to learn, firsthand, about Indian and conservation issues, and to make weekend visits to farms and ranches, to one of the great national parks, and to a major Indian Reservation. Both of the Great Falls sites used since the first Montana Encampment in '68 have been urban, however, so applicants considering the Montana Encampment should not expect a wilderness site. Great Falls (pop. over 70,000) is one of the two largest cities in Montana.

Many of the more than 150 Encampment alumni living in Montana join in leading oneday fieldtrips and other activities, and offer a weekend of hospitality to individual encampers on their farms and ranches. It is expected that again in 1971 there will also be a weekend spent in Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, a "wilderness weekend" of camping led by members of a volunteer search and rescue organization headed by an Encampment alumnus, and a weekend at the Montana Farmers Union camp in the Highwood Mountains.

The 1970 Montana Encampment's 86 encampers and 15 staff were from 16 states, Washington, D.C., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam and Israel.

Who Sponsors the Encampments?

The Encampment for Citizenship, sponsored by the American Ethical Union, is a voluntary organization made possible by the devoted efforts of a Board of Directors which meets monthly in New York.

Abraham P. Kanner, vice president for finance at Maidenform, is chairman of the Encampment Board. Vice Chairmen are Simeon Golar* (New York City Housing Authority chairman), Mrs. Michael Elbert (manpower executive), Morris Kellner (radio-television association executive), Mrs. Jean Kotkin (executive secretary of the American Ethical Union), David Rothenberg* (founder & executive secretary of the prison reform organization The Fortune Society), and Miss Althea Simmons (National Training Director, NAACP). Secretary of the Board: S. Arthur Dembner, Vice President at NEWSWEEK. Treasurer: Mrs. Albert Mannheimer, long a devoted Encampment volunteer.

Honorary Chairman of the Encampment Board is Mrs. Alice K. Pollitzer, whose 100th birthday was observed in conjunction with the Encampment's 25th, last May. Mrs. Pollitzer—affectionately known as Nanny to hundreds of encampers—helped Algernon D. Black establish the Encampment in 1946, when she was 75.

Businessmen Barnett Berch, Paul W. Fink, Milton Goldstein, William F. Haddad*, Alan Kalmus, Walter Lowe, Lawrence S. Mayers, Raymond Marcus, Gordon McCormick, Martin Racine, George Shettle and George Soros;

Other professional men and women Roy Berkeley*, Lester Cobb, Jr., Mrs. Frank Field, Mrs. Alan J. Freedman, Dr. Douglas Kahn, Leonard Kolleeny, Congressman Allard K. Lowenstein, Tyrone E. 1970 Montana encampers unload concrete forms for use by ten low-income local families in a self-help housing project. The 1971 Encampment's Housing, Politics & Community Organization workshop will have the opportunity to continue such work, two days each week.

These 57 encampers and 13 staff members of the 1970 White Plains Encampment for Citizenship represented 16 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, Israel, Mexico and Africa. Led by Co-Directors Sister Kathryn Rutan (a Catholic college political science teacher) and Doug Kelley (EFC executive director and former Peace Corpsman), the staff included Black, White, Puerto Rican and Japanese-American teachers and social change activists, and an African graduate student of international relations at Columbia.

For the fourth summer this Encampment will be housed in the modern building of the Westchester Ethical Humanist Society, on the outskirts of White Plains. The site is just under an hour's drive north from midtown Manhattan (on the Hutchinson Parkway), and five or ten minutes from low-income areas in White Plains where some of the Encampment's workshops do community work. The building provides kitchen and dining facilities, a meeting hall and recreational facilities, showers, and double-deck bunkrooms each housing eight or ten encampers and staff members. A forest preserve and a county-owned outdoor swimming pool are on adjoining property.

A weekly fieldtrip takes encampers to the United Nations, City Hall, cultural institutions in Harlem and elsewhere, to an outstanding drug addiction treatment center, to Wall Street and to labor union headquarters, and on a hike along a Connecticut section of the Appalachian Trail. (Encampers may decide to vary this 1970 list of fieldtrips.) Weekend recreational activities will include trips to beaches, parks, and off-Broadway dramatic productions.

Although a final list of workshops has not been completed as of this writing, the five workshops (of 8 to 12 encampers and one staff member each) may deal with World Affairs; Population and Environment; Housing, Politics & Community Organization; Black & Puerto Rican Heritages & Social Change; and Tutoring, Head Start & Educational Reform. Each workshop meets "on campus" two afternoons each week and devotes two full days each week to community activities.

What it Costs, and How to Apply

The total fee per camper for board, room and tuition in any of the three six-week Encampments is $750. This fee does not include personal spending money ($5 per week is sufficient, and campers are urged not to bring more), nor round-trip transportation from your home to the Encampment site. FULL AND PARTIAL SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE, on the basis of economic need and the applicant's demonstrated interest in social problems.

The attached postage-free card may be used to request an application form, to ask questions, and/or to request more brochures like this one to give to friends. Applications should be submitted as soon as possible; the Encampment Admissions Committee starts making acceptances February 1, and applications received after May 1 are less likely to be accepted.

QUESTIONS I HAVE ABOUT THE ENCAMPMENT:

White Plains Encampment World Affairs workshop members from Guam, Israel, and several states question a United Nations diplomat on a fieldtrip visit to the UN. World Affairs workshop members have opportunities to do some volunteer work for UN-related agencies, and to secure foreign diplomatic mission speakers and films for the White Plains Encampment.

It is expected that again in '71 the Tutoring workshop and the Black Heritage workshop will devote their community activities days to volunteer staffing of an integrated, innovative children's day camp program at the nearby Community Church of White Plains. The World Affairs workshop normally devotes its community activities days to visiting (and doing volunteer work for) UN-related voluntary organizations in New York City. The two remaining workshops listed above will study and work on problems they select, probably in the White Plains area. Campers select their workshops on the opening day of the Encampment, and join with their workshop leader in choosing topics to be given priority within the workshop.

Further program details, and biographical data on the Encampment Director and staff members, will be published in May for distribution to applicants for the White Plains Encampment. In the meanwhile a daily log, "What Happened at the White Plains Encampment, 1970" is available upon request, from the Encampment office.

Members of the Population & Environment workshop put finishing touches on their 1970 project at the Union Day Care Center in White Plains. The workshop turned a junk-strewn lot into a playground for low-income families' children, and also distributed literature explaining what everyone can do to combat pollution.

Gentlemen,

I've just finished reading Mr. Coles' book "Still Hungry in America". I want to help! But what I'd like to do is help on a one-to-one relation. Is there any I can contribute to one specific family, with food, clothes, etc.?
This would be so much more satisfying than sending money to an organization.
Is this possible.

FORM 44

NOTICE TO RECIPIENTS OF FUNDS FROM THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Section 4945(h) of the Internal Revenue Code (as added by the Tax Reform Act of 1969) requires us to exercise "expenditure responsibility" with respect to any grants made by our organization. Accordingly, we must make it clear to you that our grant is conditioned on the understanding that funds will be used solely for the purposes specified in your application; that no expenditure will be made on attempts to influence legislation; that you will, at our request, furnish us with full and complete reports on how the funds are spent; and that you will give our representative access to your books and records for this purpose as we may reasonably request from time to time.

Within a reasonable time after the time of the agreed upon date, ending the grant period, we will expect a full record of the expenditure of the grant.

Calvin Bromley
Asst-Sectry Kennedy
Issued July 9, 1970

The Internal Revenue today issued the following statment in response to inquiries concerning news reports that it is checking readers of certain books:

Checking by IRS Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms investigation with Libraries regarding readers of certain books have been conducted in three localities in the U.S. according to information obtained from IRS Field Office. This investigative technique was undertaken at the initiative of the local IRS office involved, and was not prompted by any specific instructions from the IRS office in Washington.

Field Reports indicate that the 3 localities in which libraries were contacted were in the Milwaukee, Atlanta, and San Francisco areas. Reports also indicate that the library inquiries were made in the course of investigating specific suspects in bombing involving violations of federal criminal law administered by the IRS. No effort was being made in any community, or in any group of communities to develop lists of persons reading books dealing with explosions.

The library inquiry technique used in investigating such violations is neither unique or novel, and variations of it have been used by police and other law inforced organizations in the past.

cf to ALA files

The IRS fully appreciate the individuals right of privacy, and does not look to the library as a significant source of information. However, the public interest must also be considered here, and in any particular criminal investigation this source of information may be critical.

The IRS National Headquarters has not previously given specific attention to the full implication of the investigation technique, and invites an exploration of these implications with the American Library Association, and other concerned organizations. In the interim, IRS headquarters is gathering details where the instances reported included identification of the particular books that were involved by the field offices.

It goes beyond ALA in terms of public interest
